A berthless night certainly proved advantageous for these students on the McGill train. Who could possibly wish for more than a friend's back for a tired arm rest or a companion's thighs for a comfortable pillow?

SNATCHES — from st. stephen's

By GEORGE H. BUMBLE

Stephanotis, Ont, — Oct. 31 — SAUCEB—In a surprise move at the annual NSPCS (National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Students) Conference, held this year on the campus of St. Stephen's College, a motion was passed to secede from the Universities.

"After the colleges refused to support our plan to bring an exchange student from Sumatra in 1972 to Canada, which would only have involved a yearly ten dollar fee increase," sniffed one member, "we could certainly take the hint. We are through with Universities. We intend to devote ourselves in the future to caring for homeless rattlesnakes."

Meanwhile, on the campus of dear old St. Stephen's, another year has rolled around, and brought with it many changes. In order to satisfy complaints a lack of spirits on the campus, Dean Checkgrabber announced yesterday that a small bar will be installed in the college bookstore.

"The situation is ideal," beamed the Dean. "The only alterations necessary will be to remove a few of those dusty old textbooks from the shelves to make room for the bottles." The proceeds from this popular innovation will go to endow scholarships for the children of deserving drunkards.

We of the staff of the "Varsity" are glad to welcome to our alma mater Mr. Ebenezer Ogundimo, University Exchange President, who has come to us from Apartheid College, North-South Africa. Interviewed over the telephone, our new president commented: "Bongo, bongo, bongo, I don't wanta leave the . . . ". We believe that the telephone connection with his ivory tower must have been poor.

St. Stephen's Trial Society, popularly known as SST received a telegram recently from our absent president, Dr. J. Pierpont Sharper, B.A., M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., B.D., MRS., X.Y.Z., U.S.S.R., saying that he was being eaten alive. SST passed a motion of appreciation to the president for thinking of us in his fascinating new position, and decided to sponsor a tag-day, the proceeds to buy mosquito-lotion for Dr. Sharper.

SST strongly condemned the theft of the new Chemistry building. "Fun is fun, and all that," said B. A. Spoilsport, president of the society, "but some joker is carrying things too far. That building cost money!" He also commented that whoever burnt down that Arts Building last Thursday night should have been more careful, because some very rare Pogo comics had been destroyed in the fire.

A topic of great controversy has been the question of the drug scholarships recently presented to the college by the newly-formed Canadian Dope Foundation (Just take a pinch, It's a cinch). The strongest stand of all those interviewed was made by Dr. Pius Hipocrytus of the Ethics Department, who said: "I really cannot give any opinion. I would hate to hurt anyone's feelings!"

Victorian Lecturers Offer Jobfinding Aid

Quo Vadis?

For those of us who know our Latin, "Quo Vadis" could be translated "Where are you going?" In these days it is a good question for students to ask themselves. Think a minute. . .Where are YOU going? Why are YOU studying? What type of job do you want and for what type of work are YOU best suited?

The Victoria College Alumni Association and the 54T Executive in 1953" are trying to help undergraduates answer these questions.

Each year, these lectures provide an opportunity for undergraduates to hear eminent people lecture on various vocations, a chance to have an informal discussion with someone who is an authority in his field and a chance for a successful and happy career after graduation instead of grief and heartache.

Already this year, J. K. Bradford of the University of Toronto Placement Service, has spoken on the topic, "How to Get a Job." On Tuesday, Nov. 3, George Collins-Williams of McMaster, Montgomery and Co. will explain the pros and cons of Law and on Thursday, Social Work will be discussed as a vocation after graduation. Topics of Teaching, Sales and Merchandising and Personnel Work are on the agenda for mid-November. The Varsity will announce these dates.

The lectures are held in Room 14 at Victoria College, at 4 p.m., on Tuesdays and Thursdays and are open to all undergraduates.

Twelve Americans Visit Attraction - Presentation In Hart House Theatre

Twelve students of Wayne University will be coming to the Toronto campus expressly to see the Saturday, Nov. 14 performance of "Where on Earth" at Hart House announced Ron Gould, UC Social Director who is in charge of the show. The UC presentation is adapted from the highly successful Wayne show of last year, "Away We Go".

Those coming are cast and crew of "Away We Go", which was adapted for the Wayne campus by Harry Nivens, one of the visiting group, from an original play written by Crit Davis and Frank Ofenako.

"We doubt if the people from Wayne will recognize it," said Gould. He pointed out that it has been re-adapted and that the show has all new music and lyrics, written by Gerry Reading, of last year's AVR. Gerry has written no less than 25 songs in the short period of one month said Gould.

Calling to attention the fact that the show was the most [illegible] ever presented at Wayne, he said "We believe it will be as great a success here as it was at Wayne."

Gould obtained the script while on a trip to Detroit when he met Harry Nivens. "They offered us the whole show," said Gould, "including choreography and music, for nothing." Gerry said he would write all new music and lyrics for the show, which meant new choreography.

Ticket-selling expeditions from UC will visit various spots around campus from to-day until Friday during lunch hour. At noon to-day they will visit SPS, tomorrow they will visit Vic and on Friday tickets will be sold at the Meds Building. Gould described the new policy as "the tickets going to the students instead of the students going to the tickets."

Seats may be obtained in the UC Rotunda at 10.00 a.m. and between the hours of 12.00 noon and 2.00 p.m. They will also go on sale at the Hart House Box office, beginning Thursday.

"Why Live" Talk Topic In Christian Discussion At Sunday Night Meet

"Why Live" was the topic for Rev Cal Chambers in a talk to the Varsity Christian Fellowship in Knox College Chapel Sunday night.

To those of other (non-Christian) religions, Chambers said, the meaning of life can be found in a denial of life, a withdrawal from it, or a fatalism to it. However, the Christian will respond with Paul, he claimed, "For me, to live is Christ," since, he said, Christ proves to him that God not only judges man but redeems him, and imparts Himself to him. Moreover, he added, Christ offers the assurance that we can entrust God with whatever is beyond us.

This new life in Jesus Christ is offered to every one but only on God's terms, said Chambers.

One must treat God and Christ seriously, he said, recognizing the things of this world to be passing, and the things of the spirit to be of enduring value, he claimed. One must not let the non-spiritual self within create our gods, he added. One must stop leading an artificial life and trying to bypass God's offer of a spiritual life through Christ, said Chambers.

One must accept Christ for his salvation, coming to God with the repentance of his sins, and accepting the fact that Christ has borne his penalty, he said. Christ died not as a martyr but as a sin-bearer for us who believe on Him, said Chambers. Thus, he added, it is God who is able to break the barrier separating Himself from sinful man by manifesting his love through Christ.

Finally, like Paul, one must be ready to spend his whole life in the name of Jesus Christ, Chambers added. One can live life to the full only by abandoning oneself completely to Christ's service as an expression of our love for Him, he said.

Trade Commissioner Talks On Asians For Commerce

Mr. D. S. Armstrong, Canadian Trade Commissioner to Singapore, will speak on "Conditions in South-East Asia" at a Commerce Club Luncheon this Thursday. Armstrong, a graduate of Commerce, 4T2, is in Toronto to give a series of talks on conditions in Malaya and other South-East Asian countries, under the auspices of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and other organizations.

The Commerce Club luncheon will be held on Thursday at 1:00 p.m. at the Diana Sweets on Bloor Street. All members of the Commerce Club may attend.

Four (umm . . .) Wheels

By LEWIS ROSENBERG

On a recent trip from Montreal, the following question was posed to several hundred semi-sober, bleary-eyed students returning on the train to Toronto.

"Do you think the football game is a necessary part of the football week-end?" These answers typify the reactions of the many students drunk (with victory).

"Yes it gives the team something to do."
Sylvia Fine II P and OT

"Yes—it keeps 26 men sober for two hours."
Ted Stevenson IGeneral

"Neigh"—The government should subsidize football week-ends."
Augustus, School of Law Horse.

"Burp."
Don Rosenthal II Pre-Meds

"Only at Halftime."
Jumbo Branigan III Latin and English

"Yes—We have to have an excuse for the week-end, thereby giving the CNR an honest reason for depreciating their cars."
Joan Pierdon II SPS
Ted Jones I Grad. Studies

"Yes—Fills in time between parties."
Bev. Lawson I P and OT

"Not half as necessary as the women."
John Chalmers III Denis

"Where else can you do what mother told you not to do without being caught?"
The voyagers of IV Civil Engineering

"Definitely—the game is a market place which brings all the stock into one place and enables us to snaffle the good and return to the hotel and . . . . "Amen".
Dale Anderson IV SPS

"What Game?"
The Cat

"No—Football games are threatening the economic stability of our country due to the money being made by depraved, decadent, capitalists who are charging exhorbitant prices for this ostentatious display."
Joel Wayne—Labour Prog. Party

"Due to the recent trip to Montreal. I think that all the fishermen should take their fish with them."
The Sucker

"Yes—and hope we beat McMaster again by the same score next year."
P. Gozowski II Poli Science and Economics

"Certainly, otherwise we would have no week-end and would then be unable to determine how many people can sleep in one hotel room."
John Noble I Grad Studies

"Cartwheels! !"
IV Architecture B.W.

"Definitely—It gives the fans a chance to leave the taverns and hotel rooms and breathe some fresh air.
John Noble I Grad Studies

"Of course—or B. Masterson would have to go and work for a living."
Anonymous member of McGill football squad

"Yes—it gives you more room to throw beer cans."
John Whalen

"NO—NO—A waste of valuable drinking time."
Barbara Williams Soc. and Phil

"I feel that I am not qualified to answer this question as I have attended no football games."

Inter-Varsity Visitors Soon

Ten students each will come from Cornell, Skidmore and McGill to an Inter-University Conference to be held at the University of Toronto, from Friday, Nov. 20 to Sunday, Nov. 22.

This conference sponsored by the External Affairs Commission week-end Committee will include guest speakers and seminar groups. This week-end will be rounded out by several parties and a banquet in Hart House.

This is the first conference of its type to be sponsored by the EAC in the last several years, said EAC Week-end Chairman, Stanley Schiff.

Application forms are available in the Students' Administrative Council Office and must be completed by Nov. 10, said Schiff.

HH Admitting Coeds To Swinton Showing

Both Hart House members and women are permitted to view the current exhibition of paintings in the Hart House Art Gallery every Wednesday afternoon.

From 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. tomorrow, the Vienna-born artist's work, George Swinton, will be open to view by both males and female.

Mr. Swinton, now a naturalized Canadian, is a graduate of McGill University and the Montreal School of Art and Design. Already this year he has had three college exhibitions at Smith College, Bennett Jr. College and Amherst College (one-man shows) besides many exhibitions including the Library of Congress and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Mr. Swinton spent five years in the Canadian Intelligence Corps during World War II in England and the Far East.

He has at one time been curator of the Saskatoon Art Centre, Smith College, Queen's University, Saskatoon T.C.I. Evening Classes, Mass. University Extension Courses, and Hillyer College of Hartford, Conn.

Hart House members may view the exhibition any day of the week, but women are permitted Wednesday afternoon visits only.

Chorus Lines Demonstrate Dentantics

Students and chorus lines from the Faculty of Dentistry will demonstrate on the front campus today at noon. "We want the students to have a good preview of what the show will be like this year," said Publicity Director Ted Sparrow.

Speaking about the show, Sparrow said that everything but the first scene and the last scene had been cut and that it was now classed as "obscene".

Today's demonstration will feature a convertible full of chorus line girls, each one available to sell tickets for Dentantics on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week, said Sparrow.

Korean Student

Po Hi Pak

Young people have the opportunity of everyday contact with the opposite sex at all ages in Canada, but in the Orient this is not the case. Po Hi Pak, a Varsity student from Korea, claims this causes difficulties when a marriageable age is approached and believes co-education is helpful in this respect.

Po Hi Pak arrived in Canada a month ago to study social work and religion at the University of Toronto on a scholarship given by the United Church of Canada. After flying from Pusan to Edmonton, she took the train to Toronto.

At first Po Hi was confused by the many students on the campus and couldn't find her way to classes. Varsity impressed her as being "so large and so old." At the Women's University in Seoul where she obtained her degree, Po Hi was one of 2,000 students registered. Unlike Varsity, this university is not divided into colleges. Each department is housed in a separate building.

Po Hi graduated from a four-year arts course specializing in social work. Courses in Pharmacy, Law and Medicine were offered to the women students there as well as the various arts courses. One of her classmates, Yong Sook Kim, is in her final year of study at the University of Toronto on a similar scholarship for social work.

PO. H. PAK

"In spite of all my efforts I'm having grammar trouble with my essays," said Po Hi. This has been her greatest problem so far. At the university she attended in Seoul, all students take compulsory classes in English reading, grammar and conversation several hours weekly.

However, it was not until she started working for the United Nations in Korea that Po Hi found a chance to really practice her English.

"War brought material, cultural and even spiritual destruction to us all," said Po Hi. Korea has been affected by the war in many ways. "Aside from the country's economy being completely destroyed," she added, "there is a general feeling of unrest."

When she left Korea, it was difficult to find a whole building from Seoul to Taegu — just a field of rubble. Government reconstruction has not yet begun although plans have been made. Individuals have started to rebuild gradually.

"People cannot look forward to tomorrow; there is just today" she said. Po Hi also made mention of the appalling number of widows and orphans who lost their families in the war. With a friend she gathered together a group of young orphan boys and started an orphanage. It was only after given assurance of the continued care of the boys that Po Hi accepted the scholarship which enabled her to come to Canada to study.

After she completes her special two-year course in social welfare and religion, Po Hi will return to Korea to work for the betterment of the people of her country. Even before the war it was her intention to work for the improvement of Korean society.

When she returns to her homeland in two years, Po Hi will begin her self-imposed task — "to help my country and people to reach a higher standard of culture and living as in other countries like Canada."

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Sports fans are a great bunch of people to compare and argue — they wonder about the relative merits of various players, they speculate as to how this team would stack up against that one. And one of the things that crops up most frequently in these hot-stove leagues or Morris chair circuits is the question: "What's the toughest sport?"

The exponents of football, hockey, boxing, cross-country running and many other gruelling forms of competition have pretty sound arguments to put forth but they're obviously people who have never seen the most rugged of them all — lacrosse on a basketball court

The chances are that Hart House is the only place where you can see this fantastic sight. A parallel might be hockey played in a boxing ring (might not be a bad idea at that). After all, lacrosse originally was played on a field, a large field. This is the condensed version, that they play in the Hart House box, which is a small basketball floor to begin and is walled in instead of being in the centre of a large gymnasium.

Lacrosse is a rugged sport at the best of times. As a matter of fact, there are those who claim that it was the frequency of blood-letting that transformed it from a leading spectator sport in the thirties to a minor one today. The interfaculty gladiators who perform at Hart House every noon hour operate without the benefit of any padding except helmets, face masks and soft elbow pads. That's so the boys won't get anything worse than broken legs and arms. Actually, the intramural sports officials feel that this lack of padding makes for cleaner play; with full protection, they'd really flail away.

Lacrosse at the interfaculty level started in 1931 when Dr. W. A. Dafoe, himself a great man with the gutted stick, donated a trophy. But before that Varsity had always had an intercollegiate field lacrosse team that made annual tours through the Eastern United States, playing such teams as Annapolis and West Point.

The changeover in 1931 coincided with the general shift from field lacrosse to box, or indoor lacrosse. Instead of moving into the arena, the Varsity lacrosse bugs took over the basketball court.

The Dafoe trophy has been well spread around among the various faculties. But when one college wins the title, it never leaves it at that — the win is generally repeated. Senior Skule won it four times between 1940 and 1945. Then, Physical Education, led by Jack Foote, who went on to star for Owen Sound dominion championship teams, topped the field in 1945 and 1946. The following season, 1947, was the year Medicine took over. Paced by prodigious scorers like the fabulous Axe Haliburton and Al Varga, the Medsmen held the championship until last fall when University College finally broke the spell.

No intramural sport attracts more enthusiasm among spectators and players than lacrosse. Every noon hour sees a large turnout of sandwich-munching students looking on in the gym and, when play-off time rolls around — in mid-December — they hang from the rafters.

There are plenty of reasons, of course, but not the least is the fact that lacrosse is the one intramural sport where there's no restriction on participants' outside activities. Many senior-calibre players have starred in the interfaculty loop. Notable in recent years have been Dutch Young, the sparkplug of the U.C. team, a perennial challenger to Meds' perennial champions, and last year, Skule's Johnny Dewar, a high-scorer on this summer's O.L.A. finalists, St. Catharines Athletics. This year, Meds have Jack Gear of the Fergus Thistles, another senior squad.

Last-Minute Touchdown Throw Gives Redmen Win Over Meds

By MANI THALER

The score was 5-1 in favour of the Medsmen. There was one minute left to play. It looked all over. Then the U.C. squad's star skipper Jerry Hugo heaved a cross-country pass that travelled twenty yards in the air and ended up in the happy arms of Bob Madden. One step, and Bob was over the line. Touchdown. Hugo converted, and almost immediately the whistle ended the game. U.C. had won 7-5.

From the opening signal, the Redmen started pressing, and, led by the brilliant play of Hugo, marched to the doctors' 5-yard line. A UC fumble and offside saved the Medsmen. Just before the quarter was called the UC kicker, Wainsborough attempted a field goal which went wide and Meds were on the march.

During the first half two players were hurt: UC's Adams, who went out with a bad knee, and the star of the skull-and-bones, Pink McNeil, who was injured in the head. McNeil, who is a triple-threat for the Medsmen, has already suffered a head injury this year in a game with SPS. When he went out the Meds' passing suffered badly.

In the next frame, the Meds line seemd to come to life and a march towards the UC goalposts began. Mike Hutchison went for a 9-yard gain but failed to make a first down. Little, who hoofed an excellent game for the black and red, kicked the ball and the game further down into Red territory.

The UC team took better advantage of their opportunities, though. A 20-yard pass received by Madden and one of quarterback Hugo's sneaks, which went for another 20, another pass to Barry Mitchell and, as half time was called, the Tigers were threatening.

Then came the play that dumbfounded both teams into inaction, and almost broke the Tigers' backs. When quarterback Hugo was rushed by the speedy Meds line, he lateralled out blindly, and the ball suddenly found its way to Meds Paul Butt. As both teams joined the spectators in staring, the right end tripped lightly to the line and over. Though Fine missed the convert, this major seemed to insure Meds of a win, as it was not until late in the third quarter that UC hit the score sheet with a single by Wainsborough. And so it was, 5-1 for the sawbones until that last sixty seconds. Then one pass won the game for UC.

Though the Meds line held and charged well (it is probably best in the league) their defence lacked depth, and their plays were a bit on the haphazard side. Time and again, hoofer Little saved them from major trouble.

The strength of UC lay in their rugged defence, and tackling. And, of course, they had Hugo.

Win No. 4 For Tigers In Lacrosse

University College Firsts swept to their fourth consecutive victory in Group One of the intramural lacrosse league yesterday by trouncing S.P.S. I 10-4. Nobber Watson scored six goals for the Tigers, with Al Eagleson adding three and Blyth Brown one. Dowsley got one for Skule with Byrnes and Rosebrugh sniping singletons.

In soccer, Quilty scored a goal in the second half to give St. Michael's a 2-1 win over Senior Meds. McCullough had scored for the Medsmen in the first half with Godin matching that for the Irish.

Dentistry piled up a 5-0 soccer win over Trinity B's with Ed Fast firing three goals and Tecishy and Blackstone one each.

Three volleyball matches were carded. Junior S.P.S. A beat Senior Vic 15-3, 5-15 and 15-9. S.P.S. Fifths took two straight over Pre-Meds 1A 15-6 and 16-14 and Vic Thirds flattened U.C. 5 Willcocks 15-4, 15-2.

Vic and Irish Grid Squads Are On Top

With the Intramural Football schedule at the half-way mark the Mulock Cup battle seems to be narrowed down to the "Combines" from S.P.S. and Vic's Scarlet and Gold, with St. Mike's presently leading the second division providing an outside threat.

S.P.S. are at present the first division with three triumphs while VVic holds down the second spot with one defeat that being at the hands of the league-leading Combines. UC is in third spot with two wins against two losses to their credit. The luckless Medsmen occupy the cellar position, with four straight losses.

In the second division, the Double Blue of St. Mike's hold down the top place with three wins followed by Trinity with two wins and one loss. The remaining two teams, Dents and Forestry, are in a tough spot as they occupy the bottom spot together with one tie and two losses.

Harrier Has Changed

By MOISHE REITER

Long long ago, in the golden age of Varsity Harrier, Mac McCutcheon could lean out of his Intramural office window and watch a line of busses leave the campus and head out to the High Park harrier course, bearing loads of aspiring human gazelles to the Interfaculty cross-country meet. Those were loaded busses as the like of Emmanuel, Wycliffe and Trinity each needed a bus to carry their competitors.

The course, which McCutcheon describes as "one of the best and most interesting in the country" is five miles plus several hundred feet long. The best time ever set for the distance was done in Senior Interfaculty Harrier in 1950. The record-maker was George Doull of Forestry, remembered by Miss Boyd of the Intramural Office as "a joy to watch". He ran the distance in 27 minutes, 26 seconds, six seconds better than the intercollegiate record.

OAC Aggies were once outstanding power in the Harrier. Those were the days when the Aggies participated in the Intramural programme. From 1921 right through to '31 the Farmers were top men in the Harrier, winning ten Brotherton Cups in a row.

The sturdy men of Skule, not ones to take second place to anyone, asserted themselves in 1938 by running to first place in the competitions. The Engineers kept coming home first through the next six harrier runs but they were finally stopped in 1946.

The first starter's gun sounded for senior harrier in 1915 and in that race it was the double blue of St. Michael's College that sat on the winners dais. So great was campus interest in harrier then that most faculties needed at least one bus to bring all their competitors to the meet. Lately the keenness of interest in the distance race has dulled and grown smaller, but the high value in Reed Trophy points has remained constant and is there for any ambitious College to claim.

One of the all-time greats in harrier history was also a sports editor on The Varsity. Al Forrest led the Toronto harrier team in the pre-war years and at the same time headed the sports desk of the college paper.

Another Varsity sports editor proved great in the Harrier. Mal Crawford, a speedy stepping swifty running out of UC led the field in last year's harrier running. Mal had few supporters in UC trappings so that his good showing was of no ultimate benefit to his home college except for the fact that they had champion.

This year's senior harrier will be run over the High Park course this Thursday starting at 3.30. Entries are being taken now at the Intramural office and the registration deadline is noon Thursday.

Freshies Victorious

PHE Freshies racked up their second straight women's basketball victory last night at O.C.E. gym by defeating St. Michael's "B" 35-15.

Marilyn Charters paced the P.H.E. squad with 10 points. June Rathbun and Arlene Seamon netted seven each and Sylvia Kerr scored six.

St. Mike's Mary Kirkpatrick was the game's high scorer with 11 points.

PHE Sophs Defeat Meds Play St. Mike's For Crown

After playing through a full schedule of games, the teams taking part in League Two of the women's softball competitions wound up where they started. Physical Education sophomores, Medicine and St. Mike's finished the season in a three-way tie for first place.

Play-offs began yesterday with PHE taking a 16-7 win over Meds. The Phys-Edders play St. Mike's at noon today with the league championship at stake.

PHE's vaunted batting power had failed to materialize most of this season but it was very much in evidence yesterday, producing 11 runs in the first inning. That outburst was paced by home runs from the bats of Jean Duff, June Hansford, and Inger Olsen. After that, it was strictly no contest.

Bright light for the Meds team was Sally Searles, the pitcher, who hit her daily home run in the second frame.

Today's sudden-death playoff is the last softball competition of the season.

Maybe Preview? Vic, Skule Clash

Intramural football action on the back campus this afternoon may very well be a preview of things to come, namely this years final battle for the Mulock Cup in Varsity Stadium S.P.S. "Combines" and Vic's Scarlet and Gold squad take the field for the second meeting of these two teams.

Although Skule emerged the victors in the first encounter, great changes have taken place in the Vic club since that time and S.P.S. can be quite certain that victory will require an all-out effort. The Vic team will enter the contest with all players back in action. John Bond who missed the last game with Meds will be back and Norm Williams, with a game behind him, will undoubtedly prove an even greater offensive threat. A quiet air of confidence prevails among the boys and this may well be justified.

Coach Jack McFarlane of the Skule squad, last afternoon, could be heard bemoaning the havoc reaped by the just passed, but never to be forgotten, week-end in Montreal. Their balance of power may well lie in two hard charging guards, John Shortt and Earl Ford by name. After a short signals practice last night, a confident SPS team lacked through a fast but spirited game of Borden ball and headed for the showers early.

Council Head Hits Lethargy Of Virginians

Morgantown W.Va. -(CUP)- The president of the student body at the University of West Virginia believes that the student legislature "has failed miserably and completely in discharging the responsibilities of student government."

Edwin Flowers, the president of the student body, enumerated the council's faults as "non attendance at meetings . . . negative attitude . . . lethargy . . . and rubber stamp government."

The president stated that were it not for "Alexander Graham Bell and the school paper," he would not have the slightest idea of "anything done here."

Art and Artsmen

For A Purpose

Reprinted from the Ubyssey, students' newspaper at the University of British Columbia.

The faculty of arts is suffering from a chronic inferiority complex. Artsmen don't even appear to know that the classic reply to the traditional criticism "Arts bake no bread" is "man cannot live by bread alone." Or that there is an old Chinese proverb to the effect that if you have a loaf of bread sell half of it and buy flowers.

A MAJOR FLAW in our culture is that we tend to judge everything by the financial returns and lose sight of intrinsic values. The jibe that an artsman can always get a job in a pyjama factory if he knows how to pull strings, is taken too seriously.

One of the functions of a university appears to be the preparation of students to earn a living. The faculty of arts is not neglecting that function—preparing students for teaching, law, medicine, theology, journalism, and other professions which may or may not require further education. A "general education," that is, an arts degree, is valued and respected in many fields of business.

BUT THERE IS ANOTHER important purpose, sometimes called learning how to think, and sometimes called civilizing. Perhaps a better way of phrasing it is developing a sense of values. If an artsman does anything more than recopy half-remembered lecture notes in an examination book, he should learn to question dogmas and implicit assumptions wherever they are found.

He should learn to develop his own ideas based on rationality and tolerance rather than prejudice. He should refuse to accept conventional standards of values for the sake of conforming, but should consider all standards by their worth and strive for improvement.

THIS IS DIFFICULT when the standards set by the faculty appear to approve rote learning rather than cultural development. Nevertheless, there is a good opportunity for this type of advancement in the faculty of arts. If a student studies his courses with a clear conception of what values he hopes to obtain from them, he can develop a critical approach and develop a satisfactory sense of values.

Adolescent Effigy Burning

The Varsity:
The Varsity,

Is it not about time some of our university politically-minded adolescents wake up? For people of supposed high learning and intelligence, their actions smack of complete irresponsibility.

Last year, when a communist organization brought the Dean of Cantenbury in to speak at Massey Hall, students from the U of T attempted to break up the meeting. Police had to be present to keep the peace. As a British subject, and being sponsored by a Canadian organization under a democratic system, this man had a perfect right to speak as he pleased and what he pleased unmolested.

Now we are burning effigies of Senator McCarthy and holding mass meetings on our campus. This could eventually lead witch-hunting that this group is attempting to combat. The communists and fascists of Hitler's hey-day used this type of meeting to lead the mobs to mass action and violence.

Certainly the great majority of the university sympathizes with the aims of this Vicotria group. However, I believe this latent energy could well be expended in organizations such as the Civil Liberties Club, UN, which try to combat McCarthyism in a more democratic fashion and ultimately in a more effective one.

The Heat

The Editor,
The Varsity,

I would be most grateful if your paper would conduct an enquiry into tht causes of those buildings on the central heating system of the University being afflicted either with an abundance of heat or a great lack of the same. The former, sir, oppresses and beclouds our thought processes, and the latter benumbs our sensibilities. Now I might be accused, especially by those who read my statement in an issue of last week, of desiring a return to the austerity of monasticism; this is not so. But I would point out to you that the mediaeval world knew its own mind and, in its coolness, found heat in argument. We, sir, do not know our minds and shall not, perhaps, until the extreme temperatures which afflict us in our halls and studies and private rooms, be reduced to a more sensible norm. Then we may find the cool courage to be characters, and, in Academic Discourse and the Greater Passions find flames to feed the warmth of our existence. Then shall the mountains skip for joy and Sidney Smith, even our President, shall rejoice in his bed.

False Finger Of Suspicion

The Editor,
The Varsity,

Once more, we of ever-triumphant Medicine are forced to admit our deep shock and surprise to perceive this latest attempt of our close neighbours to the West, to point the finger of suspicion against us, by hoisting what has so loosely been termed the "Daffydil" on the University flagpole the other morning.

However, any red-blooded bleeding creature between the ages of puberty and senility knows only too well the world acclaim and renown that Daffydil Nite already enjoys — and knows that such low-calibre publicity is beneath us.

Consequently, we of Daffydil must loudly deny any participation or knowledge of this incident; and may we respectfully suggest that the $50 steeplejack bill be forwarded to a nearby building.

Still Ask Aid For Strikers In N. Ontario

The request for a tag day to assist the striking gold miners is not a dead issue. The Student Committee for Aid to Mining Communities is now appealing to the Students Administrative Council—Caput Liaison Committee for permission to hold a tag day.

The committee feels that there was a misunderstanding regarding the nature of their recent appeal to the SAC. The committee in a letter to the SAC—Caput Liaison Committee said they had no intention of involving the SAC or the University on our proposed tag day appeal. The University is not being asked to sponsor or endorse the fund raising programme. The Committee feel that this problem of endorsement or rejection should be left to the individual student. "We only ask the opportunity to let each student make this choice, —an opportunity which a tag day would certainly provide.

Sickening And Juvenile

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Some of the practices and attitudes on this campus have a sickening effect on me. I'd like to point out some of these juvenile feats of which I think their originators should be utterly ashamed.

There is the matter of stealing plaques, famous chairs and ladies' apparel. Some people call this fun. To my mind it is, because it involves the loss of property to others—theft. And those who did it are uncivilised, childish, juvenile brats who should be thrown into jail for common robbery and disturbance of the peace. If these individuals had had the common decency to make restitution to their victims, it might be a different matter. But they, in their selfishness and stupidity, never even thought of that. The ladies and Colleges concerned have my sympathy for having suffered at the hands of these vandals. I belive in fun myself, but some people have a perverted sense of fun and the law should handle such cases.

Furthermore, it makes me sick to read some articles coming from a certain corner of this campus of which I am sure its inhabitants do not live in "abject poverty and squalor". They call others who have the decency to take up the cause of the people of Guiana, "starry-eyed Socialists".

From Catholic quarters, come frequent attacks on the terrible tyranny of Communism. These attacks also make me mad, not because of their object, but because of their source. For which tyrant has the right to rave about another tyrant in the name of freedom, as these people do? The Roman Catholics are the last to have the right to talk in the name of freedom, since to this very day liberty is just as dead in their domains as in those of the Reds. People are persecuted and killed in both camps for political and religious reasons. One orgamization is just as wicked and totalitarian as the other. As a matter of fact it would be extremely difficult to make up one's mind under whose rule one would rather live if there were no other choice.

The RC leaders proclaim that every man has not the right to exercise the religion of his choice, and ought not be allowed to do so. This theory often becomes practice in RC countries. We must stand on guard against the RC Church as well as against the Reds!

Space does not permit me to prove my statements, but if anyone should be rash and careless enough to contradict them, I shall collect evidence enough to crush any denial of my statements.

The Horse's Mouth

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Mr. James Daly's letter in last Wednesday's issue of The Varsity suggests that, since it is difficult to specify the time when a country has arrived at a stage of political maturity, and since the British Guianese proved their political immaturity by electing a government dedicated to Marxist Socialist ideas, the Guianese are not fit to govern themselves — the English are better fitted to do so because of their greater political experience. This interesting point of view shows the position which can be arrived at when a complex social and economic problem like colonialism is superficially studied.

British Guiana is one of the few colonial areas where the conflict of imperialism is not fought against a background of diametrically-opposed cultural values (cf. the situation which obtained in India). In British Guiana, the cultural and ideological values are fundamentally British. Consequently, the Guianese problem must be seen not as a clash of contending civilizations but as the outcome of class struggle in which are involved metropolitan and colonial interests. The groups representing these interests are both, in turn, internally divided..

One principle of Marxist Socialism is that the class struggle is the causal factor in social development. The constitutionally-elected government of the Colony supported this idea. Justification for India's independence from Britain was found not only in economic circumstances but also in the spiritual values of Indian culture which had priority over alien British values on the allegiance of that nation. Since, however, the ideological values of British Guiana are fundamentally British, the government leaders could find justification for their struggle for Guianese independence only in economic circumstances and in the social struggle that it produces.

In some circles, it was felt that the new constitution was only nominal and that reserving certain emergency powers to Britain was a bit of diplomacy that changed only the form of colonial relationships and not the substance of economic relationships. The late government agitated for fundamental changes in the economic relationship which, as Marxist socialists, they would believe to be their proper approach.

While one questions the wisdom of the speed with which this elected government hoped to bring about this change, the wisdom of Britain's handling of the situation is likewise open to serious question. This use of the military and state powers follows precisely the pattern that Marxist Socialist theory claims it would. In other words, Britain has to be careful lest by her actions she does not defeat her the complicated possibilities of port to the Marxist theories which the PPP advocate. We Guianese await the outcome with interest.

I hope this letter emphasises Guianese, and refers to the counthe situation. Of course, there is the other side of the picture — the reactionary view of colonial policy which Mr. Daly supports. One cannot help believing that his conclusions are based on a superficial analysis. For when he speaks of "semi-civilized" Guianes, and refers to the country as "a strip of jungle inhabited by aborgines with no tradition of civilized autonomy," I prefer to think that Mr. Daly was carried away by literary enthusiasm rather than accept these statements as an indication of his knowledge of British Guiana and its circumstance.

Shackles Of Fear

". . . We demonstrate, not against the man, but against the focus point, the bogey man of McCarthyism, witch hunt, and fear tactics."

Such was the spontaneous point of contention of certain Victoria College students in a midnight demonstration on Hallowe'en. What better time could have been chosen for reaction against the most sinister movement of recent times?

Resistance to McCarthyism will not be subdued. In the past two weeks only a few incidents were needed to reveal the far-reaching effects of senseless supression of free thought in our neighbour universities to the south. At Toronto in one residence alone, forty active supporters, defenders of University of Toronto tradition, were found to carry the load of active demonstration.

It might have been supposed that not too many students were aware of the threat of the use of fear tactics even here at Toronto. It now appears that more than a few are being pushed a little too far, and have had about as much shoved down their throat as will go. Saturday night it was Victoria College, but the student body has barely been tapped.

It seems fairly certain that general repression of thought by the student body will not occur at the University of Toronto in the near future. Indeed, we should hope not. But the worst effect, an effect which has already been felt strongly a number of times on this paper, is to have students with something constructive to say, afraid to say it, for fear of steps that could be taken against them.

Any such suppression, whether in a democratic, or communist state, is the first sign of institutional decay. Such suppression is a block to progress, a setback to society. How long must we bow to threats which can only manifest themselves in material things? While there are still those who are afraid, we are hopefully encouraged by the number of students yet able to hold principle above materialism. We further hope that they, and the University administration, will not be intimidated by any attempt to bring pressure against the reactionaries involved.

In many demonstrations on the campus this year, the finger of ridicule has been pointed, and in most cases, senseless destruction and unnecessary expense were the only results. But kidding has been thrust aside. Without damage to property, or interruption of city routine, one of the most pointed, and at the same time best-attended, demonstrations of the fall was carried out successfully. If this is the climax to regular unorthodox pranks of the fall, then, perhaps, the student body is entitled to its pranks.

The Varsity regrets that the organization of the demonstration did not include all faculties on the campus. It would have been interesting to find out how many active participants there would have been. More exactly, it would have been an indication of the extent to which Toronto students are willing to throw off the shackles of being afraid. It is about time more of us realized that it is better to be a free state, and restrict relations with the south, than to be a satellite to a totalitarian nation

It's Subversive

This is a mjor crisis, dear readers, a major crisis. To think, a subversive agency has been operating right under our very noses and we gullible sheep have been sitting here watching it.

I hated to tell you this, dear reader, but I really thought you ought to know. I even put off telling you about it. Then yesterday I said to myself, "Cat, this could be serious. If you don't tell the people now, you may be an accessory after the corpus dilecti."

So today, dear reader, I'm unloading the facts so you can take action. We must get out of NFCUS as fast as we can. My good friend, Senator McCarryall has just told me the sad truth about it. It's red.

There, I've said it and I'm glad. It's up to you now. Appropriate action must be taken. In other words, we have to get out of NFCUS. No more dilly-dallying about fees and things like that. Some of the other universities have wised up and threatened to secede if the policy of NFCUS doesn't suit them. A wise policy, dear readers, a wise policy.

Subversive organizations just won't do on this or any other campus, dear readers, because for one thing, they can't go to the States when they want. That could be disastrous.

Furthermore, we can't afford to dirty our lily-white hands on subversive organizations such as NFCUS, can we. No, I say no, emphatically no!!!

I call on all students to unite in protest against this blight on our very existence. All the talk going on about subversive agencies in our university must be true. A good friend of mine, who is a senator told me so.

If you wish to protest to this organization by mail, please address all correspondence to NFCUS, that's the Newly Formed Committee to Undermine Students.

I will also accept signed and notarized petitions. Just address them to "Cat."

You're Twisting My Arm?

Two burly Skulemen caught in the act of abducting this unwilling dental nurse into the Engineers Stores yesterday at noon. You will, of course, notice the very effective resistance that the young thing is putting up. She was part of the mass abduction that the Engineers promoted to assist the publicity for the Dentists' annual show, "Dentantics". The question is, why did Dentistry choose the front of the Little Red School House to stage their publicity stunt?

Skule Abducts Chorines Impromptu Acts Forced

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

The Skule abduction artists are at it again. Yesterday at 1:50 p.m. several Skulemen captured a covey of Dental Nurses who were putting on a preview of "Dentantics" in front of the "Little Red Skule House", of all places.

The preview of Dentantics consisted of a chorus line, ticket sellers, and an 18 cylinder, 1953 Lincoln. To start off the afternoon's proceedings, four husky engineers grabbed one of the chorus line dancers. Immediately the idea caught fire and soon all the girls were in the Engineer's Stores, plus Tats Hori, III Dents, publicity director of the Dental Society and his assistant, Ron Martin, II Dents. The official Sax player of the Dental College, Harold Fliechman, was also abducted and taken into the Engineer's Stores.

For the benefit of the engineers, a kick line was performed, immediately after which two of the girls decided that they had better go to lectures and quietly made their exit. One girl was taken into a laboratory, but as the professor objected she was allowed to return to her classes.

It was also reported that one girl was such a master of ju-jitsu that it took five Skulemen to get her finally into the Engineer's Stores.

Opinion varied considerably among the girls, one said, "What are they trying to pull off anyway?" Another unidentified Dental Nurse summed the situation up by saying, "They didn't do anything, much to my disgust."

The 18-cylinder Lincoln left the campus decorated by numerous Skule-Night signs, attached by Joan Pierdon, II SPS.

Washington Hear About Vic Effigy

By SALLY HOGG

Ottawa, Nov. 3 —(Special)— The US Embassy here is not sending a "report" to Washington on the burning of an effigy of Senator Joseph McCarthy by Victoria College students.

It was announced by Mr. J. Tarrter, Second Secretary at the American Embassy, that the Embassy was only forwarding the telegram sent by the Vic students to Washington, and that is quite a routine matter as far as the Embassy is concerned. Similar communiques are sent to Washington in any similar case.

Tarrter said that Canadians are quite often writing in complaints to the Embassy, about the actions of various American political leaders, so this was not actually a very unusual case.

The Embassy action was a result of the activities of a group of Victoria College Resident students who, on late Saturday night burned an effigy of the Wisconsin Senator. A meeting of some of the students involved, with Principal Bennet of Vic, resulted in no disciplinary action, however the College as a whole denied any actual connection with the fracas, although the action of the students was not actually condemned.

There was a rumour circulating that the Consulate in Toronto was interested in seeing Principal Bennett personally, and it was thought that a minor international dispute was pending. However up until now very little has actually developed from the incident except

His Excellency, Dr. Lucas Mario Galigniana, Argentine Ambassador to Canada visited Hart House yesterday. In a very brief interview, Dr. Galigniana said that university education is now free under the Peron regime.

The accent is on practical education in this South American country. In contrast to the Canadian Governor-General's recent complaint that the Arts are outbalanced by the Sciences in Canadian Universities, Argentina has decided to institute a system for "working-men's universities" this year. These are entered around 16 and students graduate at about 20.

Soccer is the favorite game in the six universities in Argentina.

Dr. Galigniana taught at the University of Buenos Aires. He is a specialist in economics and has written several books on the subject as well as holding government positions in the field.

Does Sex Interest Us? Let's Not Read Kinsey

"If I were even mildly interested in sexual behaviour, reading Kinsey's latest book would completely disenchant me." This remark was made by N. B. Ryder, of the Sociology Department, during a panel discussion presented by the Psychology Club last night at Victoria College.

The moderator of the panel, Dr. H. O. Steer remarked that the common form of greeting between friends meeting on the street has taken the form of "Have you seen the Kinsey Report?" He pointed out the significant fact that the verb used was 'seen' rather than 'read.'

Kinsey appears to be more interested in sports than in statistics, stated Dr. Ryder — "Kinsey has reduced his data to a connection between batting averages and times at bat."

All three members of the panel were in agreement that Kinsey's method of research was highly inaccurate. Dr. Ryder mentioned that Kinsey continually referred to what he called a statistical sample but none of the panel members could find any justification for the use of the name sample. Actually a selected sample was used and in his latest study the subjects consisted predominately of young college-educated women in the north-east section of the United States.

"Window dressing" was the term used by Reverend John Rowe, chaplain of Hart House in reference to the bright yellow packet of Kinsey's latest book. The title "Sexual Behaviour in the Human Female," printed on it in large letters, was another aspect of the type of advertising used by the Kinsey Group to try 'selling' the book. Dr. Ryder interjected, "I am happy to announce that sales of Kinsey's second volume are not going so well."

Dr. Ryder further remarked that "although this behaviour record is a pretty sexy collection, on careful examination, it would be found that it is not much different from other studies in the same area."

"Considering the opportunities present, we are an extremely chaste society," said Dr. Ryder.

Hart House

Gems

Women have two chances today to join Hart House members in House activities.

Every Wednesday afternoon women are welcome, alone or in company with males or other women, to the Wednesday afternoon recital and to the current exhibition of paintings in the Art Gallery.

Today's Wednesday afternoon concert features Jan Simons, baritone. Simons was last heard in February 1953 at the UC Music Club concert.

He will be accompanied by Dr. George Brough, who has been heard frequently at Varsity both as an accompanist and as a soloist at Hart House.

Now at the Toronto Conservatory on scholarships, Simons studied voice in New York and Montreal. His specialty is the German art song, and his concert today will include a large group of songs of this style.

No tickets are required to this afternoon's concert, beginning at 5.10 p.m. in the Music Room.

The current show of art in the Art Gallery is open to members every day of the week and to women every Wednesday from 2.00 p.m. to 4.00 p.m. The work of George Swinton is currently showing.

The Vienna-born artist is now a naturalized Canadian. He is a graduate of Montreal's McGill University and the Montreal School of Art and Design.

Food

Reservation tickets for the Friday night dinner in Great Hall must be picked up at the Hart House Hall Porter's desk before tomorrow at 5:00 p.m.

Members of the House may bring their wife or lady-friend to the dinner at regular Great Hall prices. The meal will be served between 6.15 and 6.45 p.m.

Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden of Hart House, said yesterday that the Thursday deadline for picking up reservation tickets was needed to ensure adequate planning by the dietetian's office.

He emphasized that the tickets are free to House members upon presentation of membership cards. The meal will be paid for in the regular way at the cash registers in Great Hall on Friday evening.

If the weather is cool enough, fires will be lit in both the Great Hall and the East Common Room. Coffee will be served following the dinner in the East Common Room.

The first invitation dinner in Hart House was held last March.

Saturday's pre-football game luncheon in Great Hall is open to women, unescorted or accompanied by members of the House. Meal hours Saturday are 11.45 a.m. to 1.30 p.m. giving all eaters ample time to make the western game in Varsity Stadium at 2.00 p.m.

No tickets or reservations are required for Saturday's football luncheon.

VIC BOB REVUE

Sheep In Wolves' Clothing

"Tales of the Vienna Wolves' was a good idea for a show. Unfortunately the show wasn't as good as the idea.

Like most college shows, this year's Bob Revue was too long. Most of the scenes dragged, especially the second one in Providentia's boudoir. There were no good exit lines or curtain lines, and several of the actors were slow in picking up their cues. These things were not entirely the fault of the script which was on the whole well written.

The flimsy little wisp of a plot, (as far as we understood it), involved the pursuit of beautiful blonde Providentia (Lilian Petrie) by the four commandants of Vienna and their aides; things are further complicated by a Wandering Troubadour, (Providentia's long lost sweetheart), the wives of the commandants, and three violent anarchists. Not that the plot mattered—in this kind of show it doesn't need to be more than an excuse. All the same, we think that the present trend on the campus towards book shows is a good idea. The thread of a plot does make for some degree of interest and continuity.

Lilian Petrie distinguished herself as far as her looks and singing went, though her acting left something to be desired. Bob Perkins, the Wandering troubadour, had a very pleasant voice, and one of the best songs in the show, a Calypso.

The neatest and most effective scene in the show was the arrival of the commandants' wives at the airport. It was acted entirely in pantomime. With each wife's arrival accompanied by a characteristic national song played on the Blind Man's accordion. The excellent costuming in this scene gave it most of its appeal—the British wife dowdy but lady-like, with a mousy bun; the French one extremely chic in black; the American wife like a photograph out of Our Young Embassy Wives in Vogue; and finally the Russian wife, Mrs. Bolshitov, with her strong resemblance to a newspaper picture of a Russian woman bricklayer.

The scene in the United Nations Legation Office, highlighted by the United Nations Serenade of the commandants, was one of the funnier parts of the show. Here, as in several other places, the pantomime was well done and effective. The make-up of the American commandant was particularly good.

Each of the four aides in their big scene at the beginning seemed extremely funny at first glance, but rapidly became very tedious. The American and the Englishman had much the most definite characterisations. The three anarchists, Gloria Gillies, Hugh Hanson and Terry Shiels deserve special mention. They were excellent, and very amusing.

In its better moments the chorus resembled a sing-song. However, it had its worse moments as well. The opening scene, where the chorus uses only the very front of the stage, did not come off, and got things off to a bad start. Of course this may be better after first night jitters are over. The dancers in the chorus seemed sure of themselves, and were especially good in La Pendule Polka in the second act. There were nice groupings in this scene, and the bright colors of the costumes helped the effect.

There were times when "Tales of the Vienna Wolves" was appealing, or amusing, but its overall impression was tedious, and sometimes even confused. As we said before, the idea was good, anyway.

—Mary Burbidge.

Film "Where On Earth" On CBLT Tomorrow

A "Where on Earth" rehearsal, to be held tomorrow evening, at the Women's Union Theatre will be covered by a CBC television news unit said Ron Gould, Social Director of UC last night. The coverage will be by film and will be used in the nightly news feature, "Tabloid", on CBLT.

The unexpected news of the television coverage comes practically on the eve of the annual show, to be held on Nov. 12, 13 and 14.

Ron Hallam, of the television news department said that the rehearsal would only be a news story and that it would be shown, either Friday or Saturday.

The first university show to be introduced to the medium of television was the AVR which replaced the "Big Revue on February 23, 1953. In this case, the show was condensed into one hour and presented as a feature. There will be no AVR this year, thus no television presentation.

"Where on Earth" is the first campus show to have a rehearsal covered by television and the first event at Varsity of an organized nature to find itself on the television screens of Toronto.

Skule Holds First Place By Defeating Vic 3-1

By MOISHE REITER

"Can't anybody beat Skule?" After the fine 3-1 shaving Skule gave Vic last night the Intramural football league is a frantic body. Everybody has come close. U.C., Meds, and now Vic — all have almost held Skule. But none have quite done it yet this year.

Beating Vic the Engineers counted their fourth victory this season and gave fans a good idea of at least one team that they could expect to watch in the finals. Vic came back strong from their early season loss to SPS but now they could miss the playoffs—if UC should beat them and Skule. Which returns us to our original problem — Can anyone beat Sule?

The SP.. performance against Vic says NO! The boys from the Little Red Schoolhouse threw only three weapons at Vic—a line that couldn't be shaken; a backfield that couldn't be stopped and a quarterback that wouldn't be outsmarted. As it happened these were enough to win the ball season.

Vic produced a running game that had hurdler Norm Williams leaping over the Skulemen for large gains but the Engineers kept these surges spaced so that the Vicmen never really threatened. The only time Vic came close was on a Skule boob. With Day back to kick the snap cleared his reaching arms by about 4 feet and the Skuleman was nailed at his own 21, where the Red and Gold took charge. The scoring sputtered out though as Vic quarter Pete Potter chose to work through the line. With Skule there is no such thing as "through the line" and after two attempts the Vics had to try a field goal. The kick was wide but it earned Vic their single point.

There were no better ball carriers one either side than the Engineers' quarterback. Built close to the ground with a low centre of gravity Hart was a hard man to stop; in fact, as he decked the vicious Vic tacklers out consistently, they found him a hard man to find.

Sweetest play of the day happened in the final period at the Vic 34. Vic had just completed a screen pass and seemed on the way for a good run. Skule's Bruce Day, with contrary intentions, took aim, put his head down and barrelled smack into the Vicster—both men flew about ten feet. The ball popped free as the holder looked to his achin' head, and Day rolled over and onto it. The Engineers looked hot about then as they whipped through the Vic line to the 16 on one quick drive. Then—they fumbled right back to Vic.

Day was the light for Skule all day. Tackling and blocking like a pro as well as taking some Hart passes Day booted beautifully for Skule—his longest sailed from his own 40 right to the Vic goal line before it landed. He took a lot of punishment, several times being helped from the field, but he ended the game on the field, still standing.

From here on in it will be a fight between Vic and UC for that second playoff spot. Unless some upsets come about Skule is in.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Yesterday afternoon's softball battle did it — set the stage for the big semi final battle. Turning back the pages of The Varsity a month ago, we found some predictions the results of which have lived up to those very predictions — namely that PHE and Vic have wound up in playoff positions.

One squad, the UC gals failed us though. These gals tried but missed winning enough to put them in first or second spot in league one. Finishing out in third position. It seems odd that a college with such a high population should not be able to put forth a better showing than this. In the first place, UC should be able to produce more than one team and secondly, with such a great number of girls at the college the selection of one good squad should not be difficult.

Vic turned out two very powerful teams this year, their first squad playing an undefeated season. Sparked by players like Mary Foster who played intermediate A last summer with Sarnia. Vic dashed through the schedule humbling such strong squads as PHE third year. Saint Hilda's firsts, though getting off to a poor start finished up in second spot in league one.

League two ended in a three way tie with Saint Mike's, PHE second year and Meds. PHE hurdled over the first barrier namely Meds Monday and completed the race over Saint Mike's yesterday afternoon. This left the league standing with PHE on top followed by the saints.

Another PHE squad representing their first year won out in the third group followed by Vic seconds. Wouldn't it have been an odd coincidence if the physedder's third year had won a top league standing too? Embarrassing what? Well, we're not going to make any slanderous comment about this because out of their weenie faculty, the PHE gals managed to come up with three teams — which is more than the largest college on the campus can say.

So, today the big battle gets going, and predictions, no doubt are in order. We'll pick Vic firsts to come out on top of all three of the league leaders. Two PHE squads face off today and the winner will play the predicted winners on Thursday. It will be the best out of three from here on.

Saint Mike's and Vic seconds start off the race for second spot today and the winner of this will play Saint Hilda's firsts Thursday in the beginning of a best of three. We're nor predicting any second place though there is a tendency to favour the Trinity Saints.

Congratulations to the league leaders and good-luck in the finals. It's been a great season.

Foresters Up Top Wycliffe

UC eased by a tough crew from Skule 3-2 yesterday.

Treliving notched two for the winners and Rintoul added the other tally. Jack Cox drilled the pair for S.P.S.

Forestry toppled Wycliffe, 3-0 in other activity. The Woodchoppers' strength was well spread with Briggs, Armstrong and Van Nostrand each netting a singleton.

Knox demolished the Architects 2-1. Milne and Costerus were the wreckers for Knox with Lehman hammering in the lonely score for the Archies.

The Sickness

The SAC will meet one week from today to discuss its future relations with the National Federation of Canadian University Students. We know there are plenty of students who are sick of hearing so much about NFCUS, but the fact still remains that it is an organization that has to be discussed. It speaks for the national student body, it is supported financially by each student, and each student should have a say as to whether they think it is doing the job it was set up for.

At the last SAC meeting a motion to have Toronto withdraw "immediately" from the Federation was tabled in order to ascertain student opinion on the question. The question is a serious one and deserves some real deep consideration.

The answer to the question cannot resolve itself around NFCUS's past performance. If that were the case, then NFCUS would have lost it.

The problem seems to centre on whether or not NFCUS can do something in the future. In other words, while the Federation has tremendous potentialities, we must ask if these potentialities have a chance of being realized.

Unfortunately, that is how NFCUS has been existing — simply from year to year. Just how long can we go along hoping? If students are sick of the five letters, N-F-C-U-S, then maybe a reexamination of the organization itself is in order.

Certainly, NFCUS has done nothing in the way of making definite and important plans to cure the "sickness". We suggest that the main cause of the sickness is the relative lack of a strong program in the Federation.

But that still leaves the big question. Can NFCUS do something in the future? And how long can we wait for such a materialization of its potentialities?

Antigone Lost

A number of years ago Sophocles wrote a play called "The Antigone". Last week in Hart House students were treated to seven performances of a bastard edition of this play.

In the five years that he has been directing Hart House Theatre, Robert Gill has built up a reputation unsurpassed, at least in this city. In his choice of Anouilh's "Antigone" he is apparently willing to throw away this reputation entirely.

Through adaptation and translation, the play has been reduced to a work very remote from high tragedy and only slightly reminiscent of drama on any level. Such anaemic literature has no place on this campus, and certainly not in Hart House Theatre.

What is even more serious is the fact that students attended the play, expecting to see Greek tragedy and were handed, instead, a political farce. None of the original sense of soul-purging emotion of fine drama had been left. Students have been left with a contrived plot and a great name.

Mr. Gill may think that anything he presents will be accepted by the students and applauded heartily. With "Antigone" this was not the case — we hope.

Are We Sick Of It?

The Coin's Other Side

By RICH ANCO

The last in a series of articles discussing the Montreal NFCUS Conference. Here, the writer, who acted as a Toronto observer at that meeting, attempts to evaluate the arguments for and against remaining in the national federation.

It is very difficult for anyone to say we should or should not get out of NFCUS. But it is very important to have two sides of a picture if some decision is expected.

SCOTT SYMONS, ONE OF the Toronto delegates to the Montreal conference, has made an excellent plea in favor of remaining in NFCUS. He has said that if Toronto withdraws its support of the Federation then the Federation "will cease to exist." He also has said there are definite indications that NFCUS will "improve" to the extent that it will be of Toronto's benefit to remain a member.

There is a definite possibility that if Toronto the largest member university does get out then it will spell the doom of the national organization. This University does, and it can't be denied, control a tremendous share of the NFCUS budget. There is also some feeling that if Toronto starts the ball rolling then others might, and probably would, follow.

The big question is: Do we want to bust NFCUS? Or are we satisfied with its organization and with what it has done in the past?

SYMONS HAS MENTIONED that the one big decision of the Conference was the election of a national NFCUS president. His report to the SAC states that the national president "is to provide a liaison between the various campi, and to keep them informed of NFCUS activities." What is so tremendously inspiring about that? The strength of an organization does not depend on a travelling good-relations man.

Another thing to come out of the Conference was the 50 cent per capita fee. Toronto has since then discovered it could not pay the increase this year. She was one of the twelve that had voted to pay 30 cents more during 1953-54. The result of this is all the more humorous when it is known that the present NFCUS budget was drawn up with the expectation of the increased revenue from Toronto. What the Federation will do without the 30 cents per head of this University's 9,000 students no one knows at the moment.

IN HIS REPORT SYMONS MAKES clear that the money which would come from the increased fee "will only be sufficient to support a national president and look after the maintenance of the National Office." In this sentence alone it is obvious that NFCUS cannot do anything more than it has in the past even with an increase of two and a half times in its income.

The report says that we should give NFCUS a chance to show what it has for at least a year. This is misleading because Toronto will not pay the increase until the 1954 Conference and then the argument will be "Let's wait a year to see what they can do with more money." In fact, then, we will have to wait two years to determine whether NFCUS is worth our membership.

HOWEVER, ANY TALK of fee increases cannot be separated from a thorough discussion of what the Federation plans to do with it. By supporting the 50 cents Toronto DID show its confidence in NFCUS. But that confidence faded to a mere shadow when the meeting was over because no concrete and expanded plans for NFCUS had been decided upon. Nowhere are NFCUS projects any different from what they have been for the past.

To argue that Toronto is "honour bound" to pay the increase next year is foolish. Surely Toronto didn't simply say "We agree to paying the 30 cents" and leave it at that. I repeat that no fee increase can be considered without considering the planning of NFCUS projects. The plans that came out of the Montreal Conference DO NOT justify a fee raise. Least of all not one that is misinterpreted as going into an expanded NFCUS program.

THE IUS QUESTION WAS disappointing and the Toronto delegation was unanimous in this opinion. But for the report to say there was still a chance to correct the errors evident in the IUS motion is to ignore the fact that the new International Activities chairman was one of the strongest speakers against having anything to do with the IUS.

The NFCUS report claims that the student Bill of Rights was a "positive achievement" and "of extreme importance to several of the universities at the conference." I disagree. Modelled on the American Bill of Rights it was nothing but a lofty-sounding document, listing a number of rather nebulous rights. In practice these rights would probably stand little chance of being recognized.

ANY SUPPORT OF NFCUS appears to rest on hope — a hope in the potentialities which that Federation undoubtedly has. But how long can this hope go on. NFCUS has been living on it throughout the post-war years.

The contention that the referendum vote last spring was sufficient proof that Toronto wanted to stay in NFCUS is without logic. This is a new Conference and a relatively new Federation and should be handled, therefore, as a new question. If students are sick of NFCUS, perhaps it's because NFCUS has only produced reports and reports and more reports.

THE NFCUS REPORT CONCLUDES quite strongly that "NFCUS has a concrete program this year, and that there is every justification for the support of that program." I take exception to this for in no place is it any different than last year's. But if that's the kind of program Toronto students want then there is no further discussion.

If, on the other hand, Toronto wants a national organization that can take a firm stand on vital issues then NFCUS isn't, if the past is any indication, such an organization. Canadian students' opinion is hardly reflected in the Federation and last year's Russian question showed this. Now it is up to the student to decide the type of organization he wants to represent him nationally and internationally.

Our Readers Write:

Lime, Fresh Air Recommended

The Editor,
The Varsity,

On first reading the sickening and juvenile letter of Mr. Whippersnapper in this morning's Varsity, I thought for a moment that the Champus Cat had been misplaced. In a way though, it is rather refreshing to read such pure trash, unadulterated by any hint of reason. My concern for Mr. Whippersnapper's health as displayed by his letter would lead me to suggest Lime or Tomato Juice as an antidote for over-indulgence.

I feel that it is completely unnecessary to discuss the British Guiana issue further but would suggest to Mr. Whippersnapper that Flash, Hush and the Daily Worker provide rather limited source-material for discussion on the situation.

Mr. Whippersnapper's intellectual limitations are most clearly shown however, by his rather antiquated, ill-founded and illogical arguments against Catholicism. We are indeed fortunate with the danger of Communism looming dark on the horizon, to Church to bolster our defence have the bulwark of a mighty against the insidious machinations of this evil. As in the past, the church is proving an ever present help, in time of need. It is better to rely on the strength of this organization than on the willow wand of Mr. Whippersnapper's ideas as a defense of our democratic principles. I will leave further discussion on this point to members of the other Catholic College on the campus.

I am indeed thankful that Mr. W's letter does not reflect the general concensus of opinion at Victoria as shown by their amusing and commendable celebration of Hallowe'en and whole-hearted participation in the various intercollege activities. Mr. Smith called for a greater display of initiative and recent events have shown the students' appreciation of his advice.

I am afraid that it would take immeasurable time to find the smallest amount of theoretical proof for Mr. W.'s hypothoses and would therefore suggest that he give up any attempt. I am prompted to this suggestion in concern for his health and would suggest a little fresh air and a chance to see a little more of the actual world.

Mistake

The Editor,
The Varsity.

In reference to the editor's reply to my letter in Monday's Varsity may I be so bold as to challenge the veracity of his arguments. He makes mention of such dates as Sept. 23, 1950, March, 1951, and April 27, 1952 with the hope of hiding the issue. The fact still remains that the McCarran Act was put into effect Dec. 1952. Any action previous to that does not concern us. The editor justifies his stand by stating "there had never been such a great number of 'barrings' of Canadian students before the 1950 Act" (which was not put into effect). Could the barring of communism after the Communist aggression in Korea of June, 1950, of which the McCarran Act was one aftermath?

SHARE STARTS MONDAY

Realm Of Action

A cornerstone for the new Health Centre at Delhi University is shown being unveiled by Professor James Ham (L) and Dr. John Hastings (R), both of University of Toronto. The event, one of the features of the WUS Indian Seminar, was attended by 60 delegates from all over the world. Engraved on the cornerstone is a tribute to Canada and the names of the Canadian participants to the seminar. One of the objects of this year's Canadian SHARE campaign is the completion of this centre. An Indian student is shown looking on.

Build Health Centre At Delhi University

This year's SHARE campaign, which opens here on Monday, is directed towards the construction of a Health Centre at the University of Delhi, SHARE Chairman Peter Russell announced yesterday. Canadian students, taking part in the WUS Seminar in India last year, pledged through the agency of SHARE to aid in the project.

"This help is material but it is psychological. We are simply helping them to help themselves," said delegate Liz Scroggie, IV UC. She pointed out that the Indian government is matching the WUS International dollar for dollar.

Emphasis was added to the need when it was learned that a similar centre was opened in Madras and twenty-seven of the first thirty students who took examinations were found to be in immediate need of medical attention. "All the services such as free medical examinations, free chest X-rays, free immunization, and facilities such as the student infirmary, dispensary and examining rooms which we take for granted, are completely lacking on most Indian campi," said Miss Scroggie. "These are the things which the Delhi Health Centre will provide for some 8000 students."

The all-Canadian goal for SHARE this year is $20,000 which represents an average 50 cents contribution from each Canadian student . It is estimated that the Delhi project will cost upwards of $5,000 and could be finished in one year should sufficient money be raised for it.

"We are inclined to think of SHARE as a one-way proposition," said Miss Scroggie. "We give and they receive. Such is not the case. The strength of International WUS lies in the fact that it gives support in needy areas to projects already started by the students themselves. The students of Delhi University have been working on this project for a long time."

The organization has many other functions besides construction. Through its relief programme the WUS is supplying clothing, textbooks, drugs and other supplies to spots on the globe where they are in urgent demand. Back as far as 1939, WUS was providing helpful relief services to prisoners of war. A big housing project in the Near East is now in progress.

SHARE funds on this campus alone have served to bring students from far-flung lands such as Korean student, Keihying Lee and Indian student Rajesh Mittra M.A. to Toronto for further study. Similar plans are being hoped for this year.

"By generously supporting the SHARE Campaign, Nov. 9, Toronto students can show that their interest in international affairs goes beyond the realm of talk into the realm of action," said Miss Scroggie.

Need More Skulemen and Docs For Carabin Weekenders

"The professional student doesn't know what he is missing," claimed Liz Scroggie, Carabin co-chairman. Applications for the Carabin Weekend, Dec. 3-6, close this evening and only 15 applications have been received from professional faculties. "Every year the Montreal Carabins, all professional students, ask to have more medsmen, dentists and engineers on the weekend. But every year we receive only a dozen applications from these faculties."

The programme for the weekend has been set up as follows:

Thursday eve, Dec. 3:—Reception for the Montreal Carabins, with the appropriate toasts and welcoming skits

Friday, Dec. 4:—Lectures with Toronto hosts in the morning; lunch in Hart House and UC Women's Union; seminar discussions in the afternoon. A reception will be held in Warden McCulley's apartment, followed by a banquet in Hart House, with Dr. Careless of the History Department as guest speaker. In the evening there will be a PARTY.

Saturday, Dec. 5:—Tours of the campus and city in the morning; with seminar discussions in the afternoon. A square dance and PARTY will proceed after box suppers.

Sunday, Dec. 6:—Mass in the morning will be followed by Sunday dinner with the host, and a farewell tea at 2:00 p.m. At 3:30—au revoir.

"Early in February the forty Toronto hosts will go back to Montreal for a fabulous weekend of discussions, banquets and parties," Stan Shiff, co-chairman said. Application forms are available in SAC office and must be completed by 5:00 p.m. tonight.

Literary Issue

There will be an issue of The Varsity devoted entirely to literary work again this year, it was announced after a masthead meeting on Tuesday. The size of the issue will depend on the quality of the material received, said Rich Anco, co-editor of The Varsity. Possible entries will be the same as last year, prizes will be in the same order, and all material must in no later than January 15th, he said. Entries may be made in light and serious verse, short stories, and essays, all as a competition in photography.

Resigning Varsity News Editor Raps Paper's Editorial Policies

Paul Bacon, II Trin., yesterday resigned as News Editor of The Varsity because of what he called the "anti-American policy" of its editors. Explaining his position, Bacon said: "I wish to make an obvious stand to show my total disagreement with the editorial policy on this paper. The editors stand for anti-Americanism and socialism on certain issues, two concepts directly opposed to my own principles."

He said, however, that he would continue to work on the paper.

The resignation followed an editorial in The Varsity supporting the anti-McCarthy demonstration by a group of Victoria College students last Saturday night. At that time, some 65 students burned McCarthy in effigy and denounced his "fear tactics" in combatting communism.

"The editors have said that McCarthy's tactics for combatting communism are not warranted," Bacon said in a statement. "But I dislike communism to the extent that I feel any measures directed against its destruction are fair."

He stated "there are times when thought control — the crux of the McCarthy issue — is justified" and particularly referred to suppression of Nazism and Nazi propaganda in the last war.

Bacon said he was a staunch individualist and communism was basically wrong. "I am willing to accept certain hardships in order that this threat to the progress of mankind shall be confounded at every turn, even if some measures may curb the right of the individual to free speech."

In accepting his resignation the editors, Orie Loucks and Rich Anco, said: "We feel that in no way is anti-McCarthyism synonymous with anti-Americanism. We will continue to oppose the methods and tactics which that Wisconsin senator continues to employ in his anti-communist campaign."

The editors believed that nowhere and at no time was thought control justified "and we will always write against any movement favoring it."

They declared that suppression of free speech, whether in Russia or America, was objectionable. "It is a method which, in the end, supports what communism stands for."

"We are sorry to see Paul Bacon leave, but we have certain principles which we cannot, and will not, abandon," the editors said. "We also respect his right to uphold his own principles."

The editors felt that it was unfair to be charged with anti-Americanism. "We do reserve the right to criticize, if we want to, any particular policy of the American and Canadian governments. That is the basis of democratic criticism and government."

"We have, on occasion, disagreed with Canadian immigration policy, but that certainly doesn't make us anti-Canadian," they claimed.

Globe Editor Starts Series On Reporting

City Editor of the Globe and Mail, Mr. Robert Turnbull will give the first in a series of lectures on newspaper writing today at 1.00 p.m. in Room 8, UC. His topic will be "News and Newswriting".

After coming to Canada from Scotland in his teens, Turbull joined the Toronto Daily Star in 1931 as copy boy. During his career he has done all types of reporting from obituaries, features and general news, to police reporting. Turnbull also wrote women's news and social notes for the women's pages. He even wrote the article for his own wedding.

Turnbull also spent several years with the Star Weekly as news editor and art director. In 1946 Turnbull joined the staff of the Globe and Mail as Assistant City Editor and later became City Editor.

He was educated in Glasgow, Scotland and Malvern Collegiate in Toronto. He later married and now has 12-year-old twin daughters. Aside from writing, Turnbull's hobbies include color photography and fishing. He also writes the column "Outdoor Trail" for the Globe and Mail.

The lecture, first in a series which will cover all departments of a newspaper is part of a Varsity campaign to acquaint students with different aspects of journalism.

ROBERT TURNBULL

Jan Simons

Jan Simon, baritone, sang a program of light songs, mostly German art songs in the familiar surroundings of the Hart House music room. The most apt word to describe it is pleasant. Sometimes it was exciting but it was never less than thoroughly pleasant.

He began very strongly with Honour and Arms from Handel's Samson. After establishing in this and two arias of Dvorak the capability and suppleness of his voice, he moved to the German selections four by Schubert and four by Brahms, to show other qualities of his voice. Lieder such as these can be done by a small pleasing voice, but require much more in the interpretation of the mood or story. Jan Simon has very good control of his voice. His beginnings slip out almost imperceptibly and his carry over of tone is smooth. His tonal quality is generally quite pure, but in lower notes tends to become rough. The variety of moods, mostly over that eternal phenomenon, love, were easily captured in a clear German. In Sc'.westerlein wann gehn wir nach Haus? he differentiated between the two speakers merely by changing the quality of his voice. The gaiety of Fischerweise, the churchyard atmosphere of Der Doppelgaenger were all there.

The well known foggy, foggy Jew was particularly amusing in an arrangement by Britten in the final group of English songs. The accompaniment established a rhythm resembling that of cowboy songs and then syncopated just at the crucial word of the verse. Dr. Brough gave a sensitive accompaniment.

Harpsichord, Viols And Singer In HH Sunday Evening Concert

For the second of this year's Sunday evening concerts in the Great Hall of Hart House, seven performers will be on the platform. And they will play music of the 16th to the 18th centuries on instruments of that period.

GRETA KRAUS

Elizabeth Benson Guy, who gave a Sunday evening concert of her own last year, will sing a group of songs, accompanied on the harpsichord by Greta Kraus and on the viola da gamba by Wolfgang Grunsky. In addition Miss Kraus will perform solo works for harpsichord, and there will also be music for combinations of harpsichord and viols.

The viols will be those of the famed Hart House chest, and they will be played by the same group that played them last year—Doreen Hall, Joyce Gundy, Eileen Bordessa, Klemi Hambourg and Wolfgang Grunsky, the leader of the group. These instruments, were actually built in the 17th century.

Miss Kraus' harpsichord has also been heard before in Hart House, every year for several years now. Her playing is also well known to listeners to the various CBC concert series.

Miss Kraus and Wolfgang Grunsky both received their training in Austria, and had established a musical reputation in Europe before coming to Canada. Miss Guy is a native of Bridgewater, N.S., and came to Toronto as a winner of the Singing Stars of Tomorrow competition. The other viol players are also Canadians who received their training at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Tickets for this concert are available free of charge on presentation of a Hart House membership card at the Hall Porter's desk.

Glee Club Recording Now Ready

A record of Varsity song is now available to students and graduates who desire some memories of their University days. The record available in both 78 and 33 speeds is on sale in the Hart House Tuck Shop.

The record, being cut by RCA Victor was recorded by the Hart House Glee Club, and contains songs representative of most of the Major Colleges and faculties on the campus.

The idea for the disc originated in the USA, where several universities have made a practice of recording their school songs for sale to graduate and undergraduates alike. This is the first time anything of this nature has been attempted in Canada, but there is a possibility that it will become an institution at Varsity at least.

Late Again?

Just Park And Pay

By HAROLD STROM

There is no longer a parking problem at the University of Toronto. The students have used an amazing amount of ingenuity in order to park 3000 cars in 200 spaces. They simply line them up on College and Bloor Sts. and let Toronto's Finest put pretty yellow parking permits under the windshield wipers. These permits entitle the owner of the automobile to park in one spot all day for the perfectly reasonable sum of two dollars.

In past years the students were willing to forego the privilege of supporting the local gendarmes and tried to sneak into the university grounds to park. But while they got in easily enough — the leaks have since been plugged up — they didn't go completely unnoticed. Some enterprising people used to wander around the grounds noting who had a legal right to park, indicated by a little rectangular sticker in the lower right-hand corner of the windshield, and those who were blackguardly enough to want to avoid paying parking fines. These were noted each morning in The Varsity in a little column entitled "Parking Count."

These impromptu surveys had a very lasting effect on student opinion, which was in the main, "So who the hell cares?" Thankfully, the surveys have ceased, probably because the university police have successfully eliminated most of the unstickered cars from the campus. If nothing else, the surveys provided someone with something to do for an otherwise dull hour or two.

Not only are the university officials not doing anything to alleviate the situation (as if anything could be done, short of moving the University out to the suburbs) but they have already destroyed one parking lot — 50 cars thrust out into the cold void of Nowhere - to - Park — and are threatening to turn others into such comparatively unnecessary things as residences and the like. Can't the People in Power see that sleeping facilities are not as important as parking space? Isn't it worse to have 3000 people coming ten minutes late to lectures every morning than to have a handful of residence-less insomniacs?

Says Low Interest Caused PC Defeat

The place of the Progressive Conservative Party cannot be judged by the results of any one election said the Honorable Roland Michener, M.P., in his address to the PC Club last night at the Vic Union. "Although the election was a disappointment in some ways, we are secure as the alternative national party," he said.

Michener asked whether the rejection of the PC program indicated public disapproval. He felt that it simply indicated a lack of interest. "We felt that a tax reduction was warranted and could be made. We pressed the need for a change of party in power." None of these reforms were considered necessary by the electorate, Michener said.

"There has been no distress and this is the thing that upsets governments. Prime Minister King's last defeat came during the depression," he said.

Michener went on to give reasons for the Liberal success in the elections. The Liberals restricted buying and created a recession. They lifted these restrictions at a well chosen moment to springboard the minor boom that occurred around election time, the MP said.

The date was so chosen that the glut of wheat on the market, a great amount of which the government were stockpiling, had no chance to affect the farmers out West. This year's crop has just added to the problem, he said.

Not only did the government buying prevent the farmers from feeling the ill effects of the glut, Michener said, but the government also arranged to pay the farmers, just before the election.

"It is a credit to Liberal planning," he said "that the Liberals won 10 of the 14 new seats contested in the recent election." He pointed this out as an example of the PC stand that a government is bound to break down if it remains in office too long.

Michener gave a brief outline of Conservative policy, describing how it was formed. He pointed out that the Liberals were no longer Liberals and that many Conservatives are not Conservatives in the reactionary sense that the name implies. A cleaner definition of PC policy would relieve this problem, he felt.

The University PC Club elected Mrs. Mary Liz Whiteacre as 3rd vice-president. It also discussed its platform in the forthcoming Mock Parliament. A motion was passed inviting Philippe Gelineau to visit Toronto.

Ryersonians Are Against Smooching

Toronto, Oct. 30—(CUP)—Students at Ryerson have been warned that kissing is the "first" way to catch Tuberculosis. An article in the campus newspaper announcing the coming of the Mobile X-ray unit lists other causes of the disease and some precautions against it.

The second method of catching the disease is by breathing air containing TB and the third and final method by putting into the mouth unsterilized articles that have been used by someone who has TB.

The article emphasized that kissing is dangerous only if the Kissee is an active TB carrier. It suggests no method of distinguishing one from the other.

UC Parliament Asks SHARE At Meeting Today In JCR

Is SHARE, (Student Help to Asian Relief and Education) simply lack of student interest in world affairs? This question will be debated today by the UC Parliament at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

When asked for advance comments on the controversial topic, Pat Riely IV UC said, "We of the government wish to pose the question 'Are students interested in finding out how their money is spent for the help of Asian students? Do the students ever get together to enquire what SHARE really is?' We say 'no', that this is the attitude shown to all matters involving international relations. They pay their dollar because of a troublesome conscience, and then aren't interested."

The other member of the affirmative side said "We are not assailing SHARE — a fine institution but assailing the students for letting support of one institution creep through all other interests in international affairs."

Germaine Clinton III UC, leader of the opposition refused to comment Mike Benazon IV UC, second speaker of the opposition said. "Students at this university are interested in world affairs. This is evidenced by the large number of clubs which concern themselves with foreign affairs, by student discussion of world problems, both in bull session and on the debating floor, and by the interest which brings large numbers of students to meetings which propose to discuss NFCUS and its relationship with other student unions. The SHARE campaign is the manifestation of this interest in world affairs."

Flying Club Sees Falls In A Hurry

The University Flying Club got its season off to a "flying" start early on the morning of Sunday, Oct. 25 at Toronto Island Airport. By 7.30 a.m. 21 persons were down at the briefing room and by 8.00 a.m. the club's first breakfast flight was on its way.

The objective was to reach Niagara Falls and to come back within two hours. Within the two hours the planes were seen returning, bringing their occupants back to a waiting breakfast. Ten aircraft from Central Airways were involved in the flight.

The breakfast flight proved so successful that the club hopes to hold more.

Laundry Service

Above we see Ruth Bone, Dental Nursing, and member of the chorus line in all the all original music and book production of Dentatics, "The Show of the Year", showing Nov. 6 and 7 in Hart House. She is hiding behind a towel, used in clinics for drying hands, displaying the sign, "Come See the Rest at Dentantics". The theme of the show is based on the hearty desire of the dental students for a new building. An enterprising student finds a skull in East Africa which guides him to monetary success in the stock market. With heart-warming benevolence he buys the Dental Faculty a new building. But alas and alack! he falls in love, causing the skull to lose its mysterious powers. There will be two performances nightly on the two nights that the show will be produced. Tickets, selling at two prices, are going fast.

Drama Club Plans Fest Next Term

By SALLY HOGG

Ottawa, Nov. 4 —(Special) — Inter-Varsity Drama League delegates from nine Canadian universities met here this weekend to draw up plans for the annual Inter-Varsity Drama Festival.

The festival will be held during the second week in February. Each group presents a Canadian one-act play for adjudication. A theatre has not yet been chosen for the Festival.

The plays this year will be judged on the merits of the production as a whole, rather than just on the play itself, as in the past. The best production receives a trophy known as the Jackson Award.

Speaker at the conference was Michael Meiklejohn, of the Ottawa Drama League.

"Many people feel that theatre in a university is a backward step, but I do not agree with this feeling," he said. He believes that universities which have drama groups are maintaining and extending the cultural boundaries of Canadian life.

Delegates from Loyola, Macdonald, McGill, Bishop's, Carleton, Queen's, McMaster, Western, and Ottawa University attended the conference.

UN Too Open L. B. Pearson Tells McGill

Montreal, Oct. 30 —(CUP)— The Honourable Lester B. Pearson has advocated a return to private and nations to a group of McGill students. In particular he cited the controversy in the UN over the inclusion of India in the Korean negotiations.

Mr. Pearson felt that the practice of completely open diplomacy was more harmful in dealings with our allies. He stressed disagreements between friendly countries are bound to occur and their publication makes negotiation and compromise less possible.

He also emphasized that policies and agreements reached in such negotiations should be made public. He also noted that traditional diplomacy channels had been bypassed recently by international meetings.

Democracy Challenges Us Lady Carter

Recently arrived in Canada to deliver this year's Sir Robert Falconer Lecture, Lady Violet Bonham Carter will speak on the topic, "British Democracy Today and Yesterday — The Challenge to the Individual." The talk, which will be given in Convocation Hall, is to be presented in two parts; on Tuesday, Nov. 10, and on Wednesday, Nov. 11 at 8:30 p.m.

Lady Violet is the daughter of the noted British Prime Minister of the early twentieth century, Lord Asquith. She is vice-president, and a former president, of Britain's Liberal Party. At home, she has been in the midst of important and exciting political developments from earliest childhood.

Reminiscences of some of the world's most colorful statesmen will form part of her address. She is known as the best woman public speaker in the United Kingdom.

She is vice-chairman of the United Europe Movement, and was appointed by Sir Winston Churchill to serve on his "Focus in defence of Freedom and Peace." She has been a governor of the British Broadcasting Corporation, a member of the Royal Commissioner on the Press and, since 1945, has served as a governor of the Old Vic, one of the most famous theatrical organizations in the world.

Admission is free and the staff students and public are cordially invited.

Colombo Head Speaking Today On Asian Trip

Asia and the Free World" will be the topic of Mr. Nick Cavell in his address to the UN Club on the Campus today at 4.15 in the Women's Union.

Mr. Cavell lived in India for seventeen years. During the first world war, he fought with the Indian Cavalry in Mesopotania. He was seconded from the army for political service in India and Burma.

In peace time, Cavell conducted a business in England which took him to Russia, Europe, the Far East and South East Asia.

For nineteen years, Mr. Cavell has been a resident of Canada. In 1951, the International Economic and Technical Division of the UN made Cavell Administrator of the Canadian Colombo plan. In this capacity, he is in charge of capital expenditures for the Colombo Plan which Canada is making in South-East Asia.

In 1952, Mr. Cavell made a 40,000 mile tour of Burma, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. It is on the basis of his experiences on this trip as well as during a similar one this year, that Mr. Cavell will speak.

Non-members are welcome.

Will Feature UC Actors At HH Dance

Those in attendance at the Football Dance at Hart House this Saturday night will be treated to a preview of UC's "Where on Earth," announced Barb Menzies, co-producer of the show. Four songs, taken from the score written by Gerry Reading, will be sung by the show's leads with Art Hallman's orchestra in the background.

"This will give the students of Toronto and Western Universities an idea of the talent which is present on this campus," said Miss Menzies.

The event will take place around 10.30 p.m. in the big gym. The numbers will be done by Sheila Firestone as Lynn, Murray Goldkind as Cliff, Annette Oelbaum as Agnes and Sam Huberman as Sylvester, the male comedy lead.

The four songs were selected to be used from a total of 25, written within a period of one month, by composer Gerry Reading. He wrote the lyrics and music for the AVR of last year.

This year's director is Norman Griesdorf. He is in the second year of a General Course at UC. A product of Banff School of Fine Arts, where he majored in directing, he has scored successes with the Player's Gukid and in Robert Gill's "The Winslow Boy," in the title role.

CALM BUT AUDIBLE

The Four Jameses Again

The Four Jameses by W. BACON. Ryerson Press, $3.00.

In many ways W. A. Deacon has written a unique book. The Four Jameses has been republished by popular demand, an uncommon fate for a Canadian author. It is, unlike Sarah Binks, to which it bears some resemblance, a critical if gentle study of the poetry of a number of actual Canadian poets. Southey's Lives of the Uneducated Poets was a model but "our four Jameses are more interesting, more ingenious and more forceful writers than the English John James whom Southey puts forward as the English champion in their class."

The need no apologetic introduction. They speak quite calmly but audibly for themselves:

James MacIntyre, the Cheese Poet, sums up the happiness brought by Oxford county by the development of cheesemaking:

"To us it is a glorious theme,
To sing of milk and curds and cream,
Were it collected, it could float
On its bosom, small steam boat,
Cows numerous as a swarm of bees
Are milked in Oxford to make cheese."

and the social impact of a rise in butter and egg income to farm wives,

"And the ladies dress in silk
From the proceeds of the milk,
But those who buy their butter,
How dear it is they mutter."

His literary salutations as one bard to another are also memorable.

On Shelley:

We have scarcely time to tell thee,
Of the strange and gifted Shelley,
Kind hearted man but ill-fated
So youthful drowned and cremated."

On the Baconian controversy he may, I think, be said to have had the last word:

"Some critics think they do make clear
The fact that Bacon wrote Shakespeare
But a gent lives in New York

Asks what effect it will have on pork."

James D. Gillis, a Cape Breton not only a writer of poetry and of The Cape Breton Giant, probably the most discursial biography ever composed, but also the designer of a globe with East and West poles. To Ruth Annie:

Attired in Eaton's latest
She's just a sight to view
Her sprightly step is music and art attained by few . . ."

From "The Great Election":

" . . . imagination recalls learning, trade, adventures, schoolmaster is a "man of parts",
Hospitality, inspectorates,
African Battlefields,
And the like
Withal beautiful music."

James MacRae, a pseudonym for J. J. MacDonald, leaves as his principal work the romatic epic, "An Ideal Courtship", in which this telling criticism of the danger of too much clothing appears:

"A shapeless mass, by name a lass,
Is artfully arrayed
Is neatly bound with metal round
When nature is displayed."

Finest poet af all is James Gay: Poet Laureate of Canada and Master of All Poets. It is impossible to describe the delight experienced from reading the work of this good old man. In a plea for temperance he says:

"Let temperance by our guide while on this earth we stay,
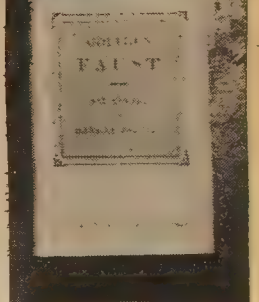
With good of all kinds
Be on our minds,
And throw all our grog bottles
And paddled o'er with worthless store
To cover unbetrayed
The sad defects which one detects away,
Like J. Gay."



"Leave off this sinful life and try to get more clever, Put your trust in Providence, life changes like the weather"

Or:

"Canadian Climate must have been changeable ever since the world began,
One hour snowing and the next raining like fun,
Our blood sometimes thick, other times thin,
This is the time colds begin."

As for the "Elephant and The Flea", a theme "never before treated poetically", Gay's adventures while exbiting the two headed colt, and his correspondence with Tennyson, I suggest you read The Four Jameses. The whole book is quite remarkable, not "Canadian culture" perhaps, but simple and natural.

THE BEST OF BOTH WORLDS, Tom Driberg, Dent., $3.00.

Tom Driberg's "personal diary," The Best of Both Worlds, is a book that will keep you interested for all of its 225 pages — and leave you, after the reading, wondering why.

Mr. Driberg, who, despite his name (derived from remote Dutch forebears), is of Scotch descent, is MP (Labour) for Maldon, Essex in the British House of Commons and a feature writer for the publication Reynolds News. He is also a prominent Bevanite, perhaps the key to some of the book's interest.

In this journal form, concocted from a smattering of each of Horace Walpole, Tobias Smollett and Q. Horatius Flaccus, seasoned liberally with the Driberg temper, the MP-newsman would seem to have found the ideal medium for the egoist. It is fairly common knowledge, of course, that few wallflowers are found in the House of Commons; and the wilting lily is extremely rare in the newspaper business. But for those for whom these forms of self-display are not enough, Mr. Driberg has found the answer.

It may well be that Mr. Driberg is aware of this. In discussing his country home at Bradwell (16 rooms — Wot? A Socialist MP?) he writes, "A psychologist might find here — in fact that I live in a house too large for one and keep it open — some element of compensation for the restrictive and frustrating circumstances of my childhood." In lieu of another, this will do as the key to Mr. Driberg's purposes in publishing this book.

There are interesting touches all through which tend to the same general conclusion. In the very first entry, in which Mr. Driberg is "embarrassed by his (a chemist's) advertising to a stranger in the shop the fact that I am 'in Parliament'," we have the tooth-gritting spectacle of a modest man modestly preparing for publication an example of his modesty — as the lead-off, too. And what could be more cold-fish-like than his writing the lengthy and detailed account of his wedding on his wedding night? I know he was forty-five, but after all . . .!

There are evidences that the book was not primarily intended for North American readers. (Or is this another of the errors we are likely to make about the book?) The references to the Edinburgh Festival, to the numerous facets of the BBC which seem to interest Mr. Driberg, to well-known landmarks, journalistic and geographic, and to his numerous friends, were slightly obscure. The death of Mr. Constant Lambert, for example, would have a very minor impact on one who has never heard of Mr. Lambert.

Yet, despite this, the book has a very real interest. What are the causes? Several I believe. Most important is the style. Mr. Driberg, who takes a few nifty jabs at what he calls Timestyle (in reference to the American magazine), is, as has been said, a trained newspaperman. His style is that fluid British journalese which, in it precision of diction, handsome vocabulary and ease of construction, has no North American counterpart. It carries the reader easily, swiftly and interestingly.

Secondly, there is the frank expression, which, it is to be feared, our MP's and journalists are incapable of, without descending to the gutter. To a North American, most of the revelations are interesting, and Mr. Driberg spares no one. To us, to whom Mr. Churchill is a war hero and a Great Man it comes as a bit of a surprise to read that,

On this occasion, Winston Churchill himself, in high good humour, was Tory spokesman. There was, of course, no conscious humbug or hypocrisy in his choice of the time for moving to report progress. Just as he genuinely believed that hundreds of millions of Indians could and should remain subject to our rule, so it is genuinely difficult for him to grasp MP's do not have a town house within a few minutes' stroll of St. Stephen's or cars to take them home. His heart and his sub-conscious are still in the golden age in which the world and Parliament were ruled by his class.

What, apart from the frankness and the style, keeps one reading? Probably just what Mr. Driberg intended: that insatiate curiosity which afflicts so many of us. How does an MP-journalist live? What does a rebel Labourite think about world affairs? What does a well-known public figure have to say about current people and things? Care to find out? Get the book. It's well worth having, despite the faults — and they are obvious and wretched.

A VANTAGE POINT

Goethe's Faust

Goethe's Faust by Barker Fairley, Oxford Press, $2.00.

Dr. Fairley, the head of the University College German department, and a widely recognized Goethe's Faust. In previous contributions, Dr. Fairley established the approach to Goethe's writing through a deep probing of the author's psychology, by comparative studies of his works, biography and correspondence.

Goethe's work is now seen as an organic whole, inseparable from his development as an author and as a man. Having attained an amazing over-all grasp of Goethe's works, as well as a keen insight into his mind, Dr. Fairley turns to a study of Faust in particular.

Faust, began when Goethe was in his twenties, and finished only when he was an old man, has a manifold heritage; a deep-rooted German tradition, the classical ideal of harmony, and especially Goethe's immense lyricism from which each of the poem's topics and experiences springs. However, because of its peculiar and novel poetic form, Faust poses many problems for the reader.

In dealing with the form of Faust, Dr. Fairley has shown Goethe's tendency in his other dramatic works to favor a rather lyric expression. In Faust, which is neither a drama nor an epic, although it partakes of some qualities of both, he developed the perfect open form to express his ideas. The competent analysis which follows deals decisively and consistently with the problems arising from the poem's apparent disunity.

The outstanding value of Dr. Fairley's approach is that it gives us a vantage point from which we can view Faust as an organic whole, repeatedly expressing a theme. In this constructive reading, he also re-affirms the poem's great optimism, which came as a startling innovation in contrast to the tragic outlook expressed in most other great literature.

Goethe proclaims in Faust that activity, even if misdirected in its manifestations is a positive redeeming quality in human beings; it is through Faust's striving against Mephisto's spirit of negation that he is saved.

The style of this book is extremely satisfying in its forceful, concise expression which is very near to conversation. This critical study of Faust is a must for every Goethe reader, and should prove a stimulating task.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

IN OR OUT?

Well, is Vic Obeck, coach of the McGill Redmen, in or out? Probably no one really knows, not even Vic. Of course, the good mentor of the Redmen is noted for explosive statements. And most Intercollegiate observers have learned to take what he says with a dose of salts.

But it gets sort of confusing when someone twice says that he will not be coaching a team for the next season and then turns around and is quoted as saying "but I haven't quit yet."

HOW IT HAPPENED

It all started after the game on Saturday in Montreal when Neil MacCarl (Toronto Star), Don Hunt, Toronto Telegram) and yours truly (The Varsity), dropped in to offer condolences to the McGill coach. Without any prompting, he stated: "McGill will be looking for a new coach next fall, and you can quote me." So a follow-up call by the Telegram writer on Monday produced the same quotation plus "it's like beating your head against a brick wall, trying to compete against schools that recruit football players with promises of extra money."

Then the Globe and Mail ran a story on Tuesday morning of this week quoting Obeck as saying: "I'm not denying I said that, but I haven't done anything official about it. When I do decide to retire I certainly won't make the announcement in a locker room. But I haven't quit yet." Well, that's fine. He's right, you know. He probably won't make the announcement in a locker room. Then how come he did?

QUITE A CHARGE

The basis of his second announcement of retiring was based on his "knowledge" of athletic scholarships, "under-the-table-help", that is. There have been rumors to this effect floating around the league for years. But no one has actually proved it, including Obeck. And most of the college authorities have been quoted more than once that scholarships are pure fiction as far as the Intercollegiate is concerned.

It's not hard to realize that most of these charges of athletic scholarships are directed at Western and Toronto. After all, in the seven years since the war, Western and Toronto have held a virtual monopoly on the Yates Trophy, due to the fact that they have had the best teams in the league for all seven of those post-war years. Of course they don't take into consideration that both colleges are composed by and large of home-brews and that both colleges are located in the centre of the best high school athletic organization in Canada.

Like most people, Obeck's charges are not backed up by fact. If he's got some proof that scholarships are being paid let him publicize the proof. If he hasn't got facts to back up what he says then he shouldn't make unsubstantiated statements that reflect on the league.

MAYBE A CURB

It's getting to the point now that the Intercollegiate and the University (McGill in this case) should consider some strong action. After all Obeck represents McGill and is a coach in the Intercollegiate. No representative of a University nor any Intercollegiate coach should allow himself to be twice quoted as retiring and then back out. And no one such as Vic Obeck should be allowed to run around making statements that are detrimental to the league.

Vic Obeck is a paid official. As such he should be held responsible to the league and McGill for such irresponsible statements. If he is going to make statements that are detrimental to the game and league, let him pay for the privilege by fining him for it. Most other sports have clauses in their constitutions that allow for fines for people.

CONCLUSION

It is our opinion that Obeck's statements have been both irresponsible and detrimental to the league. If he has proof that scholarships are being paid let him bring it out in the open. If not, well, as they say down in Sam's Snooker Emporium, 'put up or shut up'. And if he doesn't shut up, the Intercollegiate and McGill should make him shut up.

END NOTES

The Interfaculty Sports Committee adopted in principle a plan of Phil Ketchum's, president of the Hart House Squash Club, to set up an Interfaculty Squash Tournament for this year which all goes to prove that student action can sometimes bring results. This department is very much in need of help in writing and make-up. There is a lot of sports on this campus that have to be covered before the spring exams roll around. Any and everybody interested should contact the sports desk of The Varsity, day or night.

Metras Says Mustangs Great Record Shows They're Powerful Weak Spots Are Hard To Find

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Last month, Western University's football coach John Metras was quoted as saying, after his Mustangs had humiliated the McGill Redmen 25-8 before a Montreal crowd, that the current team is the greatest he has ever directed. Later, Metras amended this statement to the effect that it is not his greatest team ever but it is a great team, nevertheless.

Intercollegiate football fans might be inclined to agree. The Mustangs have won their four league starts so far—40-13 over McMaster, 25-8 over McGill, 13-10 over Varsity and 19-7 over Queen's—and this record puts them atop the college league standings. The question everybody is wondering about is whether the Varsity Blues, now in second place with a three won one lost mark, are as great. The answer will be provided Saturday afternoon at Varsity stadium when the two teams clash in what promises to be the best grid contest of the college season.

In a pre-season preview game, at the Boor Bowl, the Blues outclassed the Mustangs 11-1, but in the game at London, Metras' boys, after a bad first half, recovered and won 13-10.

Early in the fall athletice authorities in the other schools were chortling over the list of players Metras had lost from last year's team—people like Doug McNichol, Ray Truant and Miller Gallow. They should have known better. The Londoners went to the post with a least as strong an outfit as that which won the Yates Cup last fall, as they have done in all but two seasons since the war.

First of all, they had a backfield which, once it got started, had observers recalling the MacFarlane—Perry group of a few years ago. At halfback is crashing Gino Fracas from Assumption College, and three speed-merchants, Murray Henderson, Brian Young and Garnet Mason, fullback Jacques Belec and flying wing Dob Prowse complete the backfield crew.

Fracas led inter-collegiate scorers right from the start, having four touchdowns as well as being his team's placement kicker. Thirteen converts gave him 33 points which was good for first place until last Saturday when Varsity's Steve Oneschuk went wild for 20 to make his total 37. Henderson has four touchdowns in four games, Mason has two majors and two converts, has two majrs oand two converts.

Don Getty, a capable passer, directs the attack from the quarterback spot and it's hard to argue with the results—97 points in four games. His understudy is John Girvin.

It's also hard to find a weak spot in Western's line. Doug Drew at centre is backed by Charlie Cunningham, and Jack Wyatt and Captain Jack Thompson give the team a hardrock pair of guards. Big Ted Roman is another inside. At tackle are Dick Martin, who blocked two Varsity convert attempts in that 13-10 game, Ted Collins and Dennis Higgins. The ends are Don Killinger, Orest Toparsky, and Bob Turner.

Finally, the kicking assignment is handled by the team's second Jack Thompson, a wingback.

Blue Notes — Frank Palermo's ankle sprain will likely keep him out of action Saturday . . . End Don Smith has an injured arm and is a doubtful starter . . . Of 24 players dressed by the Blues against McGill last Saturday, 20 were Toronto natives . . . Western's Brian Young may be out of action. If so, his place would be filled by Lorne Hunter.

PHE Gals Fight Small Civil War

PHE first year went do to a 4-11 defeat yesterday afternoon in the first of the semi-finals in the women's softball league. And who did the honours? None other than their seond year cohorts.

Both squads finished on top of their respective leagues but the second year gals held the edge from the opener on. This first inning was battled out with a vehement two way tie and it looked as if the whole match would be a typical semi-final duel.

It was anyone's game till the second year went mad (as is their typical habit) and tallied five. The little (well they're really not as petite as all that) frosh retaliated with a single run in the second.

That was their big mistake. Up until this point, the frosh had displayed one of the best teams in the circuit. But with the second year splurge came a first year decay.

In a fast moving drive, the frosh sent three to bat; the same three went back scoreless to the sideline. Soon after the sophs tallied up another three. First year fell down miserably in this inning letting Inger Olsen and Jackie Cohoon get home on sneaks.

One more in ng gav the First year gals the chance to make good but their batting failed to account for a single. The game ended 11-4 for second year disqualifying the frosh from any further league softball meets this year.

Ov at the stadium another game was scheduled between Vic seconds and Saint Mikes. — The score? — infinity to 0. The reason? — a Vic default due to a late arrival. This means that Saint Mike's will play off with Saint Hilda's first while Vic firsts play off with PHE second year today. The winners of these two matches will meet on Friday to begin a best out of three playoff series

Blues Look Good For Soccer Title

Varsity's soccer Blues are in an enviable position just now. The worst they can do is tie for the eastern division championship and only a miracle can shake the Blackwood Trophy, emblematic of western supremacy, away from their grasp.

They practically wrapped up the Blackwood Cup — which they lost last season for the first time in 11 years — when they defeated Ontario Agricultural College 4-3 yesterday on the back campus. Now Western could tie the Blues in points but to beat them out for the cup, they'd have to whip them by six or more goals. In the first meeting of the two squads, Varsity humbled the Mustangs 6-0.

As far as the eastern title is concerned, the Blues can win that back again by beating the McGill Redmen Saturday in a noon-hour game. Last time out, down at Montreal, the Redmen and Blues wound up in a 1-1 tie.

Jose Atucha and Rod Green scored two goals each yesterday as the Blues led 2-1 at half-time and had the same edge in the second half. For the Aggies, Pierce Lovisy and George Bartlett sniped a goal each, the most any team has scored on the Blues this season.

Aggie intermediates upset the Varsity Seconds 4-0 in a game on on the front campus. Alec Prokish scored twice for the OAC boys with John Foster and Murray Smith adding singletons

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

The present system of women's softball playoffs has been designed to meet with weather reports. This means that such a system must cut playoff day to a minimum to make way for snow and sleet of the winter season.

As it stands now the top squads in each league are chosen to meet in the semi-finals. That means six squads are competing for the laurels. Yesterday PHE first year was dropped from the running having lost only one game in the series. They had one chance to make the grade and failed. The squad looked good and more than likely could have beaten their sophs in another bout. A double robin tourney would drag on another week and a half so as a result playoff weather restricted the schedule makers to the present set-up.

Off in another corner of the campus the second place squads are battling it out for top spot. Yesterday Vic second place defaulted and thus have been left behind in further play. It seems quite unfair that a team should be dropped from the semi series due to one loss but that's the way it goes.

The big game will include a team from the league leaders and the league second placers. If a top ranking squad can't have the opportunity to make up for one loss, it hardly seems fair that a second rate team should be included in the final series. The best remedy that could be concocted for this situation would be to have the top teams and seconds play off in two separate leagues to decide first and second spots. This would not include a meeting between the two groups at all.

Hockey Back Blues Begin Practice Now

The Prom concerts are gone and there's ice in Varsity Arena again. And yesterday, the Varsity Blues began hockey practices for the new season.

Arena Manager Harry Griffiths and last year's captain, Jack Wheldrake, were in charge while coach Jack Kennedy is busy with football. A group of about 30 veterans turned up to go through a light scrimmage and skating drill. Tonight, the coaches will look over the crop of newcomers.

Red Stephen, centre on last season's first line, headed the returning forwards. Also out there skating for the first time this fall were Ernie Bodnar, Don Cossar, Norm Dysart, Ross Holden, Dave Kent, Ken Lawson, Robin Logie, Bob Primeau, Jim Wilkes and Ross Woods. A new face was Harry Boyd, who was with the team three years ago.

A newcomer on defence is John Tolton, a burly PHE man who played part of last season with Marlboro juniors.

Barn Dance To Welcome Westerners

Members of the Blue and White society have been scouring Southern Ontario for gallons of cider to be consumed in Friday's "Western Roundup", publicity director of the Blue and White, John McKellar said yesterday. The dance will be held at 9.00 p.m. in the Drill Hall, 119 St. George St.

"The first Friday venture-the rally and street dance before the McMaster game was a definite success," McKellar said. "We have inaugurated, for this year at least, a policy of sponsoring regular Friday events on football weekends."

The Drill Hall will be decorated with straw, cornusks, leaves and trees and to add to the barn dance atmosphere, a special hillbilly band and singer will feature both square and round dance music. Even the cheerleaders have gone hillbilly for the evening. They will be there, all decked out in western-style straw hats.

"We are especially anxious to see all those who travelled to McGill this past weekend. We feel that this group is the core of student spirit," Blue and White chairman, Paul Lorch said.

SAC rep. Don Lo IV SPS. said that the engineers will definitely support, Friday's activities and not hold a pep rally of their own.

The Hart House Barber Shop, shown in action here, is located in the Athletic Wing. Providing service to members, it is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. The shop which accommodates around one hundred per day finds itself at its busiest during the height of the campus social season. It's busy now, as you can see.

SHARE Dinner Speaker Indian High Commissioner Commonwealth Authority

The Honorable R. R. Saksena, High Commissioner for India, will speak at the annual Share Dinner to be held in Great Hall at Hart House, at 6.15 on Monday, November 9.

The dinner will be the official opening of the Share Campaign which runs from November 9-13.

This will also be one of the rare opportunities that women will be allowed to eat in the Great Hall.

"His Excellency Saksena is one of the top Indian Diplomats in the Western Hemisphere second only to Madame Pandit" said Peter Russel, chairman of the Share Campaign. Saskena is an authority on India's very urgent problems and their relation to the rest of the British Commonwealth. He is a graduate of Oxford, and is reported to be a fine speaker.

This year the campaign funds will go in aid of the new medical health centre at the University of Delhi. All that is built now is the cornerstone, because funds are lacking, and it will be impressed on the students the urgency with which Varsity contributions are needed.

Last Thursday evening Liz Scroggie IV UC and Dr. John Hastings showed the Modern History Club pictures of the future health centre.

Warden Joseph McCulley suggested the idea of a modest meal and a contribution to the campaign through the price of the dinner. Everyone including the head table will be charged. Even The Varsity reporter and photographer have been warned they will be charged," commented Dave Walker, Share dinner chairman.

The price of the tickets will be $1.50. They are being sold by Share faculty representatives, EAC representatives, and at the SAC office.

UNB Has New Head

Fredericton, 14, Oct. (CUP)—Colin B. Mackay was appointed president of the University of New Brunswick, to succeed Dr. A. W. Trueman who has been appointed National Film Board director.

The new president of UNB is a graduate of the university's law school, a copropation lawyer and a former provincial Progressive-Conservative leader.

BADMINTON

Those interested in trying out for the Men's Intercollegiate Badminton team sign list in Intercollegiate Office by November 11th. There will be a meeting of those signed on Nov. 12th at 5 p.m. in the Music Room, Hart House.

Approved Effigy Dress ?

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

"And if you are going to stage any more parades, garb yourselves like Canadians. . . ."

—Frank Tumpane, in the Globe and Mail, Nov. 4.

Keep It In Focus

If the burning of the effigy of Senator McCarthy did nothing else, it must be supported for pointedly placing the question of McCarthyism before the students of this campus. But that question should not be lost now on debates as to whether effigy burning is good or bad.

McCarthyism cannot be combatted by parades around campi. The unreasonable emotionalism on which McCarthyism thrives cannot be overcome by like explosions of mass emotion. McCarthyism is a serious business and must be thought out logically and reasonably.

Uncontrolled and senseless effigies are useless. But in Victoria's case it wasn't uncontrolled nor senseless. It brought clean to the surface one of the most threatening (we believe) movements of the post-war world. Criticized though it was, we think "the burning" succeeded in its purpose. The "naughty, little kiddies" have done something very worthwhile.

Now it is up to the rest of the student body to take up the McCarthy question. Opposition to McCarthyism is growing steadily in the United States. No doubt, there is a good deal right here in Toronto. But it must be clearly expressed if McCarthyism is to be whittled down to the annihilation it deserves.

There probably are some people who really feel that McCarthy is doing a good thing. We disagree with them.

We think that McCarthy, by his work, by his methods, by his results, is not making America (or Canada) safe from Communism. He is discrediting the very principles which Americans and Canadians claim to profess.

He is all the more dangerous because he smoke-screens his actions by saying he is defending democracy. What hypocrisy! He may think he is right, but a simple look at what democracy stands for and what McCarthyism stands for will only prove he is quite wrong.

We don't go along with all those people who are bellowing that the "Vic students should drop dead." We think the effigy burning has started some good discussion — now let's not lose it.

No Comment

This cut-line to a picture of the recent effigy burning appeared in the New York Times:

"Students Protest McCarthyism: Wearing white robes and carrying lighted candles, this group of college students convened on their campus Saturday night to burn an effigy of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin and to denounce what they called the 'terror' used in his investigations. The students were safe, though, from a McCarthy investigation or reprisal — they are Canadians, undergraduates at the University of Toronto."

Naughty, Naughty

Citizen Tum Pane!

By NORE FLYNN

The article, below, is written in answer to a column by Frank Tum pane that appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail. It takes exception to Tumpane's comparison of Prime Minister St. Laurent and US Senator Joe McCarthy.

In an unfortunate article overlined "Let's Act Like Canadians" the Globe and Mail's Canadian Citizen Tum Pane rates the Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent of the sovereign Dominion of Canada, George Drew, and Ontario Premier Leslie Frost with Wisconsin's state senator Joseph McCarthy.

THE TERRIBLE ANALOGY APPEARED in the Wednesday Globe: "There is a large state university in Wisconsin, Senator McCarthy's home state. What would be the reaction of Canadians if the students at the University of Wisconsin draped themselves like the Ku Klux Klan, formed a procession and hanged and burned an effigy of Premier Leslie Frost, Prime Minister St. Laurent or George Drew?"

Citizen Tum Pane's hypothetical equating of this sovereign Dominion's St. Laurent, Drew and Frost with Wisconsin's witch-hunting senator is, we hope, the inadvertent subconscious judgment of a spanielling columnist, who does not speak, as he thinks he does, for a heeling nation. Citizen Tum Pane should be laughed or crushed out of print by the P.C.'s and Liberals of this country.

I REPLY TO HIS QUESTION: If the University of Wisconsin burned our Laurent, Drew or Frost on Hallowe'en night, I'd laugh like hell at the utter ridiculousness of the prank. If Queen's University burned them, the rest of Canada would laugh at the utter ridiculousness of the prank. We don't see any U.S. universities standing up to McCarthy. We don't hear any laughter from across the border.

But we Canadians would choke, if Wisconsin seriously ranked state senator McCarthy with the Prime Minister of Canada, with George Drew or even Ontario's Leslie Frost.

AND WE CHOKE WHEN CITIZEN Tum Pane of the Globe does it for Wisconsin. There just isn't a Canadian equivalent for McCarthyism. Thank God.

I quote a poignant cry of the New York Times (Tuesday) appearing as the caption to their picture of the Victoria College Hallowe'en demonstration:

Wearing white robes and carrying lighted candles, this group of college students convened on their campus Sunday night to burn an effigy of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin and to denounce what they called the "terror tactics" used in his investigations. The students were safe, though, from a McCarthy investigation or reprisal — they are Canadians, undergraduates of the University of Toronto."

THIS IS AS TABASCO TO CITIZEN Tum Pane's milquetoast. The New York Times gets as lyric as they can, while Citizen Tum Pane of the Toronto Globe slaps our fingers, naughty, naughty.

The Times makes a haunting revelation. The University of Toronto is "safe" from the "reprisal" of a United States senator. How many American universities would be safe from reprisals".

I ask these questions of anyone who can answer, including some 140 millions of Americans:

WOULD ANTI-WILKIE-ISM HAVE BEEN CALLED ANTI-AMERICAN?

WOULD ANTI-SIR STAFFORD CRIPPSISM HAVE BEEN CALLED ANTI-BRITISH?

IS ANTI-McCARTHYISM ANTI-AMERICAN? IS McCARTHY AMERICA?

If not, then we didn't really burn the Stars and Stripes at Victoria, on Hallowe'en night, did we?

Now for the comic relief of Citizen Tum Pane. The demonstrators of Victoria College sleep every night between their Ku Klux Klan uniforms. They have safety pins, too, and Heaven knows what horrors may yet be seen in the night.

We agree with Tumpane that "it is a weird sense of values" that opposes by mockery the religious, racial hatreds of Georgia and Jim Crow intolerance, (all these terms of Citizen Tum Pane are Americanisms) instead of some Canadian symbol, instead of a foreign politician.

What Canadian symbol would Tumpane suggests? Perhaps it wold be hunky-dory if we dressed up like Mounties and burned St. Laurent.

WE'RE SORRY WE INTRODUCED THE Ku Klux Klan into Canada — honest. This country has too damned many subversive bedsheets and safety pins, for Citizen Tum Pane.

We point out that some prominent US citizens have been worthy of your Victorian epithet, "ill-mannered bad taste" regarding McCarthy. Get after them, Citizen Tum Pane, remind them that charity beings at home.

WE ARE REASSURED WHEN YOU say to Victoria: "Applesauce, Malarkey. North American democracy hasn't been robbed of its vitality. Don't talk so big and take in so much territory, if you don't mind."

Well, we kiddies, don't mind. We'll leave the big talk and all that territory to Citizen Tum Pane's personal reassurances about the democratic vitality of all that territory. Now we'll be able to get some sleep instead of burning effigies.

VICTORIA COLLEGE MAY WELL remind Citizen Tum Pane that the names of a lot of "half-baked" kids are chiselled into the stone of Soldier's Tower.

Finally I resent the overweening paternalism of Citizen Tum Pane's article. Does the Citizen really think he can erect a play-pen around Victoria University by using a little baby-talk in a metropolitan paper.

Citizen Tum Pane should take it easy; the 971 students of Victoria may well overstrain his paternal feelings.

Effigy Burnings Strengthen McCarthyism

The Editor,
The Varsity:

My remarks are directed toward those who participated in the effigy burning last Saturday night. Had you burned Senator McCarthy himself, you would have done little to discourage the cause of McCarthyism. In they way in which you attacked him, you actually strengthened him, just as McCarthy strengthens the communism he tries to destroy by purging it with a branding iron.

In McCarthy's feverish efforts to remove the symptoms of communism without understanding its causes, you and many others see decadence, which causes you to doubt the health of our society, and to doubt the motives of our leaders. On the other hand, McCarthy and many others see, in your brazen demonstration, a streak of political vandalism which causes them to doubt your loyalty. It takes little to jar their imagination into visualizing the demonstration as a part of a calculated programme to undermine our unity. Their only answer is to wield the branding iron more recklessly.

The situation becomes self-aggravating; the more one group fears and distrusts the other the more reason it finds to do so. Last Saturday night you helped spread a germ which has diseas-

Correction

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We should like to correct a mistake reprinted by The Varsity from the Ubyssey on Nov. 3. In his article, the author made a careless reference to an "old Chinese proverb" that "if you have one loaf you should sell half of it and buy flowers."

This is, in fact, a Persian proverb to be found in the "Gulistan" of Moslih Eddin Saadi, which, in its undefiled form reads:

If of thy mortal goods thou art bereft
And of thy slender stores two loaves alone to thee are left
Sell one, and with the dole
Buy Hyacinths to feed thy soul.

We do not like to see such misrepresentation reach across three provinces to touch the U. of T.

Let not the Song of the "Nightingale of Shi'ari's Vales", of the "Prince of the East", be muted by the carelessness of the West.

Should We Quit The National Federation Of Canadian U Students

In an attempt to give a two-sided and clear picture o fthe nature of the decision that the SAC will have to make next Wednesday, The Varsity here lists the reasons in support of and against remaining in the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

THE CASE FOR STAYING

POTENTIALITIES:

NFCUS has tremendous potentialities and there is every hope that these can be developed in the future. Toronto should remain in the Federation to help materialize these potentialities.

PAST SUCCESSES:

NFCUS has set up the Canadian University Debating Association (CUDA) in 1927 and the Canadian University Press (CUP) in 1937. The decreased rates that Canadian students can take advantage of at the beginning and end of school terms is a result of NFCUS. Three years ago the Federation formed its own Travel Service Bureau for cheap student travel to Europe and other parts of the world. NFCUS is also responsible for inter-university student exchange in Canada. The national Federation has set up cultural competitions.

In the past NFCUS has carried on campaigns to have more national scholarships, to have unemployment insurance exemptions, to have rail fares decreased, to have import duties on university text books reduced, to have royalty reductions.

PER CAPITA REVENUE:

NFCUS has, in the past, suffered from a lack of finances. With the increased fee, this stumbling block would be removed. By staying in the Federation we could give them a chance to show what they can do with more money. We cannot withdraw without giving it this chance.

NATIONAL PRESIDENT:

NFCUS this year has elected, for the first time in its history, a national president. There is every possibility that he can, by taking a year off school and travelling from university to university, publicize the Federation locally and thereby create the firm unity it has been lacking.

HISTORY:

NFCUS is really about six or seven years old. It was out of operation during the war and has since had great difficulty getting back on its feet. It needs to be given some time.

THE CASE AGAINST

POTENTIALITIES:

There are vast potentialities in any organization, but the way NFCUS is set up there is no chance of having them realized. NFCUS must be replaced by a body that truly reflects national student opinion.

PAST SUCCESSES:

NFCUS has done a number of little things, but when it comes to the real vital issuess it has watered

Band And Cheerleaders Meet Western Students To Give Great Welcome

Hi up, Ski up, Western U! The Blue and White band with the cheerleaders are going to meet the Western football train on Saturday morning.

The Western group will be officially welcomed by the President of the SAC, John Stalker, and the Chairman of the Blue and White Society, Paul Lorch. They will then parade out onto Front Street, led by Shirley Eckel, and go wherever the spirit moves them.

Everyone is urged to join in the festivities. The train will arrive at 10:20 on Saturday morning at Union Station. "Let's give the Western students a real welcome," said Lorch. No arrangements have been made with either police or station officials.

After the welcome all students, male and female, Toronto and Western, are invited to have lunch in the Great Hall of Hart House.

A few years ago it was common practice to meet all such visiting student groups, but this was discontinued recently. This will be the first train met this year.

"This idea of meeting the football trains will be continued, if the experiment on Saturday is successful," said the Publicity director of the Blue and White Society, John McKellar. Stalker said he thought it was a great idea.

The football "game of the year", which starts at 2.00 p.m., will be followed by a Tea dance in the Drill Hall. In the evening the Blue and White will hold their last football dance for this year in Hart House. This starts at 9.00 p.m.

The Blue and White have planned one other novel event for this weekend. They are holding a Barn dance in the Drill Hall on Friday evening at nine o'clock. The hall will be decorated with straw, cornhusks, leaves and trees, and there will be a special hill-billy band and singer.

Gallons of cider will be available for those who are made thirsty by the dancing, which will be both square and round. Everyone should come in old clothes and straw hats said McKellar. Lorch said "I hope this will be a memorable week-end for everyone."

Car Park Saturday For Asia

The SHARE Parking Campaign has collected over $400.00. Of this $12.00 came from the Ottawa-Argo's football game.

The SAC granted permission to SHARE ot use various suitable parking lots around the campus to sell parking space to people with cars going to the football games.

Volunteers are needed to help park the cars before the football game next Saturday. Anyone interested is asked to get in touch with Dick Sonky at RA-3603.

Mock Parliament Bars New Independent Party

The exlusion of the Independent Progressives Association from the Mock Parliament "is a deliberate attempt to suppress student opinion on important issues" said Roger Bull IV UC, first vice president of the IPA.

The idea of the IPA originated two years ago after the Mock Parliament Elections. Last year the IPA applied for official recognition as university organization but failed in their attempt. This year however, they succeeded. The IPA applied last year for official recognigion as a party of the campus and thereby eligible to obtain seats in the parliament. This too was denied them; however, they obtained seven per cent of the vote by "marked in" ballots.

This year, with Caput backing, they again applied to Mock Parliament Committee for a place on the ballot but again it was denied them. The IPA thinks this is not exatcly fair as they feel they represent quite a sizeable block of student opinion.

Elections on campus are a straight party idea. Therefore, under the present setup it is impossible for an independent to obtain a seat in the Mock Parliament. The IPA doesn't oppose this but with their pseudo-party organization they feel they are important enough to ask for official standing as a political party.

After the support that the IPA received last year with little or no publicity, and a general feeling of much more sympathy this year, they feel that they could possibly do much better this year.

"It seems to us," said Ron Price, III Vic, President of the IPA, "that if the IPA are not admitted to the ballot, and should get a large 'write in' vote, the representative character of the House would be open to Question and the Parliament thrown into disrepute

The Independents feel that it is the other varsity political organizations that are blocking their entry into the parliament. The Mock Parliament Committee is made up of the Political Economics Club, and representatives of the political parties on campus.

Where On Earth?

CBC Cameramen Lost

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation filmed the wrong show last night. While the producers and the cast of the UC show, "Where on Earth?" waited patiently in the Women's Union Theatre for the cameramen, they were filming the dress rehearsal of "Dentantics" by mistake.

Ron Gould and Barb Menzies, co-producers of the UC musical comedy, had arranged with the CBC to have last night's rehearsal televised. The sets were erected especially for the filming, and the cast were assembled at the appointed time, but the CBC failed to arrive.

After some investigation the missing cameramen were found in Hart House Theatre filming the dress rehearsal of "Dentantics", which is being presented this Friday and Saturday.

The CBC had thought that last night's rehearsal of "Where on Earth?" was the dress rehearsal, and that it was to be in Hart House Theatre. As a result, when the cameramen found a dress rehearsal, in progress they assumed it was the UC show. They thereupon started filming this show that they would continue with their in ignorance of the fact that it was the wrong show.

When they discovered their mistake, Mr. Donaldson of CBC said filming of Dents' show, and would "Where on Earth?" on Wednesday evening, November 10th. Donaldson said "Dentantics" will possibly appear on "Tabloid", a CBLT news feature, sometime this weekend, and "Where on Earth?" would appear on Thursday evening, November 12th. This opening night of the show, which will be presented on November 12th, 13th, and 14th.

The televising of "Where on Earth?" was one of the many publicity features conducted by UC this year. On Saturday evening, at the final Blue and White Dance at Hart House, several of the principals of "Where on Earth?", will be singing five of the songs from the show with Art Hallman's orchestra.

At the rehearsal of the Dents' show, production manager, Al. Reinstein said, "This unexpected TV publicity gives the cast more incentive to work, and makes them feel like professionals."

Barm Menzies, co-producer of the UC show, stated that the rehearsal of "Where on Earth?" was continuing as scheduled, in spite of the postponed TV debut. "The cast and crew of the show are not disappointed, because of the mix-up, but are working even harder with a view to Wednesday night's rehearsal," said Miss Menzies.

Workshop

Anyone interested in reporting for the Varsity is invited to a Workshop to be held in the editorial office to-day from 1.00 to 2.00 p.m. These weekly Workshops are informal and highly informative. All those who have contributed articles during the past week as well as those who wish to begin will find it of great value. The offices are located in the basement of the SAC office. Bring your lunch.

What's Coming Up

Seven Artists

250th Concert On Sunday

The Hart House Music committee is celebrating its 250th Sunday evening count this Sunday night in a big way.

Seven performers will be on the platform, and they will play music of the 16th to the 18th centuries on instruments of that period.

Elizabeth Benson Guy will sing a group of songs, accompanied on on the harpsichord by Greta Kraus and on the viola da gamba by Wolfgang Grunsky.

In addition, Miss Kraus will perform solo works for harpsichord, and there will also be music for combinations of harpsichord and viols.

The same group that played the famed Hart House viols will play them this year — Doreen Hall, Joyce Grundy, Eileen Bordessa, Klemi Hambourg and Wolfgang Grunsky, the leader of the group. These viols were actually built in the 17th centrury.

Miss Kraus, harpsichordist, has also been heard before in Hart House. She is well known to listeners of the CBC concert series. Mrs. Kraus and Wolfgang Grunsky both received their traininf in Austria, and had established a musical reputation in Europe before coming to Canada. The other viol players are also Canadians who received their training at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Sunday Evening Concert tickets are free upon presentation of Hart House Member's card at the Hall Porter's Desk.

Modern French Play By UC French Club

"ROBINSON", a new comedy by Jules Supervielle, is this year's selection of the Cercle Francais of UC for their annual production at Hart House, Tues., Nov. 10. The play itself is a fantasy woven around the story of Robinson Crusoe but it has in fact very little resemblance to the Defoe novel. Supervielle has made it into a sort of fable whose main theme is the victory of love over time and death.

The title role is played by Hubert Fielden-Briggs. Others in the production are Jessie Gillespie as La Voix, and Charlott Schrager as Robinson's beloved John Walker; Fred Ward, Dave Jessel and Clarence Parsons have other important roles.

Supervielle might be compared with his famous contemporary Giradoux and even Christopher Fry, for they have the same gentleness and the same acceptance of life, without the cynicism that might be read into Supervielle's reminder of the faults of civilization, as seen from the Island. It is a "homage to life", rich in comedy, in tenderness, in delicious fancy and poetry.

The sets have been constructed with an eye towards the fantastical and thus the dominant qulaity will be a reduction to scenic elements. The costumes will be eighteenth century.

English summaries of the play's plot will be presented with the programmes on the night of the performance. By reading this summary, those not sufficiently acquainted with the French language, but who would be interested in seeing a modern French comedy, need not miss out on this singular opportunity.

unbeaten record.

The Blues, however, are up against it on Saturday for, for the first time in many years they have been plagued with injuries, all incurred since the last venue. Ron Finch, the dazzling left-winger, is out for the season with a splintered bone in the ankle, as is Sol Liz who had his nose broken against RMC. At the moement Karl Tamberg, Howie Ashbourne and Bill Leach are recovering from various injuries, and it has now been found that Mike Lethbridge suffered a concussion in the game against OAC on Wednesday. It looks then as if a much-vaunted Varsity defense will have to carry the load for Saturday's game.

Just how well the forwards have been doing can be seen in the goals for and against records. The Varsity team has scored 38 goals in league games while allowing but four against.

Little Political Interest By Chinese In Malaya

The vast majority of the Chinese people are not interested in politics," said Mr. D. S. Armstrong, Canadian Trade Commissioner to Singapore, at the Commerce Club luncheon yesterday. Armstrong, graduate of Commerce 4T2, stated that the Chinese people in Malaya generally desire only to be let alone, and do not care about one side or the other in the struggle in Malaya.

Armstrong, who is in Toronto to give a series of talks on Canadian Trade in the Far East, said that conditions in Malaya had greatly improved in recent years. However, it is still dangerous to travel at night or on back roads due to the Communist "bandits" who infest the country.

It requires the services of 400,000 British troops and native police to maintain order in the colony, although there are only about 5,000 active communists. The jungle terrain of the country makes it extremely difficult to police.

Armstrong also stated that the vast resettlement program had resulted in the forcible shifting of 400,000 people from small clearings near the jungle edge where th communists could make use of them, to large and well guarded villages. This resettlement program has cut off a great deal of aid to the Malayan reds. It has also improved medical and educational services for the natives, since these services are easier to provide in larger centres.

General Templar, British High Commissioner in Malaya, has sometimes been forced to use strong-arm tactics, but he has realized that such methods will inevitably recoil on the government.

Armstrong also gave a brief description of Canada's overseas Trade service, and said that the service was doing much to improve bilateral trade between the other countries of the world and Canada.

Ignorance Ia

You've seen them in movies. You've heard them on radio. Sleepless, unshaven men in perpetual fedoras, talking like Hemingway around their cigars, they cover the town with their feet on the desk, hammering typewriters with ten fingers at one elbow. They put on a cynical act, but you can't find better guys. If they see you caught in a burning building they'll call the fire department, right after they phone in the story. And they won't open your jugular unless there's a byline in it. Wonderful guys, reporters. Now you can be one.

A reporter's greatest asset is his studied ignorance. If you have never studied ingnorance, the Varsity's staff of experts (in all fields) is offering a free course to all new contributors. this invitation isn't for just anyone, just for those dumb enough to take advantage of it. But if you want to report, report to Grif Cunningham or Aubrey Golden in the Varsity office.

Fred Ross, joval CUP editor, who handles liaison with other college publications, needs an assistant. The only qualification is willingness, and she should also be 36, 24, 35, Object; liaison.

Colombo Plan Administrator Stresses Asia To UN Club

"We need Asia for a free world," said Mr. Nick Cavell, at the UN Club yesterday afternoon. "Civilizations have failed because they did not take certain enlightened steps when such were necessary. They were overthrown by barbarians.

"If we do not take the necessary enlightened steps now, the free world will be overrun by the totalitarians. Once under the totalitarian grip it is not easy to escape," he added.

Cavell lived in India for seventeen years, and in the first world war he fought with the Indian cavalry in Mesopotania. He is now the Administrator of the Canadian Colombo Plan.

Hunger and poverty are the important elements in the Asian problem.

Quoting Confucius: "An empty stomach does not dwell on high principles," Mr. Cavell went on to say that every totalitarian banner promises Bread. "We must not only promise, but implement our promises," he stated.

After ennumerating the various UN and American organizations who are attempting to cope with the problem, he discussed the Colombo Plan. It is a Commonwealth plan, drawn up in Colombo, Ceylon, and was designed to help the Governments of Pakistan, Ceylon, and India build necessary, constructive, and permanent projects. He outlined various projects, now under way which are designed to make possible the industrial and agricultural expansion of these Asiatic countries. Mr. Cavell pointed out that we do not, like some of the other organizations in the field, dictate policy to the governments involved. We treat them as equals, accepting their judgement of the particular problems and placing our experts directly under their jurisdiction.

Cavell based his talk on a 40,000 mile tour of Burma, India, Pakistan, and Ceylon which he made in 1952 and a similar one which he made this year.

Globe Editor Asserts Newspaper Reporters Must Stress Accuracy

Accuracy is the most important quality of a good newspaper reporter, said Mr. Robert Turnbull, City Editor of the Globe and Mail, in his lecture on News and room.

Turnbull said that the best definition of news seemed to him to be anything timely, which would be of interest and significance to the reader, or which could be made so. He said that the news was often slanted by the different papers, so that some are sensationalist, while others are more interested in the social or political aspects of the facts. He said that every paper is commercial and out for revenue, and yet is faced with the problem of whether to inform or entertain.

"Clear thinking must precede and accompany good writing," Turnbull said. The reporter must be accurate so that his editor can back him up, and the facts in news stories must be triple-checked. "There is no room for slovenly news gathering. You must have the important facts at the front of your mind while the less important remains for colour and background."

He emphasized that a story lives or dies by the lead since it is the first sentence which catches the eye. He considers the old rule of the five W's (When, Where, Why, Who, What) still a good guide.

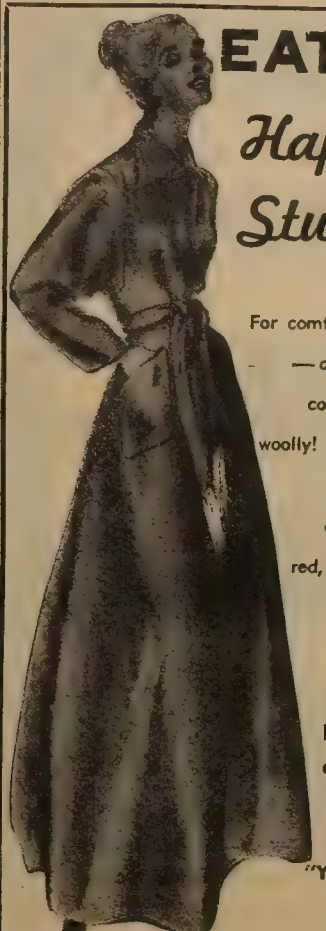
The reporter must learn by experience to write rapid, fluent, accurate English, which can still convey excitement, although it should be so simple and direct that it is almost Biblical. He warned the audience to be judicious in the use of adjectives, since "reporters are paid to write news, not novels."

While all aspiring reporters claim to be crackerjack feature-writers, he said that this does more harm than good, and it is much better to groom oneself to be a good all-round reporter, able to do anything and everything, as well as to write good features.

Mr. Turnbull pointed out that the value of working on The Varsity was in getting a taste of the newspaper business, and finding out if you really like it, as well as getting a knowledge of the mechanical side of the production of the paper. Such experience is not much good in applying for a job, because the reporter is judged by his performance not his past.

J Van Camp Gives Talk To Foresters

The role of public Relations that must be carried on by the practicing Forester was stressed last night by the General-Manager of the Canadian Forestry Association, Mr. J. L. Van Camp. He was addressing a meeting of the Foresters' Club, in the Music Room of Hart House.



Van Camp is a graduate in Forestry from the University of Toronto and has worked on the staff of Michigan State College, and Perdue University. He is Chairman of the Quebec branch of Canadian Institute of Forestry, and of the standing committee on Woodlot management.

Illustrating his lecture with slides, Van Camp stressed the importance of Forests in Outdoor Recreation. "There is still a great lack of correct land use," he said.

Women To Have Chance To Share Saturday Lunch With Men In Hart House

Tomorrow's football luncheon in Great Hall is open to both members of Hart House and women, escorted or unescorted.

Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, emphasized yesterday that the pre-Western game luncheon was open to all.

Meal hours Saturday noon are 11.45 a.m. to 1.30 p.m. This gives eaters lots of time to wind their way up Philospher's Walk to Varsity Stadium for 2.00 p.m. game time.

No tickets or reservations are required for the meal. Both members and women will pay for the luncheon in the regular way at Great Hall cash registers in the kitchen.

"It's our hope that most of the student football game spectators will take advantage of the open house in Great Hall at tomorrow's luncheon," McDowell said yesterday.

Tonight's invitation dinner in Great Hall is open to members and their wife or ladyfriend. However, reservation tickets are needed for this meal.

It is being served between 6.15 and 6.45 p.m. Fires will be lit in both the East Common Room and Great Hall. Coffee will be served in the East Common Room following tonight's dinner.

Finn Choir In Toronto On Nov. 16

SHARE is bringing to Massey Hall on November 16, the Helsinki Male Choir. They will be under the auspices of the Society of Finnish Advancement in Toronto.

This will be their first appearance in Toronto since 1938. They are on a 5-week tour of the United States and Canada during which they will sing at a concert before President Eisenhower.

The choir was established in 1883, and is made up of young university students who sing for a hobby. The conductor of the group is Martii Turunen.

During their stay in Toronto they will be guests of the Hart House Glee Club for lunch. They will also be welcomed in Convocation Hall by President Smith and Chancellor Beatty, and will be the guests of Lieutenant-Governor Louns Breithaupt.

Game Gun

At the football game tomorrow afternoon the University contingent of the COTC is going to put on a short artillery demonstration. At half time a piece of artillery will be pulled out onto the gridiron and the COTC will give a demonstration on how to fire the gun when in a hurry.

The whole show will last only about five minutes and they will be shooting a blank cartridge.

Annual Show Of Twin Arts Coming Soon

All undergraduate students of the university, who have a flair for painting and sculpture of any kind, are urged to exhibit their productions in the annual Undergraduate Art Exhibit, held this year from Dec. 7 to Dec. 21.

"This is an opportunity for undergrads, who have a secret or overt desire to express themselves in art, to bring their creative ability to the fore," said Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden of Hart House. He added that all techniques in oil, water color or sketches would be acceptable. McDowell felt that the university offered much picturesque material for artists, but that any treatment of any subject would be exhibited.

Part of this year's show will be selected for the Canadian University Art Show, which comprises the best efforts of undergrads all across Canada. The latter show, which is organized by Hart House, will be held in the Art Gallery there later in the year.

Exhibitors must submit their objets d'art" in suitable condition for exhibition to the Warden's Office before Dec. 10.

Moiseiwitch And The TSO

Wednesday's performance of the TSO and guest artist Benno Moiseiwitch presented to the audience at Massey Hall a mixture of the over-known and the very new. The opening orchestral work, Adagio and Fugue in C Minor by Mozart is a compostion rarery heard. In the Adagio, the rehabilitated strings were noteworthy for a sustained, rich tone while tossing the theme from one section to another it was more controlled than the Fugue while maintaining the interest.

The orchestra sounded its best in Kodaly's Suite from Hary Janos. This contemporary work contains humour, vitality and tenderness, all of which were well portrayed under Sir Ernest's conductorship. The vigorous opening was followed by a winsome simplicity in the section called The Fairy Tale Begins. The second section was played with clarity and precision which enabled this listener to imagine the peasant's wonder at the intricate machinery of the clock which it described.

A mournful song introduced on the viola gave way to a dream-like athmosphere, to be sharply contrasted with the music depicting the supposed conquest over Napoleon in part four. The intended mockery was very evident in the use of the brass and percussions.

I was very disappointed in the choice of piece by the guest artist, Benno Moiseiwitch. Throughout his performance it was made obvious that he is technically and personally a great musicain. Unfortunately, Rachmaninof's 24 Variations on a Theme of Paganini never allowed us to get more than a glimpse of his true worth.

Moiseiwitch was always the master, making up for a somewhat thin orchestration. His variations in tone and touch were of an excellence seldom heard with such distinction. The usual Rachmaninof sentimentality was handled with simplicity and grace which created an atmosphere of tranquility rather than "hyper-emotionalism."

His touch varied from a beautifully sustained legato to the nimbleness of a toe-dancer. In the short piano solo was noted a sparkle and life which could have been put to a better use in a concerto cadenza. Not until the 18th century variation does the composition provide any real strength; so, it was not until this last third that Moiseiwitch was able to build up to something concrete.

The Dvorak Symphony from the New World is very well-known, but contains no greater merits than his first or second in my opinion, although it is a more difficult work to accomplish. Nothing new was heard in the rendering, and unfortunately, much of the old was lacking. The orchestra certainly was not playing as a unit. Mr. Flore though, is to be congratulated for his quiet, moving flute solo in the second movement in which the essential sadness of the symphony really came across. In general I feel this performance lacked depth, life and fullness.

Next Play By Jupiter Opens Wed

Jupiter Theatre's first production in their new theatre at Ryerson opens Wednesday Nov. 11. It is Right You Are by Pirandello, written in 1916, and adapted by Eric Bentley, an American author.

It was originally called, Right You Are If You Think You Are, and presents the search after truth as visualized by ordinary mortals. Pirandello says that because of varying backgrounds and experience, truth is seldom the same for any of us.

This is a light-hearted play. The audience is brought into intimate contact with the actors.

It is directed by Joseph Furst, a European actor and director. This is his first production in Canada, but his 585th production in 17 years. He is also experienced in movie direction.

Cast includes Garth Magwood, Gerry Stovin, James Doohan, Peter Scott, Colin Eaton, Stephan Kerr, Karen Glahn, Billie Twas, Lois Ould, Shiela Gay and Wendy Aitken.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

THE MUSTANGS

Well, the Mustangs are due in this weekend for a little social activity. After all Vic Obeck's yak, yak about "under-the-table scholarships" it will be more than interesting to see the two chief "offenders" square off. One of the things you can say about Vic is that he is probably the best publicity man in the loop.

The pride and joy of the purple and white got off to a shaky start by dropping a loose one to the Blues by the score of 11-1. Since then they have been a regular ball of fire by sweeping all and sundry including our Toronto hopefuls, in London, 13-10.

Most interest will likely centre around two of the best college players in these parts. They are Gino Fracas of the Mustangs and our Honest Steve Oneschuk. Gino was the man that scored 12 of Western's 13 down in London on Thanksgiving weekend and Steve of course is that 81 sweater that boiled over for 20 against McGill last weekend.

After the Blues-Mustang game in London Fracas had a total of 27 points in the scoring race. Since then, in two games, he has only been able to score six points, all converts. Steve on the other hand kept plugging scoring four TD's in two games as well as some valuable converts. The result is that Steamboat Steve now leads the Intercollegiate point race with 37 points.

So the winner of the points race will likely be the one who scores the most points Saturday.

ONE-EYED BENNY

One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, has been awarded a raise in pay for meritorious service. Of 14 games played to date, Benny has picked 11 winners for a batting average of 78.5 per cent.

Benny has suggested that Toronto will win this weekend by two touchdowns and Queen's will take the lowly Marauders by three DT's. Fortunately we have been betting as our friend Benny has suggested otherwise we would be broke for the Western weekend.

END NOTES:

Joe Scanlon, who was one of the hardest working writers that this department ever had is now Sports Editor of The Carleton, at Carleton College . . . only one undergrad signed on for the Sr. Harrier which was scheduled for today. That's th eeasy way of winning a race. . . . It is to be hoped that student apathy has not spread to the field of Intramural Athletics.

Top Two to Tangle Tomorrow Varsity All Set For Mustangs

By JIM PROUDFOOT

On October 10th, when the Varsity Blues did a fold in Little Memorial Stadium in London and dropped a 13-10 decision to the Western Mustangs after leading 10-0, high on the list of factors was the Blues' second line of defence. This group, popularly known as linebackers, developed large, gaping holes in the second half and Gino Fracas and company utilized wide sweeps around the end to gallop at will through these apertures.

Benny Says—

Our mathematical-minded sports editor has made extensive computations leading to the discovery that One-eyed Benny has been correct 78 percent of the time so far this season. These figures mean nothing to Benny. Statistics? I don't know from nothin' about them. What's to figure? All I know is who's gonna win da games," he said.

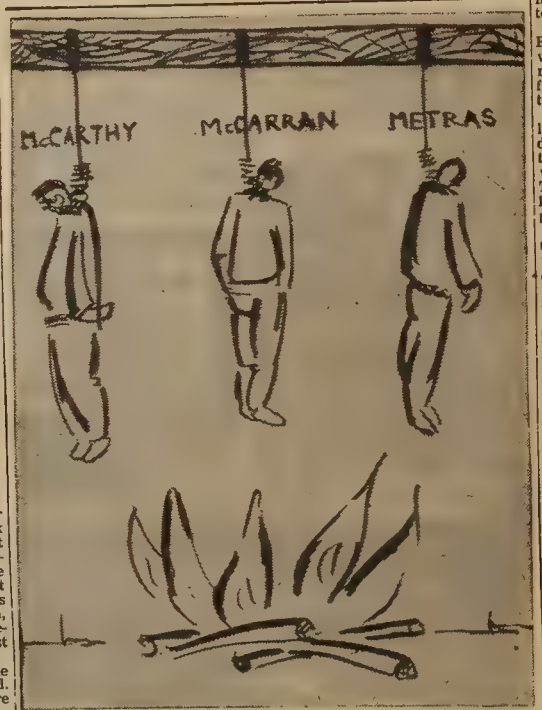
"So who's gonna win Satiddy?" we asked.

"Well, Western an' Toronna. I figure Blues to win it by two touchdowns. 19-6, I guess. Queen's will eat McMaster about 26-11."

And so saying he disappeared into the night.

Saturday, when John Metras herds his Mustangs into Varsity Stadium, such holes aren't likely to be found. In the time that has elapsed since that October afternoon, Varsity coach Bob Masterson has revamped his defensive setup almost completely. The results have been quite impressive: the Blues haven't been scored on in two games and their defensive record — 20 points against in four outings, or five points a game — is the best in the league.

Halfback Pete Maik was injected in the lineup against McGill Saturday and played corner Linebacker. He went pretty well and will be on the secondary against Western. Roy McMurtry continues in a linebacker spot, as well as playing tackle on offence; Bruce Johnson moves into a tackle position on defence.



Another factor in the Blues favour tomorrow will be the fact that Gene Chorostecki and Fred Smale, who weren't around for that 13-10 tussle, are now playing end. Chorostecki played his first game last week and, with that under his belt, ought to be a definite asset. Rookie Ted Kennedy and Don Smith combine with these two to give the Blues easily the best quartet of ends in the league. Smith has shaken off an infection which has bothered him and will be ready for action tomorrow.

Frank Palermo's sprained ankle has not come around and he'll sit this one out but another guard, Don Mattason is ready to rejoin the team. Jack Meaker and Jim Keffer moved up from the intermediates to replaced them last week and showed well against the Redmen. Meaker is a likely starter but coach Masterson would like to work Keffer into the line-up, too.

Another returnee will be centre Red Wismer whose absence last week left the Blues without a regular centre. John Chisholm filled in capably but Wismer's return will relieve the pressure.

"We would have beaten them last time," Masterson said yesterday, by way of appraising his team's chances. "The breaks always mean a lot, of course. They're a very good team with lots of speed. One thing, we're prepared in every way."

Blue Notes — The Blues would move into a first-place tie with the Mustangs by beating them . . . A sidelight to the game will be the scoring race between Varsity's Sterling Steve Oneschuk and Western's Gino Fracas. Right now, Oneschuk has a four-point lead. He has 37 points, Fracas 33 . . . Queen's Gaels move into Hamilton tomorrow to play the luckless McMaster Marauders . . . Western's only important injury has been to speedy back Byron Young who is likely to miss this game. Lorne Hunter is the probable replacement.

Aggies In Town Baby Blues Play

This could be it for the Varsity Intermediates. To-day at 2 o'clock in the Stadium they meet the OAC Aggies for their third league game of the season. A Varsity victory in this match would mean the Shaw Trophy for the Seconds, for the third year in a row.

The last time the Varsitys met the Aggies was two weeks ago in Guelph. The Aggies went all out for their homecoming weekend crowd and, but for some shoddy quarterbacking on the last play of the game, might have tied the Baby Blues. The attempted Guelph field goal was blocked and Varsity carried home a close 14-13 victory.

The Aggies are a squad without a great deal of polish, but what they lack in the brain department they more than make up in burliness. The success of the Guelph attack in the last game was not so much a case of smart play-calling or of their runners finding big holes, as of Varsity tacklers being trampled under the flying Aggie hooves. Many of the Aggie gains were made by runners carrying not only the ball but several Varsity players as well. They raise 'em robust out on the farm.

John McManns is not worried by the farmer-boys from Guelph. John feels that his boys are more than the equal of their opponents, and we'll go all the way with him on that. The Baby Blues were greatly weakened for their last game against Tyerson and played 30 points off their usual, beating the Lambs by only 27-0. For this league game, however, the Intermediates are to be strengthened by the return to action of some of their best linemen. John Iglar is back in the camp after taking a rest last week. Bills Miller and McDonald are also returning to the lineup. Both men have been out with identical ligament injuries since the first game of the season, against Western Colts. Pete Polecrone will see action for the first time this season.

Norm Levine will miss the game and probably the next one as well. Norm picked up a hairline fracture

Hoopsters Gather Steam

By LEO MADDEN

Twenty-five of the large number of candidates trying out for this year's edition of the basketball Blues have survived the first cut. Now that the group is down to a workable size Dalt White can begin the serious business of shaping them into a team of intercollegiate calibre. He has been working these boys every night this week and already it is obvious what is needed. Due to graduation and scholastic difficulties the team has lost all but one of last season's "good little men." This leaves the team with an annoying lack of ball handlers.

Dalt, realizing this need, has been concentrating on half-handling in this week's practice sessions. He hopes to find among the ten or twelve small men he has, the likes of Bill Huycke, Gary Glover and Pete Potter. He has been running drills which will improve ball-handling.

The team has a long way to go before they will be ready for any games. They have a month before they meet Niagara University. However, they will have to be up for that game as Niagara was one of the better American college teams last season and they haven't been hit by graduation and scholastic difficulties.

In this week's workouts it was good to see two of the boys working well together, the two being George Stulac and John Sheppard. It may be that these two will provide a backbone for the team. Dalt White has expressed his approval of Sheppard who is gaining more confidence every time out.

Doug Scott and Dave McCuaig, a couple of mainstays on last year's intermediate team are pulling for positions on the senior club this year. McCuaig uses his one handed set shot to advantage and Scott, although a six-footer, likes to drive in for layups.

Dalt expects to make another cut early next week. After that he will be able to start working on a definite offense and defense.

St. Hilda's Over Irish Vic Winner

The semi-finals of the women's interfaculty softball loop were played Thursday. Final scores, St. Hilda's I beat St. Mike's I 22-6, and Vic I beat PHE II 15-8.

St. Hilda's and St. Mike's had a close first inning, ending in a three-all tie.

In the second, Kirpatrick scored the only tally for St. Mike's.

St. Mikes was doomed to failure in the third. St. Hilda's scored 13 runs and then shut out their opponents, leaving them too winded to do anything in the last inning.

Manuel and Cawkell bagged two runs in the fourth for St. Mike's to end the battle in victory for St. Hilda's by a 22-6 lead.

The other half of the semi-finals was a tremendous fight between PHE II and Vic I.

Jackie Wickware, Pat Cowman, Mary Foster (with a homer), and Phil Andrews scored for Vic, to put their team ahead by one run at the end of the first.

In the second, Inger Olson starred when her homer brought in three runs for PHE. In the next inning, Phys-eds couldn't get past the Vic pitcher, and had to retire without a badly needed run.

The game ran to the top of the fourth inning with Cohoon coming in to tally for the under-dogs. The final score at the end of three-and-a-half innings of speedy softball was 15-8 in favour of Vic I.

From Start To Stop Forestry Up On Top

By MCISHE REITER

The leaf-green of Forestry is wearing the winner's laurel for the first time this season, after defeating the Trinity Panthers 2-0 last night. It was a black day for the Panthers. Going into the game the Red and Black were in second spot of Division I, seemingly a sure thing for the play-offs. All they had to do was beat Dents and Forestry, and they could prepare for the semis. Trinity's Panthers had better pull up their sagging pantaloons-they have troubles.

Certainly the lads from across the speedway showed no evidence of championship power as the Woodsmen tied them in or pulled them apart, almost at will. The men of R. J. Gray came nowhere near the form which brought them into second place in their league. Sure, the score was close, but the play tells the real story and that little saga doesn't even mention the Trinitys. From start to stop it was Forestry on top.

In all their games the boys in Green have thrown a powerful line at their opposition and have stalled the most powerful attacks in the league. Their big trouble has been on the offensive. Last night the Forestry offensive was frequently brilliant. The brilliance always faded, though, when it should have glowed brightest when their scoring chances were best. Twice the Foresters settled for singles when they seemed to be in the spot for major scores. This wasn't all due to the Forestry fade. Trinity are a strong bunch and when they were in real trouble they played like champs.

Tom White threw a pass game at Gray's Panthers that the Blacks had difficulty holding down. This was a real surprise, for the passing game has beaten the Foresters in most of their other starts. St. Mike's edged the Tree-men on a pass on the final play of the game. Trinity also defeated the Woodchoopers on a pass, in their last meeting. This time the Foresters took to their opponents game and beat them at it. Greatest display of the new Forestry passing power came in the second half with the Woodchoppers scrimmaging on their own 40. White threw 15 yards to Jim Waddell who smashed through the Trinity's to the Panther 30. Another pass to Dave Murray carried to the 10. And then—the fadeout.

But an offense through the air would be of small worth to the Foresters if their opposition could continue to move as freely on passes against them as they have up to now. The big hope for Forestry, and what gives meaning to their play-off talk is their new pass defence. The Foresters spent the afternoon tipping Trinity flings harmlessly into the dirt, or intercepting them. Star Woodman booter, John McLelland, who kicked one of the Foresters' singles snared a beauty at the Trinity 30. Bob Armstrong added the other Green single at this point.

The Foresters are a small team, with strength far below that of their opponents, but they have shown that they can match the well-stocked squads even with their small numbers and now that they have come up with an offence, the Woodsmen are thinking title thoughts. Two victories in their next two games would bring them into the running. It's not at all unlikely that we are watching a Forestry comeback that may lead to Varsity Stadium.

But predictions are for the birds —the only good bet, as I see it, is Skule. They still look to be the best.

Baby Blues

of his ankle in scrimmage with the Blues last week. Walt Schmida is suffering from an attack of the flu and is out. One game with the Blues has sidelined Jim Keffer for the rest of the season—no injury but he is now ineligible for Intermediate competition for the rest of the year.

This is the last Intermediate home game for '53, and John McManus expects it to be a good one for the Varsitys. "We played a bad game up there and "it that they played over their heads. We'll take them this time." Thus saith John McManus, and we'll bet he's right.

Second Title On Line For Soccer Seniors

By BILL LEACH

This Saturday morning will herald a great day in the history of the Varsity senior soccer team. The Blues, now playing in two inter-collegiate leagues, have the opportunity to become double champions by defeating McGill whom they will meet on the U of T campus at noon.

Varsity has clinched the western division championship with one game left to play, the outcome of which will not affect the standings. In this division the Blues have proved themselves the supreme masters by winning all games and scoring a total of 25 goals while allowing but 3 counters against them. Thus Varsity will reclaim the Blackwood Trophy which they had lost last season to Western and McMaster (joint champions) for the first time in eleven years.

The Blues' standing in the eastern division is also a happy one although they can expect a hard struggle before they clinch it. In Montreal, McGill proved themselves the team to beat by holding the Blues to a one-all tie, in a game which the Redmen were unlucky not to win. By virtue of the fact that RMS in the surprise game of the year beat Montreal, the Blues can settle for a tie on Saturday and still emerge champions. This would be a great triumph for coach Bobby Auld in his first year at the helm for the Blues would down to insignificance any solid opinion. Last year, the Russian student exchange had the support of the majority of Canadian students, but it was thrown out because a few small universities threatened to resign from the Federation. NFCUS this year was also very weak-kneed on the question of investigating associate membership in the International Union of Students; it neither said a definite no nor a definite yes.

On national scholarships, rail fares, book prices, etc., it's the same old story. Report after report after report with nothing concrete done.

PER CAPITA REVENUE:

NFCUS, when it does get more finances, puts the increase into administrative costs. The fact is that, even with 30 cents more per head, it finds it cannot do any more than it has up to 1953. The embryonic plans made in Montreal recently do not warrant the chance "to see what can be done" because they are relatively the same plans that NFCUS has had for the past several years (and nothing has been done about them in the past).

NATIONAL PRESIDENT:

So we have a national president, but too much hope is being placed on his shoulders. He may publicize NFCUS locally but that will not give a strong national or international policy and program. NFCUS is weak locally, not because it doesn't get a periodic visitor, but because it hasn't a strong program that can be put into effect.

HISTORY:

NFCUS is no different than any other National Union of Students. The British, French and German Unions began after the war, as did NFCUS. But they have shown a determination which the Federation has not shown. We therefore, should not support NFCUS financially or otherwise. What NFCUS has done we can also do with the money we save from not being in the Federation.

Women Hear Talk

Dr. H. M. McLuhan, St. Michael's College English professor, will speak at the Hart House Library Evening this Tuesday in the Hart House Library at 7.30 p.m.

His topic—Anonymous History: A New Art for Industrial Man—concerns Dr. McLuhan's work in the study of communications. These studies and his recent book—The Mechanical Bride have established Dr. McLuhan as one of the leading scholars in the field of communications.

The Hart House Library Committee has magnanimously thrown this evening open to women on the campus.

The speaker is part of a seminar studying communications and concepts of space and time, which also includes Dr. E. S. Carpenter and Dr. Easterbrook.

Open Excuse To An Open Letter

THE INDEPENDENT PROGRESSIVE ASS'N

The open letter of the I.P.A. contains a number of errors, omissions, and misleading implications.

1—Last year's Parliament Committee recommendations are in no way binding on this year's committee. There is no continuity between committees. Besides, this year's committee certainly hopes to improve on the work of last year's.

2—The stipulations that groups seeking representation on the Committee should submit a list of executives, and a programme, and should hold at least one public meeting, were made by the Political Economy Club not the Model Parliament Committee. They were made to determine what groups should send representatives to the Committee, not what groups should be on the ballot. The Constitution of the Political Economy Club gives the executive the right to determine the size and function of the Model Parliament Committee, but does not allow the executive to make the Committee's decisions!

3—Nothing could be more contradictory than a party of independents combined to get representation as independents. The Political Economy Club executive concluded that while John Roberts should sit on the Committee until it decided its status, it should NOT approve of the IPA as a political party.

4—The Model Parliament is an attempt to give students participation in practical political affairs. It is not a sounding board for student grass-roots movements active only at election time. The Model Parliament is representative in that it attempts to show how the students would vote in a federal election. The IPA has deliberately ignored the fact, carefully explained to its representative, that the Model Parliament is not a duplicate of the seating at Ottawa, but is a model of the federal parliamentary system.

5—The IPA has correctly observed that constituencies are impossible in campus elections. The committee has found a means of giving any independent, not just IPA independents, a chance to sit in the Model Parliament. Certainly this is more just to give one small, vociferous group of independents special recognition that would make a mock, instead of a model, of Parliament.

The Executive of the Political Economy Club.

Violation Of Rights

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It was very encouraging to read of the stand taken by the Editors of The Varsity in regard to the "effigy crisis."

I find on the other hand disappointment in the fact that students of this University do not take up your pleas for further discussion to a greater degree.

The rabble-rousers for academic freedom and standard bearers of democratic principles are apparently only inspired to verbal action when a section of their newspaper is removed.

Last year, upon the deletion of the Sports Page from The Varsity a hue and cry of "undemocratic", "dictatorship", "triumvirate", and "smothering of the press" was heard in every corner of the campus. Many of these people, (who usually did not read the page anyway), based their criticisms solely on a violation of democratic rights. Yet it is beyond me how this element and others at the University can remain silent, when all that is vital to the democratic way of life is not only being shaken but virtually destroyed, and the shame of it all, not really by one man, but actually by an apathetic people. I therefore congratulate all the demonstrators of last Saturday night for the first sign of real awakening.

The American people must be frightened for I am unaware of any such action on the part of American college students. Perhaps this is for fear of investigation. Thank God, we are in Canada, distant from such inquisitions.

Many students perhaps agree with one reader that "such demonstrators will not stop McCarthy"; however, I feel it will prevent the gravity of this cancerous disease of another "ism." Of course this warning to many may sound ridiculous, yet remember only a border separates us from our Southern neighbours.

To the demonstrators and to others in agreement I suggest, for a next step, that wires be sent to all who have been investigated by "The Committee" and those now in the process. In this wire I would urge the use of a powerful moral weapon, once used by a great man, namely the "passive resistance" policy of Gandhi. We free people must use our influence.

Totalitarian

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In reply to the one point in Mr. A. J. Bryant's letter appearing in Wednesday's Varsity re: Romanism and Communism, this is the first time we have realized that Anglicans (Trinity-type) were in favor of the tactics employed by the Papacy.

To any honest student of history it is evident that the methods of Romanism have been totalitarian. Even today we read of persecutions of Protestants in Spain, Colombia and Brazil where the hierarchy of the Church of Rome holds sway. How then can Mr. Bryant blandly state: "As in the past the Church" (obviously Roman) "is proving an ever present help in time of need"?

Whose Grasp Of Theatre?

Editor,
The Varsity:

Never, sir, in the seventeen and one-half years since I acquired the ability to read, never have I read such pseudo-critical inanity as your editorial post mortem on Robert Gill's outstanding production of Antigone. I am impressed by your profound knowledge of Greek tragedy, which enables you to announce categorically: "Through adaptation and translation, the play has been reduced to a work very remote from high tragedy and only slightly reminiscent of drama on any level . . . None of the original sense of soul-purging emotion of fine drama had been left." Although I do not pretend to pronounce pontifically on what is and what is not drama, I do suggest that in order to prevent being drowned in a sea of derision, you develop a modicum of curitical taste, or exhibit some modesty.

It is unquestionably true that the political principles embodied in the Sophoclean work differ from those of Anouilh. Indeed, it is impossible for the modern mind to appreciate the Sophoclean version of the conflict between Antigone and Creon in the manner in which the Greeks did, for we have re-interpreted the roles and rights of individual and state. But to say that the situation has changed its meaning for us is not to say that it has lost its meaning, or its tragic implications.

If one were to criticize Anouilh, one might contend that he has not drawn Creon with sufficient sympathy. There are moments when the Chorus comes to the verge of making a villain of the king, but throughout most of the play the conflict between Antigone and her ruler is presented with a power and simplicity which lift it out of its particularity and reveal it in its full tragic significance as an exemplar of the struggle between moral custom and political necessity.

But, O Editor, you obviously missed this. You missed the brilliant employment of the formal principles of Greek tragedy which unify the emotional effect of the play and place it in the aesthetic framework needed for Aristotelian catharsis. You missed the careful combination of form, costume, and setting which suggest an almost deceptive timelessness and universality. You missed some of the best performances and direction seen on the campus in recent years. Indeed, O Editor, if your "review" exhibits your grasp of the theatre, why don't you miss it completely? There's usually a good, gory, soul-searching fight on TV.

Live Dangerously

One of the seven wonders of this campus is without doubt the fact that almost no students have as yet been injured in their fight against speeding traffic through the heart of the campus.

Without question, Hoskin Ave. is the worst offender. Admittedly, the city has put up an amber flasher at the pedestrian crosswalk, but students with years' experience will tell you that there has been no abating of the speed villains. Too many students are literally forced to close their eyes and listen to the squeal of brakes, if they are to make their lecture on time.

It seems that any solution the students could find, would be practical. Obviously, a tunnel would find most favor with the students, and anything to get the rabble off the street would please the motorist.

The corner of Hoskin and St. George is almost in the same class. Going to a nine-o'clock lecture, it is pointless to try to cross the street on a green light. Pedestrians are simply left out of the picture. Again it seems we must wait till disaster descends on us before something is done.

Granted, the traffic engineer has a problem here, but it seems that traffic would be speeded up if pedestrians were off the street when cars are making the left-hand turn. Special pedestrian lights, holding up all motor traffic for a moment, are in use on a number of corners in the city, and it seems they might be justified here.

The situation on the crosswalk on St. George is not nearly as crucial. But even here, very few motorists would dream of the pedestrian crosswalk half-way down the street. Prominent pedestrian crosswalk signs would seem to be warranted.

Even if the city is obviously not interested in the welfare of students at the University of Toronto, one would expect the University administration to take some interest. But even they in their Ivory Tower, will not break out in a rash unless they are made aware of the dangers that exist. It would seem that students here preferred to live dangerously.

But who wants to live forever?

We All Prefer "Freedom"

The Editor,
The Varsity;

Cheers to Paul Bacon for resigning! At last someone has the courage to stand up to the persistently broad-minded" attitude of The Varsity. It seems to be the smart thing to do to criticize the West and the United States in particular. We have no admiration for Senator McCarthy and his extremist tactis, but if students spend so much time fighting McCarthyism they will have no time or energy left to fight Communism which, if allowed to undermine our way of life, will destroy everything for which so many Canadians died in two world wars. All the academic arguments for free speech sound very fine, but we wonder how The Varsity would fare under a Communist government if it managed to take over Canada we shudder to think. The editors seem to assume that we all prefer supporting this freedom" at the expense of being barred from entry to the United States. Here they are indeed standing on lofty principles, but when you get down to everyday facts, a great many of us have no desire whatsoever to be prevendd from that good relations with the United States, are more important than good relations with Communistic forces.

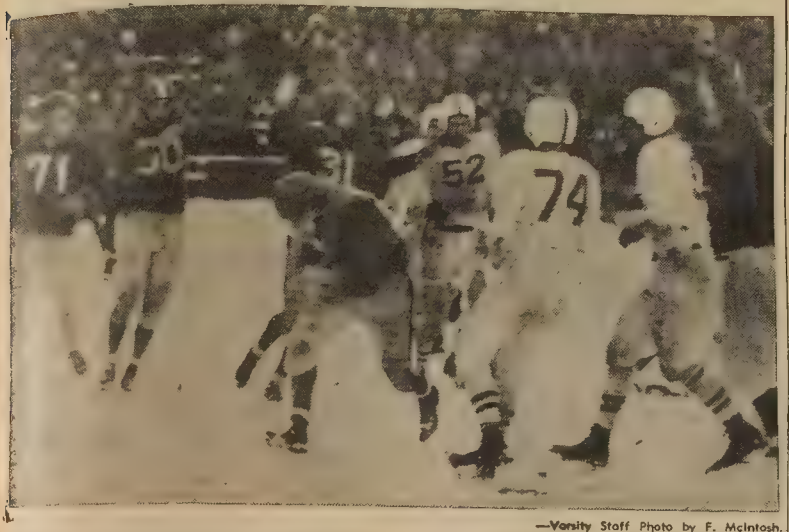
Poor Clucks

Dear Felix:

Let me tell you what I saw the other day. Some members of the Clue Clucks Clan, a Scotch detective agency, burnt an effigy of Joe, just like Guy Fawkes.

One of them gave me the lowdown afterwards. It seems that they had been investigating Joe for some time, and had found out he had been painting some of their clients red.



As a result they were ordered to get rid of Joe, so they decided to burn him. Unfortunately, they couldn't get into the USA because of the McCarran Act, and they had to settle for an effigy instead.

Please don't let it slip out that they only burnt an effigy, or the poor clucks won't get paid.

BLUES BLANK WESTERN

All He Needs Is Skis

Al Haig (71), Gene Chorostecki (50) and Roy McMurty (31) can't believe their eyes as their Varsity teammate, Phil Muntz, roars between Western's Don Killinger (52) and Garnet Mason (74) to score the Blues' second touchdown in Saturday's 12-0 conquest of Western Mustangs at Varsity Stadium. The snowdrifts were no obstacle to rookie Muntz who gained 106 yards all by himself.

Varsity Up At Top Muntz, Tedder Tally

By JIM PROUDFOOT

You wouldn't be stretching a point too far by saying that this has been a season of pleasant surprises for Varsity's intercollegiate football team. One of the most pleasant has been a 5' 9", 190-pound blockbuster named Phil Muntz, who was called upon at the outset of the campaign to fill the boots of the injured fullback, Bob Kimoff. Muntz proved the key man in producing another stirring surprise Saturday afternoon at glacial Varsity Stadium — a 12-0 win for Varsity Blues over Western Mustangs.

Muntz was Varsity's most prolific ground-gainer — he made 106 yards in 15 tries for an average gain of 7.1 yards — as the Blues got stronger and stronger, and son it going away. They started shakily but steadied away in time to take advantage of a couple of big breaks that came their way and that was the story of the game.

Muntz and another rookie, Ted Kennedy, were the scorers, once in each of the last two quarters. Steve Oneschuk converted both of them to give himself a six-point lead over Western's Gino Fracas in the scoring race. Queen's Ron Stewart has 35. Fracas and company were the third team in a row to be held scoreless by the Blues. That's a string of 180 scoreless minutes and gives the locals a defensive record of 20 points in five games.

Muntz wasn't Varsity's only strong backfield link. Not by a long shot. Bill McFarlane continued to make this his best season in college ball. He stick-handled through Western charges for amazing runbacks on just about every kick and returned punts an average of 10 yards, saving the Blues three downs every time they got posession via a Western kick. McFarlane made the best run of the game, a 23-yard dash from deep in his own zone, and came from nowhere to make a running interception of a Don Getty pass and set Steve Oneschuk up for three unsuccessful smashes at the Mustang goal line in the dying moment.

Bob Pinkney and Oneschuk ran well with Pinkney and Muntz doing the bulk of the ball-toting. Guards Bob Waugh and Don Mattason made the centre of the Varsity line practically impregnable after the Mustangs found it a soft touch early in the game. They tackled it fiercely and frequently and threw their share of blocks. It was Waugh who cleared the way for that 23-yard run by McFarlane.

Western held a decided edge through the first half as both teams amazed the 10,000-odd fans with clean and sure-footed play. Gino Fracas, Murray Henderson and Jacques Belec were picking holes and going for sizeable gains but faltered every time they approached pay dirt. One march right after the kickoff saw them make four first downs in a row but the Blues line was able to snuff out all scoring threats.

The break came shortly after half time. Western centre Doug Drew, while playing a solid two-way game, had been snapping the

McCarthy Incident Riles US Anonymous Opinions Arriving

Victoria's effigy burning of Senator McCarthy has touched off strong reaction among United States students—both pro and con.

The Varsity has received post cards and notes from Buffalo, N.Y., and Cambridge, Mass., some praising the students of the University of Toronto and others condemning them.

One post card read: "Even the pro-McCarthy Chicago Tribune printed your burning of this 'Senator' in effigy, and you are to be commended for this attempt to help liberate us suffering Americans from this monster. Please take later actions to emphasize to the world your proper dislike for this monster and his millionaire backers of ignorance."

The card wasn't signed. "Can't sign the name," it ended. "Maybe the moster has me on his schedule."

Another note told Toronto students to "all drop dead". It also enclosed a newspaper clipping and circled a speech by Texas cattle ranch owner, E. M. Biggers.

Biggers is reported to have said that McCarthy is "a real American". "We in Texas approve the work you are dong, the methods you are employing and the results you are getting. You are doing more to make America safe within than any man in the nation."

Another pro-McCarthy post card added: "The common people love Hon. Senator McCarthy. Perhaps you prefer the vitality of Canada and England which take American money to build up Communists to kill Americans and Canadians and to extend their war on all people who believe in a democratic way of life."

"We are sick of Churchill and Canada tearing down our best men—MacArthur, Chiang (best Christian in China nationality). We are heartsick that when we could have beaten Russia and then bound u- our mutual wounds and let our boys come home and live their lives, English appeasement lets Russia thrive and keeps our kids all over the world."

"What else do you want?" it continued. "McCarthy is our honor. We keep it. Tend to your own knitting."

Trinity Stone Twice Laid

The cornersone of the new Trinity Chapel holds the distinction of being the only one on campus to be laid twice. A group of about 50 grads who assembled on the chosen spot after the Annual Trinity Graduation Dance performed the ceremony, complete with cement, at about 12:30, Saturady night.

The dance which was held in the Buttery and which was attended by the third and fourth graduating years was over at 12.00 mid-night. A sign reading "We declare this stone well and truly laid at 12.30 p.m." and left unsigned remained on the stone after the 50 participants gleefully made their way home.

Pressure Forces Valve Steam Bath For Archives

Bells were ringing and escaping steam roared as the old university steam plant blew its top, literally, last night. Steam, being piped in from the new steam plant on St. George Street was under too high pressures as it arrived at the old plant behing the Medical Building, causing the safety valve to blow right off.

The escaping steam, coupled with the alarm bells let off a mighty roar which could be heard almost all over campus. Such incidents do not occur very often, but when they do, there's no mistaking them.

The steam is piped in from St. George Street, to operate the generators supplying electric current to the campus. The steam plant was moved two years ago from Queen's Park Crescent to its present site on the other side of campus.

The man in charge was inside, trying to fix the trouble while the hissing steam shot through the frosty air. The steam billowed out over the provincial Archives building, attracting the attention of people walking and driving around Queen's Park.

A similar incident took place during the first week of February last season. The reasons for the valve blowing off were the same at that tim.

Jail Rioters In England

Two hundred students were arrested on Guy Fawkes night in London, England for "wantonly discharging a firework in the street". The students were arrested after a riot which broke out when the police refused to allow them to lead a procession near the parliament buildings.

A spokesman for the police denied that the permission had been with-held, and said that the restriction was an old one forbidding processions or meetings within a mile of parliament while it is in session. The students turned the famous Bow Street court into a bed...m when they were on trial; shouting, singing hymns and lighting fireworks.

Detroiters Arrive Here For "Where On Earth"

Overnight accommodation is needed immediatly for 15 Wayne University students who will be staying in Toronto this Saturday night. The students, 13 men and 2 women, will be arriving in Toronto from Detroit on Saturday to see UC's show, "Where on Earth?", which is running this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday night at Hart House Theatre.

The visiting students are all members of last year's Wayne show "Away We Go". UC's "Where on Earth?" is an adaptation of that show and the Detroiters are here to see it.

The Wayne students will also attend the cast party which will be held after the show. All persons volunteering to put up one or more of the students over Saturday night will be invited to attend this party. Ron Gould, UC Lit Social Director, who is in charge of the UC show, described the cast party as "a rip-roaring binge, at which the alternative version to many of the show songs will be sung".

All persons interested in putting up one of the Wayne students over Saturday night should get in touch with Ron Gould at MI 6256 between 9 and 5 as soon as possible.

Fans Suffer Snow, Shock And Seizure

Varsity Stadium first aiders had a busy time last Saturday afternoon, St. Johns Ambulance attendents reported three major cases and five minor cases of aid.

Carole Perry, Western's head drum majorette, suffered an injured left calf when a student "bomb" exploded near her as she was about to lead the Western band at half time in the football game. Nurses at the first aid office said the injury, a result of flying fragments, was not serious but that Miss Perry was sent home in a high state of shock.

The Western majorette, who had been feeling ill before the game, carried out her full routine after the explosion. After the Western band had marched off the field she noticed her injury and was rushed to first aid.

A stretcher case was also brought into the first aid depot. Eric Harvest, University College, was taken by "a kind of seizure" attendents said. He was carried by stretcher from the Varsity student section and kept calling "more forward passes". Doctors said the case was serious and sent Harvest to the hospital immediately.

The other major injury involved snowball throwing. Jean Edwards of Brantford was treated for a severely cut and swollen eye as a result of a snowball.

Five minor injuries from snowballs were treated in the stands.

Down With Whom ?

Fallible

The Editor,
The Varsity:

No "honest student of history" could ever by led to the fallible conclusion reached by your correspondents from Knox regarding Mr. Bryant's reference to the Church.

It is neigher honest nor historical to consider the definition of any word to be comprised only of the private opinions entertained by those who are defining it; and since true consideration of the position of the Eastern and Anglican communions would invalidate their definition, they leave this totally out of the picture. To imply that the inclusion of the Church of England in Catholic Christendom commits us to any of the doctrinal beliefs and social policies of the Roman branch is to argue in the face of all ecclesiastical history since the English Reformation.

Moreover, it is indeed ironical that in supposing the Church to be confined exclusively to the Roman hierarchy, the gentlemen from Knox are all of a piece with the opinions of the Papacy; for if there is anywhere in the University where they would infd immediate and total acceptance of this so-called Protestant view, it is at the other Catholic college on the campus (obviously, St. Mike's).

K. S. Freedy,

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Who, in the name of that sacred cow, Canadian complacency are they trying to kid, these fools who unfurl the great white plume of Canadian purism? "Down with McCarthy!" they cry. Or is it Jagan, or that great ogre Churchill, or Malenkov, or Rhee? It really doesn't matter. We in Canada are pure, undefiled by the beer-and-bitters breath of the proles, or the power-mad animal stench of tyrants. In our urge to condemn undemocratic processes, we forget the admonition to "pluck first the beam from thine own eye." Yes, it is true. Right here in "good old U of T", in this great repository of idealism and democratic purity, we are nourishing a canker of Fascism in the disguise of the innocuous Pol. Econ. Club.

These would-be comptrollers of student thought are attempting to ensure their position by throttling that mouthpiece of independent thought, the Independent Progressive Association. Perfidy of perfidies! hypocrisy of hypocrisies! Even the saints and angels of Victoria should plead, trumpet-tongued, the deep the damnation of this travesty.

The IPA has fulfilled every demand the wire-pulling, intriguing Pol. Econ. men have made. Caput recognition has been gained, student recognition, in the form of twelve percent of the popular vote last year has also been gained. Even yet that great arbiter of students' political morals refuses to recognize any but the No. 1 heroes of the old-line parties.

Students of Varsity unite! Strike off the shackles of repression. Independents in thought and action rally to the banners of the IPA. I go IPA.

Achtung Und Heil

Several of us who read the Neo-Nazi views of one Helmud Ludwig Wipprecht (the 8th) are "rash" and "careless" enough to contradict the views of this maladjusted person. We wish to point out that his views are so absurdly foolish that they don't rate refutation by the so-called "Juvenile Brats". In regard to his attack on what normal people would term students' pranks we are only sorry that he hasn't the sense of humor or at least the toleration to abide by them.

In a Democratic society like ours we, fortunately for Mr. Wipprecht, can voice our opinions without fear of being purged outright. Nonetheless, judging by the arrogant and dogmatic attitude in which he assaults or free society we can see distinct traces of another society which existed not too long ago in the land of the bier and pretzels. His choice of words such as "I shall—crush any denial of my statements" indicates further the oppressive and ruthless attitude prevalent in Germany during the 30's and 40's. The Germans in Germany have apparently made a readjustment to the Democratic way of life; may we suggest the Mr. Wipprecht do the same.

SCIENTISTS... ...ENGINEERS

Canada's Defence Research Programme offers you an interesting and worthwhile position with ample opportunity for advancement.

Opportunities exist for graduates at the Bachelor's, Master's, and Doctor's level for full-time employment. In addition, seasonal employment is available for science students graduating in 1955 and for engineering students graduating in 1955 and 1956. Seasonal employment may lead to full-time employment after graduation.

Representatives of the Defence Research Board will be at the University of Toronto on November 16-20.

They would like to discuss permanent employment in Canada's Defence Research Programme with you if you can meet the following qualifications:

1. You must be a Canadian citizen or a British subject.
2. You must hold (or be a candidate in 1954, for) an Honours degree in science or engineering.
3. You must have a genuine interest in research and development work.
4. You must have a good academic record.

Consult your departmental notice board for time and place for an interview concerning either full-time or seasonal employment.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Genevieve

Faced with the numerous movies of excellent repute in town this weekend, this reviewer is going on strike, in a manner of speaking, by casting a backward glance at a film discussed somewhat briefly in a previous column. Genevieve, a very superior technicolor comedy from Britain, had little trouble getting an audience late this summer at the Hyland, but this unpretentious film has impressed every one so much that I can't refrain from mentioning it a second time.

Enlivened by a delightful score for solo harmonica by Larry Adler, Genevieve recounts the adventures of two young couples who take their prehistoric cars on the annual LondonBrighton trip of the British Veteran Car Club. John Gregson and Dinah Sheridan play a married couple whose enthusiasm for ancient autos brought them together, Kenneth More is the friend who introduced them, and the statuesque Kay Kendall is a model whom More has invited as his guest for the week end. The plot unfolds amid the usual comic jealousies that befuddle the modern comedy, but in Genevieve (which, for your further information, is the name of an utterly charming automobile) the alarums and excursions have a sophisticated and at the same time delightfully naive air which is refreshing.

Part of this special atmosphere must be attributed to the superior technicolor photography, most of which appears to have been shot on location. The hazy character of the English countryside in autumn, the sunlit streets of Brighton and the foggy ones of London are all admirably presented. The visual quality is continued in the interior sets, which are original, colorful, and startlingly untypical of the Adams mantel-chintz sofa set decoration which British films appear to have been mired in for the past hundred years.

Of the actors all make the best of the occasionally trite situations, assisted immeasurably by some light-hearted dialogue and a number of superbly comic situations. Kay Kendall, as the model, does excellently, especially in one scene where, slightly under the weather, she plays some very hot trumpet, Kenneth More is his usually funny self as the good-hearted, if blustering boyfriend, and the other two principals are better then average. Take a look at this one if you happen to see it in one of the little cinemas—it may mark a turning point in the style of British screen comedy. I fervently hope so.

TOOTHSOME

Good Show In Spite Of

Dentantics of 1953, subtitled "Mattie", had enough of the elements of a good show to make it a decidedly worthwhile evening's entertainment. The sets were delightful, the tunes (and especially the arrangements) were original, and when it came to the girls, the masculine part of the audience seemed to agree that "Dentistry can make you happy".

There were certainly lot of obvious flaws in "Mattie", but the show comes off successfully in spite of them. The script is very feeble in places; the most charitable thing that can be said for a large part of it is that it fills in time while the sets are changed behind the curtain. As for the jokes—well, we assure you that the rumors that Dentantics had been "cleaned up" this year were, not true. We hope the dentists will regale their patients with more contemporary anecdotes when they graduate; to expect the victim to laugh at some of these would be adding insult otinjry.

If the voices or the acting did not measure up to the standard of the music and the sets, this lack was offset by thorough rehearsal and by carefully limiting the players to what they could do best.

That best was often very good indeed, as the hero, Dave Engel, spoke and moved with a lively grace. A pity that such an excellent song as the "Love Song to Mata Halka" could not have been given to somebody with more of a voice. His sidekick, Sid Kirson, was equally amusing, but from here on the acting talent became highly diluted, and only a few minor figures like Russ Bulchak come to mind as outstandingly funny.

It would be truer to say that the plot of "Mattie" is hung around the show than anything else. Danny, a dental student, (Dave Engel), offers to finance a new dental building, provided that things are run the way he wants them. Mattie, the skull of an Indian woman, gives him the tips he uses to make the money. But she only speaks to men who have been disappointed in love, and as the result of a plot laid by his enemy in Meds, Danny falls in love again. It all turns out all right in the end however, when Danny's friend's girl is taken away from him by the same villain, and Mattie speaks to him.

The best thing about this plot is that it is attached to some very nice songs. The "Love Song to Mata Halka", and "Scholastic Clinicians" with Gullet, Mullet, Woollat and Cavanaugh, are perhaps the most outstanding. And there is, of course, a dancing chorus, with a kick-line that keeps together surprisingly well. A solo ballet performance is worked in as a dream; we can't identify the dancer in the program, but suspect that it is her picture on the cover. Anyway, the ballet business is all very nice if you like that kind of thing.

All in all, Dentantics of 1953 just goes to show that if a college show has good music and a cast that is well rehearsed and reasonably sure of itself, the rest of it doesn't matter very much.

PLAYERS' GUILD

Poison, Passion . . . .

As I left the Women's Union an acquaintance stepped up to ask, "Are you really going to write it up?"

I admitted I intended to try.

"Then please," came the request, "be candid. Tell them what is really wrong." I felt so encouraged that one member would speak so plainly to another that I found myself pondering that viewpoint the rest of the way home.

The UC Players' Guild is a group of amateur actors who also happen to be students registered in University College. Now by using the word amateur I wish to suggest all the old ideas associated with the word: tremendous enthusiasm, the best of intentions, and considerable talent.

But the old idea of amateur acting also brings to mind a long list of faults and the programme fully displayed these. The curtain failed to rise at the given hour because neighter set nor lights were yet ready; the set showed no imagination, let alone cohesive design; the lighting was mediocre; light and sound cues had delayed results; actors especially in the freshmen play upstaged each other, and even the two signs of the amateur of amateurs were visible in a complete reliance on the prompter and outward merriment at one's own errors.

It is these last glaring faults which must be first eliminated. The cure is simple to suggest: hard work and then more hard work; rehearse and then rehearse again and again. No prompter is capable of coping with the antics of a cast who are really unfamiliar with their script.

The first play on the schedule, Passion, Poison and Petrefaction, puzzled me considerably until I questioned its director, Nancy Donnell on the number of rehearsals actually held. Charlotte Holmes displayed a highly stylized type of acting which quite suited the mood of Shaw's farce and this stylization was followed to a large extent by Roger Bull and Tom Daly, the other two principal characters.

Then came a note of equally hilarious natural acting from Marg Nodder and Curt Reis. Either type of acting alone might have carried the play but together they gave a most peculiar effect. A promising newcomer in this play was Etta Whiteman as the active little maid.

The second offering, Through Channels, turned out to be a tape recording of a science fiction story. David Dunsmuir as Sgt. Ferazzio came through quite clearly but Norm Griesdorf who carried the plot became so hysterical that he was quite incomprehensible, and the audeince was left in puzzled silence.

The third play, Chekhov's Marriage Proposal was the first effort of the freshmen. All three actors, Irv Glieberman, Dan Byrtnik, and Celia Schacter, showed signs of future possibilities if they listen to the dictum "hard work".

Now havinglisted all the major

Now having listed all the major the whole evening was a great deal of fun; everyone was learning both positively and negatively, and the next Players' Guild offering should be worthwhile.

Suzanne Bloch

Suzanne Bloch, singer to the lute, player of virginals, player of recorders, and lutenist stepped out of some time between the 1th and 18th century into the Concért Hall of the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto, Thursday, November 5, 1953 to present some music of her chosen period with its message of quieter and slower things. Indicative of the increasing popularity of this kind of music is the fact that the Concert Hall was completely filled except for a few square yards of the platform left clear for Miss Bloch.

Her opening section was a group of pieces for the lute. Miss Bloch, who is one of the few people to master the lute at present, played upon a lute having 15 strings which was built in 1595. The traditional dances with which she began have the same kind of impersonality that is characteristic of early ballad poetry. Lamentation Semper Dawland, Semper Dolens, by John Dowland, one of the first personal pieces written for the lute, is a very lovely expression of sorrow. Although the tonal range of the lute is small by modern standards, Miss Bloch had enough variety to make the melodic imitations and separate entries as in madrigals stand out in the different voices.

The last two numbers in the lute section displayed the opposite ends of the lute's possibilities. The first Hertes Ease demanded a round sustained tone, parallel to that required in a Chorale, which she achieved to some degree. The second Corantos, as the title would indicate consists of running passages, which unfortunately did not sound to best advantage as the strings had stretched out of tune by this time.

Pleasant as the tone of the lute is, it does not remain interesting for a whole concert to ears accustomed to the noise and diversity of modern instruments. To provide a change Miss Bloch next played upon three recorders: Alto, soprano, and sopranino. With clear etheral tone she played an English dance with a rhythm like a Tarantella. and the almost oriental Lamento de Tristan, but several slips indicated that her proficiency on the recorder does not equal her proficiency on the lute.

Personally, I find the virginals the least interesting of the instruments she played, although the music was ornamentally brilliant. Formally fascinating was William Byrd's Hexachord, which consisted of variations on an ascending and descending scale. Its tone resembled too much that of a music box.

She closed with Songs to the Lute. It seemed inconsistent with the care she had taken over her playing technique and her historically accurate and humorous commentary, that she should leave her voice untrained. Her interpretations were charming, especially in the encore The Legend of St. Nicholas, but too often were spoiled by harshness and failure to reach a note.

More Old Ones

The Two Hundred and Fiftieth Concert in Hart House featured a group of distinguished artists in the present revival of Elizabethan music: Greta Kraus on the Harpischord, the Wolfgang Grunsky Group of Viols and Elizabeth Benson Guy, soprano.

The Grunsky group opened with a Suite for 5 Viols (Lachrinae) by Dowland. Each of the four movements bears such a resemblanc to his madrigals that it might well be called four madrigals for viols. The opening Pavane is almost identical with his "Weep, O Mine Eyes". Modern stringed instruments, although superior in tonal quality, could not blend so closely as these viols. three soprano, one alto and one bass. Although the standard of playing in this group had improved considerably since last year all the players have not attained equal calibre. The tone of Doreen Hall on the 5-string Treble Viol tended to be strident.

The voice of Miss Guy is admirably suited to these lyric songs. It is not loud, but it is of a very sweet quality which she controls except in an occasional strain for a high note. Also she has developed the necessary agility and exactitude. I particularly liked her Die Rechte Stimmung (In Tune) by Telemann in which she evinced all the humor of the comparison between temperamental women and an instrument out of tune with which men do not know how to harmonize. It is unfortunate that with such a pleasing vocal production she should make herself visually unpleasing by strain in her face, especially when breathing.

The most exciting performance of the evening was that of Greta Kraus. Whether accompanying, playing in co-operation with the Viola da Gamba, or playing alone her taste and musicianship were impeccable. The satiric wit of Couperin's Les Fastes de la Grande et Ancienne (unpronounceable) Mxnxstrndxsx was meticulously portrayed. But the quiet dignity of Scarlatti's Sonata in F major was most lovely.

I was disappointed in the madrigals as played by 5 viols. Morley's Now is the Month of Maying loses a great deal without the words. Only in the ones which are vertically written and have the words mixed up do they profit from the pure tone.

All in all a most pleasant evening in the Elizabethan manner.

The Cost

A united world can only be the material counterpart of a spiritual affinity, and W.U.S. is an instrument of student service, touching it is hoped, a level of common humanity which is deeper than political or other division. The establishment of community in the world is the most urgent international task that faces us all. Here, therefore, in an effort, based on mutual service, which has significance for the whole historical and political scene, and it is something we cannot do at all, unless we do it together. It is indeed a compelling challenge to responsible studentship in a civilized society. The cost of responsibility is always great, but the cost of irresponsibility is always greater.

For A TD

He scoots. He scores. Varsity Blues' classy right end Ted Kennedy (52) has ust snared a bullet drilled from the rifle arm of Honest Steve Oneschuk, in the third quarter of Saturday's game with the Mustangs. That's Don Getty (60) chasing Ted. Fortunately Getty never caught him.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

THE FOOLS

Those people that sat at home by the side of their TV sets on Saturday missed a lot. Not only did they let the weather beat them but they missed one of the best ball games seen at the Stadium in many a moon. Probably the 'fans' that have shouted that Intercollegiate ball is dull were the ones that succumbed to the weather. It seems somewhat fitting that the Blues and the Mustangs came up with a real thriller for the people that did brave the elements, the people who are probably the real Intercollegiate fans.

CREDIT WHERE DUE

Now that people have had a couple of days to think about the game, somebody will probably come up with that old nonsense 'the Blues were lucky—if it hadn't been for a couple of lucky breaks it might have gone the other way.' BUNK. Pure unadulterated BUNK.

The Mustangs did make a couple of boobs. You can say 'if Doug Drew hadn't flipped one over the head of Jack Thompson in the third quarter, Steve Oneschuk might not have had a chance to throw a DT pass to Ted Kennedy.' You might say that if Jacques Belec hadn't fumbled at the Western 18 in the fourth quarter, Phil Muntz might not have had the chance to run over standing up with the Blues' second TD.

Well, all that might be true. But on the other hand, if you are as realistic as you should be, Western did make the boobs and the Blues capitalized on them. That's good football. And Ted Kennedy's touchdown and Phil Muntz's touchdown leave nothing to be desired. They were a pleasure to watch.

Something that some people, particularly those that may say the Blues were lucky, overlook is the fact that the Blues have now played 180 minutes of perfect defensive ball. In their three gams with the Marauders, Redmen and now the vaunted Mustangs, the Varsity has not allowed a single point to be scored against them. And you will also remember that in three games with those scorehappy Mustangs, the Blues have held them to two touchdowns, both converted, and two singles. A total of 14 points in three games. That is probably a record of some kind. Certainly it will take some doing to beat.

It all boils down to one thing. Give credit where credit is due. The Blues have a great ball club, offensively and defensively. It doesn't matter how you look at it. Anybody that could think otherwise must have rocks in his head.

THOSE MUSTANGS

All this palaver about the Blues is not meant to take anything away from the Mustangs. Coach John Metras has another great football team. Doug Drew, in spite of his bad snap, Gino Fracas, Jacques Belec, Murray Henderson and Garnet Mason were among the best on the field. It would and did take a very good ball club to beat them.

EVEN TEAMS

That the Blues and Mustangs are two very evenly matched teams is obvious off the play of the year to date. The Blues now hold the edge in games, two wins to one for the Mustangs in their private feud. It's too bad that we can't spend the football season watching only Blues-Mustang games. Saturday's game is a good sample of what the brand of ball would be like—the best.

Seconds Defeat Aggies Varsity Clinches Title

By MOISHE REITER

The Farmer-boys of O.A.V.C. came to town last Friday as the guests of the Varsity Football Seconds, and the Baby Blues made their visitors right at home as they ploughed them under by a score of 24-0.

The Aggies needed a radar set to protect them from the Varsity aerial attack as the Baby Blues moved to all four touchdowns on passes. In their last meeting the Varsitys scored their two majors on long passes. The Aggies must have forgotten all about it or else just chalked it up to luck because this time out they were even more vulnerable than the last time. Varsity passes were bottled up in Guelph by a charging Aggie line that smothered the passers persistently. When the Blue throwers had the time to aim their flings they completed for long gains. John McManus had his boys on the ball in that department with the front wall giving Harry Wilson and Bill Stevenson enough time to get every pass insured.

With both quarterbacks pitching perfectly they still couldn't make a completion. Cold weather, numbing receivers' fingers, made them bobble and drop good ones — several were boobed right on the Aggie goal line. Not till the final play of the first half did the Varsity air game hit its stride, when Bill Steveson whipped a 15 yarder to Bill Karpinski at the Aggie 15. Karps was grazed by an addled Farmer, stumbled, picked himself up and staggered over for the score. Bulchak converted.

Whatever the pep-talks the Varsitys get at half-time, they certainly are effective. The boys always produce their best game in the second portion of the game. They came out at the half, first got possession at their own 27, then trudged downfield on 18 plays for another major, on a fling from Harry Wilson to Dick Risk.

This march was for the movies strictly. At his own 34 with 3 yards to go for a first Harry Wilson faked a third down kick, faded with the ball then tossed neatly to Bill Karpinski at the Varsity 48. Karpinski drove to the Aggie 48. Only two plays later, this time with only 5 yards to go, Wilson gambled again, sending Bob Smart through the centre. Smart carried 12 to the Guelph 29. One play later the Baby Blues fumbled to the Farmer boys but that didn't stop their touchdown intentions. Shortly after Wilson chose to gamble again.

On third down at the Aggie 52 Harry had Ross Woods fake a kick, then run to the 39. Wilson must have figured that he had befuddled the Farmers enough for a while, because he returned to an ordinary kind of offensive. Three passes later Dick Risk snared a soft one, took two strides and was over for the major. Again Bulchak added the extra point.

Big hearoes of the day were the lads working along the Varsity front wall. These Baby Blues were like puppetmasters to the Aggies, pulling them out or trapping them at will. A very pleasant surprise was the fine line play of Gary Gorelle. Switched from tackle to guard, but still wearing his old tackle number Gorelle spent the day picking apart the Farmer backfield. Ed Wladyka had no time to get his Aggie backs moving before Gorelle was in and spilling them for losses.

Blue Bits . . Jack Rogers didn't show in the scoring records, but was outstanding back on the field. Setting up scoring plays on the offence, the Aggies found it hard to stop him. On defence they couldn't slip a pass past him — he intercepted or tipped them into the dirt. . . . Share and share alike is the motto of the Baby Blue ends — all took four passes for touchdowns. Karpinski, Risk, Vic Kurdyak and Al Cecutti monopolised the scoring, except for reliable Wally Bulchak. The bullet-like fullback for the Baby Blues toed four converts and was great on defence. Always the first man down on kicks Bulchak stopped any Aggie runbacks dead . . . Varsity Baby Blues can now do no worse than tie for championship. By defeating Western this week they will be sole holders of the Cup . . . For odds on the matter contact one-eyed Bennie.

Blues Blank

ball badly all day and finally at the Blues' 53 tossed one over kicker Jocko Thompson's head. The ball bounded back to the Western 30 where the Blues took over. Varsity sent Olie Mandryk into the quarterback spot and Olie promptly tossed to Pinkney at the 16. Mustangs were penalized half the distance to the goal line for roughing, setting it up on the eight. Then one of the Blues' pet plays paid off. Oneschuk took a handoff from Mandryk, ran wide and then threw to end Ted Kennedy over the line.

Varsity's second major came midway through the fourth quarter when Fracas received an Al Haig kick at his own 10. Belec roared up to the 18 but he was jarred loose from the ball and the Blues took over. Eddie Skrzypek tried two passes, the second good to Oneschuk at the 10 and Muntz broke through centre for the score.

Both teams came close on other occasions. On the last play of the second half, Skrzypek threw a nifty pass to Haig from the 38 to the five. Haig skidded into touch at the one-yard line. Western was knocking on the door when Don Prowse recovered a Varsity fumble at the 27 but the Blues held for three plays. Then, after the second Varsity major, McFarlane's interception at the 22 looked like another five points. Oneschuk's pass to Haig at the 10 was ruled complete for interference. Steve had three cracks at the goal line but couldn't get past the one.

Best for Western by plenty was stocky Gino Fracas who carried the ball 15 times and made 77 yards. Henderson, Mason and Ralph Simmons did their share of running, too.

Blue Notes — The win for the Blues moves them into a tie with Western for first place. Both have four wins, one loss and one game left to play. Two points back are Queen's Gaels who could tie for first by beating the Blues in Kingston next Saturday . . . Al Haig averaged 45.2 yards kicking, compared to Jocko Thompson's 43.1. A strong wind blew from the north giving them each an advantage for two quarters . . . John Metras had no complaints after the game except that he thought the officials missed a clipping penalty when Ralph Simmons limped off late in the game . . . Bob Masterson couldn't have been happier.

Soccer Blues First In Loop Win Trophy

The Blackwood Trophy was warmly welcomed home to Varsity in 6 inches of snow Saturday morning, as the Varsity Soccer Blues performing brilliantly even under the rotten weather conditions of Toronto's first snow storm, outscored the McGill Redmen 2-1. The victory gave the Blues the championship in both the Eastern and Western divisions of the Intercollegiate League.

It was a test of the Varsity squads greatness, to have them go out for the title in such weather, where a bad break could easily have meant defeat. The Varsity lads were so hampered by the snow that they were held well below their usual seven goals in the game. Watching the match we were reminded of a slow motion as the players struggled through the snow. Still the Varsity boys produced some intricate plays and very neat working of the ball through the slush on the field.

Jose Atucha was the marksman for Varsity, lighting the lamp at ten-minute mark of the first period on a penalty kick. It was this same Atucha, who is also captain of the soccer squad that scored the counter that was to win the game by heading a goal on a beautiful winging cross by Rod Green.

Injury to goalie Ed Duru, as a McGill player kicked his hand weakened the Varsitys slightly. Duru was replaced by Bill Leach. Shortly after the Redmen scored their only goal on a goal-mouth scramble.

For Coach Bob Auld it was a great triumph as the likeable coach earned a double championship in his rookie coaching season. Varsity has scored 36 goals and have had only five against. Jose Atucha ended the year with 12 goals.

Fourth For Double Blues

A hard driving, hard tackling St. Mike's squad powered to their fourth straight victory as they hammered a winless Dents team deep into the cellar of the second division with a 10-1 win.

The rather cooling breezes seemed to stimulate the Double Blue to a bone crushing effort from the opening whistle. Dents jumped into scoring position in the first quarter when Alf Vaichullis raced in from his end spot to block a St. Mike's kick which was recovered for Dents by Jim Duggan on St. Mike's 35. Jack Wall and Don Gilbert carried play to the St. Mike's 25 with two fine runs, but here the defences stiffened and Reed Currie stepped in to kick a single. St. Mike's scored their first major in the second quarter following a field long march with Dave Winters and Jim King doing the lion's share of the ball carrying. King crashed over center for the T.D. Convert attempt by Frank Connelly was low.

St. Mike's second major came in the third quarter when a sparkling run by Curt Russel placed the ball on the Dent's 12. From here Jud Fusco raced around the left end to score standing up. The convert was again unsuccessful. The final quarter featured an unsuccessful passing attack as Dents fought to get back in the contest. Jim Gajda played highlightened by the hard play of a strong game for Dents until he left the game with a badly dislocated finger. To complete their miseries the team will lose the services of Rich Muirhead for the rest of the season with a shoulder separation.

Vic Gals Win First Game In Softball Finals

Thawed out? Well there are a couple of softball clubs around these parts who will have to put weather aside as loyal fans did Saturday, and battle one last duel to the finish off the ball schedule. These two hardy teams are none other than Vic firsts and Saint Hilda's firsts who are out to play the second (and we feel the last) battle in the final series.

The afore mentioned observations were gathered at the first of the final series Friday when the Viesters out-slammed, out-pitched and outdid the Saints by a 24-3 game.

Saint Hilda's tallied absolutely nil in the first three innings to Vic's 24. The Saints went to bat first with the first three striking out without even reaching a base. Vic retaliated with eleven runs.

It looked as if the Saints had a chance in the top of the third when Kelly made it to third base. Vic at this point held a thirteen point margin as Saint Hilda's boobed again. Vic came back with eleven more and in the fourth, the gals from Trinity tallied their sole three and defaulted the rest of the game.

Two further games are scheduled for these two clubs for the best out of three. Well, gather your own conclusions. We have made our own — namely that today will see the end of women's softball on the campus for this year.

Western to six points, Steve has 39 to Gino's 33. Saturday's game attracted about 10,000 fans. It would be a wonder if the Marauders would draw more than the band, cheerleaders and the working press under similar conditions. Incidently, Queen's beat McMaster, as Benny predicted, thus completing a total washout over the sesaon for the hapless Marauders. That makes three years of Senior ball that McMaster has played without a win. By the way, those fans who compared McMaster's plight to that of Western's when the Mustangs entered the Intercollegiate back in the late 20's, were slightly off base. If you check the record book you will find that the Mustangs won the Yates only two years after they entered the league.

Thar She Blows

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

You Take It From Here

Three years ago, the student body at this campus suffered through a three-month campaign to raise funds for East Asia. It was called All-Varsity Aid, and was our first attempt at raising substantial funds for student aid to underprivileged universities.

Since then, campaigns have tended to be more and more concentrated. Experience has resulted in more perfect organization, and students will not be exposed to harangue from canvassing reps and the press, to the extent that they lose interest. On the other hand, the concentration of promotion which can be developed in a short campaign will permit a higher peak of interest during campaign. It is this peak in student interest whether attained in a week or two months which will determine the degree of success of any campaign.

This year, the Student Help to Asian Relief and Education campaign will last only one week. The SHARE officials have undertaken a big risk here, and we as students could best show out appreciation by wholehearted co-operation with them this week.

With Flying Colors

Four or five inches of snow and slush didn't keep about 13,000 fans from the rugby game on Saturday.

In fact, Toronto spirits were pretty high, and those that did turn out to support the Blues in their victory must be congratulated. The Blues have added one more "mad" rugby weekend for Toronto students. They're in the finals (we hope) and showed they could well walk off with the Yates Cup.

But some students carried their spirit(s) too far. Six first aid cases were reported from snow-balls.

Except for the snow-balls and the injury to Western's head drum majorette, Toronto's team and fans came through with flying colors. Snow and rain just will not stop them.

So congratulations are in order. And incidentally, we're still trying to figure out what is attracting about a wet bench, ankle-deep snow, slush and very damp weather. Oh, well.

What's The Answer?

Let's Stand Up To It

The relationship of the SAC to the National Federation of Canadian University Students has been and is a matter of some debate. The writer suggests that where NFCUS has fallen down on certain vital issues then Toronto's SAC should take them up alone.

By PHILIP BUDD

In all the discussion about getting out or staying in NFCUS, we seem to forget the very issues on which NFCUS has disregarded expressed student opinion and thereby lost student support. I refer to questions like the Canadian-Soviet exchange, associate membership I.U.S., and the financial needs of students.

AFTER LAST YEAR'S NFCUS fiasco the same question arose—stay in or get out. In the meanwhile the student body re-affirmed its support of the proposed Canadian-Soviet exchange. Now, apparently, we are back where we started from—a blind alley no real progress having been made. The time has come for some concrete action. We students must break through the curtain NFCUS has in effect spread against the realization of our expressed aims.

Progress on these questions does not revolve around staying in or getting out. It rather depends on its own. If we accept the NFCUS decisions we on its own. If we accet the NFCUS decisions we are blocked. If we get out and direct all our attention to organizational matters no progress will be made then either.

CERTAINLY NO UNIVERSITY should feel itself bound by NFCUS decisions. Otherwise we would be allowing ourselves to be subject to the will of a few delegates who do not reflect the real opinions of the majority of students. On the other hand, if we proceed on our own initiative it would in effect show the NFCUS organization that either they 'smarten up" or "crack up". Certainly it would be an impetus to democratize and enliven NFCUS eventually.

It seems only logical, too, that the cohesion of the student bodies of our own universities would be strengthened through action on the issues around which students have vigorously participated, (regardless of various manoeuvres which have tried to promote a contrary situation).

IT IS HIGH TIME THAT we got out of the rut of indecision. Our own feeling of accomplishment is bein gundermined as well as our reputation throughout the world. We can observe the fine example set by the US college editors who completed an interesting tour of the Soviet Union this summer. They have made no insignificant contribution to improve student relations.

In connection with this concrete approach some suggestions submitted to this paper are very impressive. One called for a Canadian-Soviet exchange, on a university-to-university basis. This seems like a very feasible rpoposal. I don't foresee any of the obstacles especially financial, which were raisedk in connection with a national tour. Last year the Canadian-Soviet exchange committee at the University of Saskatchewan organized a tag day to raise money. Projects like this would certainly cover the expenses.

THEN THERE WAS THE IDEA of inviting a representative of the IUS to visit our university for the purpose of discussing matters of mutual interest and the enhancement of closer relations. I can see the point here. For years now, Canadians have attended IUS meetings, talked with IUS members and officials and through exchange of ideas and negotiation reached a basis for co-operation. Surely then a visit of IUS people to talk with a great many more Canadian students and explain IUS to us would enhance the process of better understanding and closer co-operation.

Such action will take us out of the doldrums of non-accomplishment and make a great stride toward the improvement of student relations in the world. It is to be hoped that they will not be sidetracked.

THEN, OF COURSE, THERE IS the whole question of securing Federal financial aid to students. Here again NFCUS has failed to take appropriate action and proceeds along a course which has gotten nowhere in the past. What is needed is a vigorous and sustained campaign to arouse everyone, students and non-students alike, to the seriousness of the situation.

In all of this Toronto can and should take the lead. WE don't have to wait for someone else HOW'S ABOUT IT, SAC!

The Cost Of Irresponsibility

The Asian Challenge

The International Secretary, World University Service of Canada, presents the case of Canadian responsibility to the East.

By LEWIS PERINBAM

(International Secretary, World University Service of Canada)

Over a thousand million people today live in conditions of squalor, hunger, disease, starvation, illiteracy and premature death. In South-east Asia, for instance, there are some 570 million people, for the most part hard working men and women of simple dignity and faith. Their average annual income per head is $70.00, compared with $1500.00 in North

Such poverty is not new in sumption is well under 2,000 calories a day, compared with over 3,000 in Canada. The proportion of babies who die during their first year is more than 3 tumes as high as in Canada, and the average expectation of life is less than 30 years. Some 80 percent of the people are illiterate.

Such povrty is not new in human history; it is as old as men. But for the first time in history, the people who live under these circumstances, have refused to accept them as an inevitable condition of life and demand a change so that they too, may share in a higher standard of living and the material benefits which today are totally denied them. It is not only an injustice to allow half of humanity to remain deprived of the means of existence; it is also a grave mistake, for it means that mankind as a whole is deprived of the co-opreation and contribution both physical and intellectual, of vast masses of people who, if their abilities were cultivated and energies harnessed, could make a tremendous contribution towards human progress. Such inequality also engenders discord, for it incites those who are still sunk in ignorance and poverty against the other half of the world's population living in relatively prosperous conditions.

In this situation, the entire university community of Canada is confronted with the inescapable responsibilities of a great and favoured people. Thes include the welfare of their counterparts, who are ill-housed, who are ill-fed and need a supplementary diet in order to continue to share in the advancement of knowledge, and whose libraries are poorly-equipped or non-existent. It means too, a realization that we, as members of a world community, depend on each oth- this way Canadian students will not only bring some measure er, and our inter-dependence compels us to a sense of awareness of the desperate human needs of these our fellow-students in their struggle against poverty, disease and despair. In of relief to members of their own community and alleviate much hardship and suffering, but give positive and concrete expression of their responsibility to the international student world.

World University Service offers the means of co-ordinating the individual efforts of countless students in a common enterprise of mutual service, and is a truly political persuasion. ance: contributions for sanatoria, much of the material assistance (medicines, hostels, student centres, medical, laboratory and other technical equipment, textbooks and scholarships) is at present directed towards Asia and the Middle East, but schemes are also under way in Europe. Such material assistance is not a charitable gesture; it is an expression of international cooperation through the investment of international goods to supplement the efforts of those who are striving, often against incredible odds, to improve conditions in their universities and colleges.

In the international programme of WUS, spectic projects are selected in such a way that contributions find their most adequate and productive use. In Indonesia, where 90 percent of the students are, at the same time, in full-time employment, textbooks are required as the local libraries are poorly equipped. A book costing $10.;; in Canada costs about $46.00, but one duplicating machine supplied by Danish students produced 4,000 sets of lecture notes in 3 languages for 5 universities. In Japan where the incidence of TB amongst students is 10 times as high as in Canada, Japanese students have, by their own labour, built the foundations for a student sanatorium and WUS is raising funds for X-ray equipment and drugs. In Burma, where many students are suffering from Malaria, amoebic dysentry and TB, WUS is supplying drugs. In India, where the calorific value of a student's diet is only 1,800 as compared with the basic minimum of 2,600 recommended by nutritionists, and where only 5 percent of the students live in hostels, WUS has established hostels which offer free accommodation to refugee and needy students, and has also initiated several student health schemes.

But much remains to be done. Tens of thousands of students are still without homes, and are ill-clothed and ill-fed. Many are suffering from malnutrition or TB. Robbed of a future by war, political strife, economic crisis or natural disaster, and with a past they yearn to forget, it would hardly be surprising if they, in their misery, succumbed to the tragedy of their lot. We cannot remain insensitive and inactive to their needs, and it is on their behalf that W.U.S. appeals for help. The fulfilment of its programme for the present session will require the undivided support and active cooperation of every student, for if this vast human task is to be carried out, then its impulse must come from a deepening sense of solidarity in the student community around the world, and expressed in terms of mutual service.

In the past, Canadian students have given a powerful lead in their international commitments, and both the generosity as well as the spontaneity of your contributions have reaped a human dividend of immeasurable value in the lives of countless numbers of students. With this in mind, the Annual WUSC Assembly held at Montreal from October 9 - 11, set a target of $20,000 as the Canadian contribution to the international relief programme of WUS for the year 1953-54. Of this amount, 40 percent will be earmarked for one major project, namely the Delhi Health Centre, which will enable all students at the University of Delhi to be medically examined on their admission to the University. The value of a centre of this kind in a country where 80 percent of the students are in need of medical attention is beyond question.

In conclusion, I would say that the real and everlasting significance of mutual service lies not in the material advantages but in the spiritual unity which will inevitably flow om our common endeavour. In sharing what we have we will experience our common humanity and basic identity, for the oneness of the community to hich we belong can only be the oneness of o rupurposes and aspirations.

UC may be one hundred years old, and the grass in front of it even older (though sometimes looks are deceiving), but every year the papers and the cups return to give it that "lived in" look, or is it "lived out" look. What a disgusting thought, living in UC. What a disgusting sight, UC outside. That, of course, does not include the co-eds in the background, who also come back every year to give it that "lived in . . . " .

World Is Not Bad Place But Use Gifts—Saskena

By MIKE ERDEI

Recognition of human needs is one of the hopeful developments of recent years, said His Excellency R. R. Saksena, Indian High Commissioner to Canada, at Hart House last night. He was speaking at the SHARE dinner, which marked the opening of this year's campaign for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education at the University of Toronto.

Saksena said the world is not a bad place to live in, with all the beautiful gifts of nature, but "we do not make the best of what is given to us," he said. "We indulge instead in mutual recriminations and strife with a devotion worthy of a better cause.'

He said the air today is surcharged with hate and fear. He pointed out there are conflicts within countries between the capitalists and workers, racial, political, and communal groups. At the national level there are conflicts in many countries, including Germany, Italy and Yugoslavia. He also cited Korea, Indo-China and Malaya, as examples of strife.

"Overshadowing all the conflicts," said Saksena, "is the global ideological conflict, which hangs over the entire world as a dark cloud." The world stands divided into two hostile camps, armed with weapons which can destroy the whole earth, he said.

Some believe that safety lies in building up offensive and defensive strength, he said, but this is not an entirely satisfactory solution. "Two groups armed to the teeth, and facing each other with hate and fear in their hearts can at best establish an insecure truce," he said.

Saksena said, "In the maintenance of peace and good fellowship, there is no effective substitute for love and mutual confidence." He said that peace and international understanding are our supreme need and aim. He quoted the Hon. L. B. Pearson, Canada's Minister of External Affairs, who said on Oct. 28th in New York, "The main lesson which the world has to learn—and the time in which we have to learn it is short—is how to live with itself."

There are however redeeming features, he said. The peoples have awakened to a sense of responsibility towards the less forunate. "Divisions which exist on the ideological and political plane have not stood in the way of development of plans to alleviate human suffering," said Saksena.

Recognition of human needs started in the Second World War, he said. The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) was the first organization in this field, said Saksena. After this came the Marshall Plan, the technical assistance program of the UN, President Truman's Point Four programme, and the Colombo Plan. In addition there are the specialized agencies of the UN, the UN Children's Emergency Fund, the World Health Organization, and many others.

He said "India is economically weak, but it has two great assets." The population of India is 360 million, he said, "and when 360 million throats raise the cry of peace, and call upon the nations of the world to compose their dfiferences, that cry is bound to be heard." The second asset, he said is the old Indian philosophy of tolerance and universal compassion. This old philosophy has recently been reinforced by Mahatma Gandhi.

"The world needs today men of courage and goodwill," said Saksena, "who will lead it away from hate, fear and suspicion, back to peace and human co-operation." He said Canada was least affected by the atmosphere of international misunderstanding, and felt that Canada and India could join hands in this great endeavor.

McCarthy Threat: Topic AT UTDU Trial Debate

"McCarthyism is a greater threat to democracy than Communism" is the topic to be debated by the contestants at the open trials of the University of Toronto Debating Union. The five winners will represent Toronto in both inter-collegiate debates and debates with various American Universities. These will include Harvard, West Point, Boston University, Boston College and New York University. Norfolk Prison may be also added to the itinerary.

Some winners of the competition will go to the University of Montreal in January to take part in a bilingual debate, and if finances allow, a team will be sent to the Cross Examination Tournament of the University of Pittsburg where they will have an opportunity to debate against U.S. universities and also Oxford. Arrangements will also be made for a competition between Canadian universities.

The chairman of the UTDU, Earl Berger, III UC, said "These trials are open to both men and women. However, since most women are afraid to debate against men, and because of the tremendous interest shown by the women of this campus in debates, there will be separate trials held for women. The five winners of this competition will have their own tours and contests. We are at present trying to arrange an inter-collegiate women's debating competition with women's colleges in New York McGill and Western. All these places seem to be more than eager to accommodate a Varsity team.

The women's competition will be on the same topic as the men's competition and will be held this Friday at a place to be announced later.

Allow Women To McLuhan Library Talk

Women on campus may hear Dr. H. M. McLuhan, Professor of English, St. Michael's College, address the Hart House Library Committee tonight at 7.30 p.m.

His topic, Anonymous History—A New Art for Industrial Man, concerns Dr. McLuhan's work in the study of communications. These studies and his recent book, The Mechanical Bride have established Dr. McLuhan as one of the leading scholars in the field of communications.

The speech is part of a seminar studying communications and concepts of space and time, which also iuludes Dr. E. S. Carpenter of the Department of Anthropology and Dr. W. T. Easterbrook of the Department of Political Economy.

Rump Fed?

I Am Seeing White

By MOISHE REITER

We are swinging a pair of passes to the football game to see the Blues from Varsity fight the Horsies from Western. We are told that it is sure to be a bang-up game as the Westerns and the Varsitys do not like each other very much and both claim that they own a mug called the Yates Trophy. That is what they're fighting about. Personally I think that is a very silly thing to be fighting for. I figure that it is just a cover up and they are really tussling over the dolls who wear the short skirts and boots. I make a note to grab me one before the jokers on the field finish their elimination contest and go after the prizes. The doll on my arm has other ideas and will not let such a prize as me go, so I settle back in the Pressers' Box and give an eye to the processings on the field.

Being as I am a faithful reader of Jim Proudfoot's stories in that rag, The Varsity, I am looking forward to seeing those "powerful football machines" in action. Sure enough, as I am looking down at the white mess in the middle of the seats there are coming out on it a bunch of bulldozers, but they are not pushing each other around, like I have been promised they will—the big lugs are picking on the snow. And the referee is just lying around picking up Engineers' empties so that he can get the refund. I am contemplating whether or not I should cut in on his concession but I see a guy with a full flask so I'm forgetting all about the empties.

As I am getting pleasantly groggy on the guy's grog, I am hearing things. It is something like Santa Claus is coming. I hear the strains of Jingle Bells floating into the park. As I listen I am struck full in the face with an inspiration. I am running down to tell the bandleader that his band should be playing "It Isn't Raining Rain." Wally Gulka is giving me a disgusting look and shoving me off. Nobody loves me.

From a door I can see the Varsitys running out on the field. I can tell they are Blues because it is the colour of their eyes. The Mustangs are prancing out of the other end—I can tell the Horsies by their dragging tails. I am impressed by Johnny Metras' strategy as he is dressing his Mustangs in white. The Blues cannot hide in the snow but the Horsies just have to lie down and nobody can see them. That is what they are doing all the time. They are lying down and the Varsitys are running all over looking for them but they cannot find them. One of the Blues, I guess he is IT, takes the ball and runs right into the Horsies' stable but even he cannot find them.

By now the field is getting very slushy and the boys cannot run on it. So, I am advising the coaches to give their players snowshoes, but they are not very bright fellows and do not think my idea is a good one. I am trying to explain to the Varsitys that they will never catch the Mustangs without snowshoes, but they are driven mad by the cold and they are laughing fluidly in my face and snorting that the Horsies have to catch them. I can see that everyone is half-cut so I gather up some Skule empties that the characters in the green shirts have missed and leave the Stadium bedlam. I am heading for the nearest Brewers' Retail to balance my budget.

Colleges Need Aid —McGill

Montreal, Nov. 5—(CUP) — The eventual "Intellectual and economic dependence of Canada on some other nation", was forecast by McGill University in a brief to the Royal Commission on Constitutional Problems.

The warning was sounded as a result of a study which showed only percent of Canadians in "Appropriate age groups" were attending university in contrast to 33.13 percent in the United States. Dr. James of McGill who presented the brief, supported Federal aid to Universities as recommended by the Massey Report. In stressing the non-political aspect of Federal aid, the brief said "There is no control of education, no infringement of provincial autonomy, in the grants that the Government of Canada is now making for the third successive year, to every university in this country outside the Province of Quebec."

With increased costs, the added revenue would have to come from increased student fees which would merely intensify the problem as "Any increase in fees tends to raise the obstacles that stand between young Canadians from poor families and the opportunities for higher education.'

Joe McCulley Speaks About Sunday Music

Hart House held the 250th in their series of Sunday Evening Concerts in the Great Hall of the House last Sunday. The concert marked a milestone in a series which has continued for over 31 years.

Speaking during a brief intermission, Warden McCulley said it was the intention at the beginning of these concerts that they should provide a medium whereby good music could be made available to the members of the House, in spite of changing times, circumstances and modes of thought and expression, and added that the original intention has been maintained as a guiding principle.

The Warden also gave a brief history of the founding of the concerts and credited the foundation work of the late Mr. Campbell McInnes and the assistance of former Warden J. B. Bickersteth with the exceptional durability of the tradition.

Health Centre For Delhi To Be SHARE Target

"Canadian students consider a Health Centre as a normal part of a university, however in the Delhi University of 8,000 students there are no such facilities available," said Dr. John Hastings, last night at the SHARE Dinner held in Hart House.

Hastings spoke on the need for the health centre at Delhi, that the present campaign of SHARE is helping to finance. "If we had poor diet, bad lighting, the threat of Tuberculosis, malaria and other diseases, I sometimes wonder how many of us would graduate," said Hastings.

The speaker who attended the seminar in India last summer with the World University Service, commented on the courage that the students displayed under such conditions, and the keen interest that the students displayed towards getting an education.

Hastings said that we should not consider our donations as a gift but as a means of "helping people to help themselves." "As individuals we can do very little, but as a group we can do a lot."

The aims of the Centre as laid down in the memorandum of the association, are as follows: "To provide medical treatment to all the students of Delhi University who register themselves directly with the centre or through their College, School, Institute, House or Hall, and pay this registration fee prescribed by the Society"; and, "to arrange medical examinations and tests and to take all steps six bed ward, a four bed ward for non-infectious cases, a room with arrangements for minor operations, facilities for preparing and serving meals to in-patients, and a canteen to have a capacity of serving 500 students well balanced meals for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

This health centre, which will serve as a model for the development of similar health centres in other parts of the country, exemplifies the modernistic trend of thought of helping an Indian student in a student health centre. Student health is considered better than the health of the average Indian, the problem is to train university graduates to solve the nations mounting problems — economic, social, and political, he said.

necessary to improve the general standards of health and resistance to disease among students."

The Health Centre, a eighty by thirty-four feet structure will include the following: an examination room equipped with an X-ray Unit and instruments necessary for thorough examination, innoculation and vaccination. Then there will be a modern laboratory, a dent to help himself. Our contribution during SHARE week will be an endorsement of the Delhi Health Centre and the ambitions of the students building it.

"The common ailment among students" said Jim Armstrong IV Vic, "in the area is severe anemia — a result of malnutrition and hookworm." It is felt that these diseases could be easily treated

Modern Iraq Talk, Slides Club Feature

Dr. T. J. Meek, former head of the Department of Oriental Languages, discussed Iraq and showed some slides he had taken of that country at the first meeting of the Near East Club, held last Thursday evening.

"The purpose of the club is to foster some interest in the Near East, and is especially for those studying Oriental Languages, though all are welcome," said Don Anderson, IV Trinity, president of the club.

The club will be holding meetings every month for the rest of the year. On December 2, Rev. D. K Andrews will speak on Palestine where he spent last summer.

The Club is over 20 years old said Anderson. In future the club will concern itself with the modern Near East he said.

As any Engineer will immediately recognize, the above configuration is intended to represent a transit, or theodelite, one of the three-legged telescopes with which the crafty Skule types observe passing co-eds, to the minutest freckle. The three level headed lasses are a plumb sight easier to survey than the majority of SPSers, mainly because they are imports from POT.

Civil Rights Bill Club Panel Topic

The first meeting of the Civil Liberties Society will be held tonight at 8.00 p.m. in the Music room of the Vic Union.

It will be a panel discussion, on "Whether Canada needs a bill of rights."

The Panel will consist of Pro-Kilgour from the faculty of Law, Prof. McCurdy, Department of Philosophy, and Bob Sutherland, II Law, last year's President of the Students' Administrative Council, and President of the Campus Conservative Party, Joe Slogan, II Dents.

"A bill of rights can neither produce nor compel an action", said Prof. McCurdy, last night, "But if properly used it can make people consider the belief and try the action."

Joe Slogan said that active vigilance of civil liberties is more important than putting things down on paper. "You can't legislate civil rights—you have to educate people to respect them," he said.

Sutherland said that he had little faith in manifestos of human rights at the national level. "There are bills of rights in the United States and the Soviet Union," he said.

Name Ten Travellers To Cornell

Ten students have been chosen to attend the annual Cornell University Exchange weekend Nov. 12, to 15 in Ithiaca, NY, sponsored by the External Affairs Committee, EAC Co-weekend Chairman, Stan Schiff announced yesterday.

Toronto representatives William Angus, Earl Berger, Irene Donagalski, Mary Alice Hunter, Edmund Hoffman, Donald Lowe, Herb Noble, Donna Parr, Anne Somerville and Edith Wasserman will leave Thursday afternoon for a weekend of seminars, discussions tours and parties.

The group will be accompanied by Professor Lynch of the Philosophy Department, St. Michael's College.

Diabetic Talk Given At UTS By Director

Are you eating at Hart House? Are you living in a boarding house or are you in one of the University residences? Do you have difficulty in getting the right food for your diet if you are a diabetic?

Diabetics will find a new approach to one of their most constant problems in the meeting and demonstrations to be held at the University of Toronto Schools Building, 371 Bloor West, on Wednesday, November 11, at 8.00 p.m. Miss E. Wark, Director of Diatetics of the Toronto Western Hospital and her staff have prepared a variety of menus from a basic diabetic diet.

The display will feature for the first time, dishes which can be made up by ordinary household measures instead of by weight. An added feature of this food demonstration will be a talk on "How to choose diabetic meals from restaurant menus".

Concurrently, a film strip "Detection and Care of Diabetics" will be shown in the auditorium. There are many thousands of unsuspecting diabetics in Canada whose afflictions would be lightened tremendously by early detection.

Beer, Joe, Beer

. . . And Legs

By AUBREY GOLDEN

The Little Red Skulehouse has been unnaturally peaceful and quiet lately, as perhaps you have noticed. The engineers have not moved back to Ajax, nor have they begun to study for their finals. In trying to find out what had happened to the little men with slide rules, my wanderings took me to the POT huts.

There they were. Grouped around a piano were an example of Skule's finest with jaws at half-mast as they watched a chorus line, dressed in shorts and practicing high kicks in perfect unison.

I immediately did the most logical thing and found an empty spot on the piano. After about an hour of silent devotion I looked about, only to find myself the sole onlooker. The others had gone off to different corners of the room and were singing lustily, "Oh bring us a beer, Joe, bring us a beer."

I was seriously thinking of adding my order, but I couldn't see any Joe around so I asked a fellow in a brown corduroy jacket what it was all about. He sat me down, put a fatherly hand on my shoulder and gently explained that it was just a song. It is going to be used in Skule Night.

Aha, a little light flashed and now I realized what the engineers were doing. They were busy putting on a show, Ron Ham, the director, told me to look around for myself.

My first act was to get the names of the chorus girls. Amy Forman, a pert young chorine informed me that she was in first year Chemical Engineering. She was the first Skulegirl whom I had met and the only one in the show. Jean Bach, Colleen Cameron, Judy Francis, Jane Tobias, Isobel Gough, Pat Knight and Gloria Robson form the rest of the chorus line. They are on lease from POT.

A red light flashed on and off in the corner and I went over to investigate. The flashing was being supplied by various people moving back and forth and the fiery red was being supplied by the hair of cute Aileen McNairn, Skule Night's heroine.

Aileen is a UC student who is in the general course. When I asked her how she took to all these engineers, she merely answered, "They're not bad." The engineers will love her forever for that.

To the background of the sweet refrain of "Oh bring us a beer, Joe," I was informed by the proud members of the cast that the Lady Godiva Memorial Band will be on stage in full force.

The original music in the show is by Neil Irwin, the producer is Ian Finnan and the man orchestrating Neil's music is Al Waldon.

Satisfied with this information, I turned my attention once again to the kick-line and the rest of the evening was spent, quite enjoyably, in silent respe

That is how I found out what happened to the engineers. They were at the POT huts, and I don't blame them.

Northern Aid Group Waits Caput Action

The Committee for Aid to Mining Communities presented its request for a tag day to the Caput Liaison Committee last Friday afternoon.

The liaison committee between the Students' Administrative Council and the University Caput decided that it could give the Committee no definite answer until it had been recognized by Caput. The next date of the next Caput meeting was not available last night but it is believed that it will not be before the next SAC meeting.

The SAC will have the power to grant a tag day if the Caput recognizes the organization. President of the SAC John Stalker said this was not known when the SAC discussed the request for the first time.

Sometimes Notes Don't Quite Say What The Prof Thought About It

Detroit, Mich. —(CUP) — The Georgia Tech Yellow Jacket is on to some of you guys' note taking techniques and offers the following examples as proof that we don't always glean what we could from lectures:

Prof: Pages seven through fifteen are not required, but will prove of inestimable worth to the student in preparation for the final examination.

Your notes: Omit pages seven through fifteen.

Prof: Socrates was a stoic, but it should be pointed out that stoicism is very different from cynicism. A cynic is contemptuous of all things, especially human nature, whereas a stoic is one who accepts all things as they are without complaining.

Your notes: Socrates was a cynic.

Prof: The examination will test the student's overall comprehension of the subject and thorough knowledge of theories behind the facts and their relevance to fields other than Political Science will be absolutely necessary.

Your notes: Cram like hell.

Prof.: The class Friday will probably be the most important of the year since we will throw it open to a general discussion of the main problems which have come to out attention throughout the course. Attendance will not be taken.

Your notes: No class Friday.

Begin Interfaculty Debate For Campus Championship

A series of inter-faculty debates has been arranged by the University of Toronto Debating Union, to encourage a greater interest in debating on the campus. The Cahirman of the UTDU, Earl Berger, III UC reported that fifteen faculties have decided to participate in these debates, which will begin after Christmas. An interfaculty champion will be chosen by the competition.

The fifteen faculites will be divided into three groups of four and one of three. The winners of the group competitions will debate against each other for the championship of the University.

"The competition will be conducted in the formal parliamentary style of debating. Berger said that all inter-collegiate debating was done in this style, and as there was little formal debating done on the campus, the series would provide an opportunity for students to obtain practice in this method.

Inter-collegiate debating has been a general practice for Toronto Debaters for a number of years said Berger but this is the first time we have undertaken interfaculty debating here.

The winning side of the debate contended that "If Queen's men think at all, it is not apparent."

Xmas Cards Sold By SCM

University Christmas cards will go on sale the week of November 16th, announced the Rev. Roy DeMarsh of the Student Christian Movement. About 900 dozen cards bearing the University crest and 200 dozen cards with the UC crest will be on sale in college rotundas and at the SCM office in Hart House.

SCM hopes to raise $400 from the sale of these cards in order to help pay for a $1,000 scholarship that has been awarded to Mr. Mathai of the staff of the Union Christian College of Travacor, India. Mr. Mathia is at present studying at Toronto.

California Student Rep Blasts Football Fans For Disgraceful Action

Berkley, Calif., Oct. 28—(CUP)— The conduct of students at a University of California football game was "Disrespectful and shaming our whole university." The representative of the school student council gave this comment on the men's rooting section, traditional at the University of California.

An editorial in the campus newspaper defines this "Disgraceful" conduct as "Thoroughly disgraceful and ribald activities", while the University "Head Yell Leader" referred to the acts defined the actions as "This business of throwing things and putting on pornographic displays."

The all-male rooting section has been one of the features of California home games with their vigorous cheering and stunt cards. However both the newspaper's news story and editorial called for the death knell to be sounded on the male rooting section.

The editorial said "We see only one solution to the recurring problem of what to do about the erring knights of the east-side pews—mixed rooting section throughout." If this were done, the editorial believes "some of the rougher manifestations of unsavory conduct would be missing . . . out of respect to the women."

The signed news story states that "Effects of mass psychology and the presence of liquor among male rooters were named as causes of the behaviour."

The Head Yell Leader stated that the men were not "100 percent at fault" and that he would fight the abolition of the male rooting section "with every weapon available." However he realized the problem and stated that the only weapon "Seems to be joint cooperation of the men in supervising the actions of their own friends."

"What the University of Toronto is doing in SHARE is a step in the right direction," he said. The gifts which have already been made have been of great value, and have been greatly appreciated, he said.

Saksena said, "The field you have chosen for the exercise of your generous impulses is particularly appropriate." He said the educational and health programs in India were very handicapped by a lack of resources.

Much is being done with the aid of many organizations, he said. Hospitals and factories to make drugs have been built, and the Indian Government has awarded scholarships for overseas training. He said, in helping the University of Delhi build a new Medical Centre, we are helping the Indian students.

Warden McCulley, in the closing address of the dinner, said, "to participate in SHARE is not a duty, but a privilege." He said the poorest Canadian student is wealthy compared to thousands in other countries.

Cornerstones Errant Again In West Now

Vancouver Nov. 3 — (CUP) — A cornerstone from the University of Saskatchewan medical building, now under construction at the Saskatoon campus, made a mysterious appearance on the campus of the University of British Columbia last Wednesday morning. The stone appeared in the offices of the campus newspaper, The Ubyssey, after a conference of college newspaper editors in Saskatoon the weekend of November 1st.

The hundred pound stone (called the Grey Stone by UBC students) disappeared from the Saskatchewan campus late Monday night. Disappearance of the stone has developed into an inter-collegiate mystery. The question is "how did the stone get on to the UB campus?"

The Ubyssey editors reported they had no idea. "We haven't got much use for it. Our medical building was completed two years ago," they said. Said editor Allan Fotheringham, "A one hundred pound stone is a little heavy for a paperweight, but it will make a good doorstep."

The Future

No—I think that while NFCUS may not at present be an effective national student body, its destruction would put an end to any initiative which now exists in that direction, and therefore make it that much more difficult to ever again form a strong national federation of students.

NFCUS is an idea that should be strengthened and developed—not destroyed.

John Roberts, III Poli. Sci. and Ec.

Typical

The following are a variety of comments received from several students chosen at random wandering about the campus. They typify the general attitude of most students towards this topic.

"Whenever I see anything about NFCUS I skip over it to the next article."

"I couldn't care less."

"What's that word again? Do you have an impediment in your speech?"

"I don't know enough about it.

United We Fall

"The U of T is the largest body in NFCUS. If we should leave, NFCUS will lose its chief source of revenue. It is likely therefore that NFCUS will fold up. Rather than allow this to happen, the U of T should grin and bear it for at least the next 2 years in the hope that NFCUS will justify itself with the help of increased funds."

Sound Logic

No— not only am I in favour of continued membership of Toronto in NFCUS, but I also think the one-dollar fee a necessity. Student fees at Canadian Universities should be raised $1.00 in order to provide NFCUS with enough funds to give it a chance to prove itself which it has not had due to lack of money. If, then, the federation does not bring corresponding improvements in its performance, then NFCUS should be ended and the student fee reduced to its original size.

Were you overjoyed with the topic of today's forum? Could you think of a better one? If so, please write it on a piece of paper with your name and course, and drop it in or mail it to The Varsity Office in the basement of the SAC Building, or call Lewis Rosenberg at MI. 8742.

Doug Hare, III Emmanuel.

Editorial Comment

Student apathy is the term most applicable to NFCUS. Out of the dozens of representative students questioned for this forum, not more than about ten per cent knew enough about it to give a qualified answer.

Although all students admitted to seeing news of NFCUS in The Varsity, the great majority had no interest in this subject and seldom read any article containing news of NFCUS.

Very few students knew what the purposes of NFCUS are, or what services it does, or is supposed to, provide. However, the general consensus of opinion is that, although the average student admitted to knowing nothing about NFCUS, he still thought that U of T should remain in some national organization and it may as well be NFCUS in lieu of something better.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

SPEAKING OF WORK

While most male undergrads are thinking of beating the rush for those 'superb' meals that they serve for supper in Hart House, the Intramural Sports Committee usually holds their meetings. Such was the case yesterday afternoon about five bells.

The Intramural Sports Committee, in case you didn't know, is the committee of the elected college athletic representatives. Their job, and it's a big one, is to see that the best interests of each college are kept in mind when Intramural sports is the subject of discussion in the Athletic Wing.

INTRAMURAL ELIGIBILITY

On the Interfaculty Sports Page this fine morning you will find a short story about what was accomplished yesterday. The committee discussed a motion to amend the present Intramural eligibility rules. At present the rules do not allow a first color holder to participate in his Intramural sport in the same academic year and sport in which he holds a Varsity color. Attempts were being made to change it so that a color holder couldn't play in his Intramural sport for a whole academic year after playing Varsity. We are glad to see this change turned down. Intramural sport should be open to all undergrads as long as they are not playing for the Varsity.

PROTESTS

At the next meeting the committee will discuss the advisability of allowing only protests on eligibility of players in an Intramural game. If this suggestion is passed as a motion an interfaculty team will not be able to protect an official's decision.

Before you run out and buttonhole your athletic rep to make sure he votes against any such motion it might be wise to stop and ponder the subtle wisdom of the idea.

A SAMPLE

Perhaps as an example, we might cite the case of the Dents' football team last year. In a game with St. Mike's an official called an offside when St. Mike's were within 25 of the Dents' goal line. Instead of measuring off half the distance to the goal line, the referee marched off all five of the penalty yardage to put the ball on the Dents' two. On the next play the Irish scored the game-winning touchdown. Dents lodged a legitimate protest and it was upheld.

It was only the week after this little incident that Dents were feeling hard done by the game officials and lodged a second protest.

NO APOLOGIES

If an official calls a bad play there really isn't much excuse for it. But, on the other hand, the Intramural can't pay more than they are for officials and the talent that is available is not of the highest. So the league has to go along with the student referees, and has a moral obligation to back their judgment. Otherwise, every second play of a game would likely be protested.

So what if a protest might make right? Is it so absolutely necessary for every referee's call to be exactly right? Not in the Interfaculty loop. Then what's the use of protests in the Intramural?

It is to be hoped that the committee will allow only protests to do with the eligibility of players.

END NOTES

Anybody that is ineligible for Intramural sport can appeal his status through the Intramural Sports Committee. There is a crying need for three or four people to write byline material for the sports page. How about having a crack at it? See Moishe Reiter at the sports desk in The Varsity office today between 1 and 1:30 p.m.

Mural Committee

The Intramural Sports Committee held a meeting in the Staff Room of the Athletic Wing yesterday at 5 p.m. and the main topic of discussion was a motion and ammendment to change the eligibility of first color holders in interfaculty sports.

The final decision of the committee was to leave the constitution unchanged. The constitution makes a student ineligible for an intramural sport if he holds a first color in that sport, for the academic year in which the student participates in the Intercollegiate sport.

It was also passed that "a player carried on the squad of the Varsity II hockey team be eligible for intramural hockey competition during the fall term provided he has not participated in more than two games (league or exhibition) for the Varsity team."

At the next committee meeting scheduled for November 23, 1953, the Intramural athletic representatives will discuss the question of protest and will probably decide if it wouldn't be a good idea to

Engineers Mangle Doctors Feature Powerful Passing

By MOISHE REITER

We always thought that it was the Doctors that claimed "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure". Obviously Varsity's aspiring medicine men never heard of that because if they had they might have done something to prevent the fatal 28-0 beating inflicted on them by Skule yesterday in Intramural Football on the back campus.

It developed into a monotonous game afttr the first three Skule touchdown marches. No variety. Skule's great quarterback Don Hart would throw a couple of passes, bringing the Engineers into Meds territory, then any one of the Skule backs would smash through the line for about 10 or 15 yards and the major. With slight variations this was the pattern, and there was poor SPS falling into a rut. All those lads could do was score touchdown after touchdown. They didn't even fumble or have any passes intercepted to break the routine.

The Medsters backfield had few chances to show their stuff with the Skule line whipping through on every play and usually throwing the doctor ball-carriers for big losses. The Engineers, on the other hand, had a swell time out on the squishy field. It wasn't a matter of the Skule runners being hard to stop. There was no one around to get at them. A sturdy Skule wingline took out most of the Medsters so that for the most part the SPS carriers had a clear field.

A typical Skule touchdown drive was their first, coming as soon as they gained possession of the ball. Don Hart threw hard and low to Bruce Day at the Mtds' 32 and Day stepped to the 23 on the play. Hart then went to the ground game sending a man off tackle to the 3. The Medsmen were wholly befuddled by the next Skule manoeuvre as Hart sent Day over on a reverse.

The passing of Don Hart was the big show of the game. Flinging far and hard, Hart wasted no time bringing the Engineers into scoring position. The Skule quarter completed more than half of his throws. The big reason for the success of the Engineers passing game was the protection given Hart. Meds players trying to rush him came up against passer's pocket that couldn't be picked. Receivers are the payoff half of any passing combination and Hart had those laddies in plentiful supply. In one case, late in the final period, a Hart throw down the middle, which Skule linemen had thoughtfully cleared of any obstructing Medsters, had two Engineers fighting with each other to get it. The first one in caught it and went right to the Meds 4-yard-line before he was stopped.

Skule's last touch was the neatest touch of the game. After a penalty had pushed the Engineers back to the Meds' 45, the Skule march seemed to be stopped. The boys from the Little Red Schoolhouse had third down with about 25 to go. But they had just begun to fight—as coach Jack McFarlane told his Skule charges, "We need the points." Hart faded flung to Patterson at the Meds' 30, and while the stunned Medsters were picking up their fallen jaws, the Engineers scooted past them for a touch. Early Ford converted easily, making the score 28-0 for the Skulemen.

We sympathize with Skule's opponents on the matter of Bruce Day. The big Skule wingback is a most frustrating character as far as the opposition is concerned. He does double duty for the powerful Engineers Combines. Ball carriers on the other clubs find him impossible to pass with the ball and impossible to stop when he has it.

Wit this victory the Skules have a season's record of 5 wins against no losses, tops in the league. The Engineers now stand at the top of Division One while St. Mike's with 4 wins are the best in Division Two. Second spot in the First Division is in the grasping hands of UC and Vic, both of which are fighting for that last precious playoff place. Trinity is fighting off a Forestry come-back that could put them out of the race.

Tonight Vic and UC Redmen meet in a match that should decide the final standings. UC are stronger than in the first game with Vic and figure to give the Scarlet and Gold a rough time. Should UC win they will be able to do no worse than tie Vic for the second spot. If Vic wins they are in and UC just have to face up to their final butchering at the hands of Skule.

Doctors Beat St. Michael's In Volleyball

Meds II year are going to give all comers a run for the title in the Intramural Volleyball League. The men of Meds came off to a good start yesterday as they whipped St. Mike's B team in two straight. The Meds men took the first easily running up a 15-0 count over the stunned Mike's.

But the Mikesmen came back fighting in the second match and before they could win the Medsmen had a very rough time of it, finally managing to edge the fighting Irish by a 15-5 score. Bernie Langer, Intercollegiate swimming star was a valuable man for the Meds team with some good spiking and set-ups.

SPS Boxla Civil War

There was a slight case of Civil War in the lower Gym of Hart House yesterday as two SPS squads squared off for a Lacrosse match that saw the IIds emerge the victors by a 4-1 count.

Broger performed the hat trick for the winners as he notched three important goals, the second of which was the winning tally. Campbell slipped a close one in to keep the losers from being blanked.

Benny Says—

One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, phoned late last night to say that all the smart money is on Skule for the Mulock.

Intramural Ice Workouts Starting

Things are back to normal in Varsity Arena. The maintenance crew has to make an appointment three weeks in advance if they want to get time to scrape the slush off the ice surface. Reason for the flurry of activity, which sees the rink busy practically around the clock, is that the 33 interfaculty hockey teams have been practicing for a week now in preparation for the opening of the schedule on Nov. 23, roughly two weeks from now.

The set-up this year is virtually unchanged from last year's arrangement. The only exception is that the Pre-Meds' squad was feeling mighty powerful and requested a move up the ladder. The result is that they are now in Group Two of the First Division. The Dentistry "A" team moves down to the third grouping.

In Group One are the first-strings squads from UC, SPS, Victoria, St. Michael's and Medicine. Last year's Division One champions, Junior SPS head the list of teams returning to Group Two, with Jr. Vic, Trinity "A", Pre-Meds and Jr. UC completing the list. There are six groups in all, with SPS represented in each one, including two in Group Four, giving the Skulemen a total of seven teams.

There are only two groupings in Division Two, with Forestry "A", Pharmacy, Law and Architecture in the first and Knox, Emmanuel, Wycliffe and Forestry "B" in the other. Forestry is defending champion.

Fifteen teams will take part in an extensive play-off system when the schedule ends in January. In Division One, the first two loops send three teams each to the play-downs with Group Three adding three and one each coming from the other three leagues. In Division Two, each group produces two teams for the play-offs.

The Division Two champions have the right to challenge Division One for the unofficial intra-mural championship.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Talkabout anti-climaxes this is really the end! Yesterday was slated to see the end of women's softball in a battle between Saint Hilda's firsts and a corresponding Vic team. Everyone was set to ignore the stormy blasts and fight it to the finish but on the Vic bulletin board was a sign to the effect that the Saints had not only conceded the game but the whole final series.

We can't say we blame the gals; one look at Trinity field was enough. Football goes on in spite of sleet or snow but horse racing (oops how did that get in) and softball can't — and it didn't.

Last week we threw a blast at the softball final schedule; now we can safely say, "see what we meant." Friday's game was an example of what can happen when a first and second rate team meet to decide the championship. The Vic crew wiped out two other league leaders while the Saints took care of their pair of second-placers. This left the final series with two very unevenly matched teams to battle for top honours. As was expected the uneveness resulted in a 24-3 win for Vic last Friday.

This is not the way to run a final series and a more effective method must be found for next year. We will stick to our previous recommendation of three first teams playing for top position within themselves and a separate series within the seconders for second spot in the loop. All games here would be held in a double round robin series. It hardly seems fair that PHE first and second year should have lost out due to a single loss when they were league leaders in the final analysis. A final meet between any of the three top ranking teams might have told a different story and instead of default we could have had a slam bang series worthy of note.

The schedule makers have argued that listings had to be made to conform to weather. November is a bit chilly when it comes down

Meds Gals Winners

Meds A slipped one over on Vic Sr. Jr.'s in an exciting hard-checking basketball game at OCE last night. The gals played a fast furious game throughout with Sally Wallace shooting high score for the evening.

Vic had the edge over Meds in the first half, and both teams fought madly to break the 8-8 tie in the second quarter. Meds' guards came to life in the third quarter to ward off the fighting Vic forwards who only managed to shoot for one point. At three-quarter time, the astonished Meds were ahead with eleven points.

In the fourth, Marj. Platts upped the tally again for Meds, only to have Sandy McClung and Allison Roach come thundering in to boost the lagging Viesters in the last two minutes of play. Time ran out for them in the middle of their spurt and the hassle ended in a 15-13 victory for Meds A.

Sally Wallace got top honors for scoring with ten of Meds 15 points.

give up hope altogether. However, unless Toronto could start a national federation, which is doubtful, I think the University should stay in NFCUS. Certainly, no one will miss the price of a pack of cigarettes, and that's all the individual cost of staying in would be. Anyway, perhaps by next year, we could get an engineer to show the artsmen how to run things."

Can It Take It?

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

The Experts Know

To all intents and purposes, the day when reasonable criticism could be taken and accepted for what it was worth has gone by the boards. People in general, and nations in particular, are more and more looking down longer noses at people who raise their voice to question autocratic methods or policies.

It may be that criticism has never been welcome in any form of government—though we are taught differently. Even if there was none, ever before, there is no reason that in our great Twentieth Century we cannot sit down and give any verbal attack serious consideration.

But we are above that. We have experts who knaw what is best for the individual. We have diplomats in one country, who can decide policy for millions of people in other lands whether or not they are financial dependents. But in this day and age we accept the fact that one country supporting another controls the very dust in the streets of the second, and cannot be told no.

Of course, compatible relationships between two countries must be established. But at what cost, pray? Is no one to be permitted to draw a line, or cry, hold, enough? It seems a few will still try, but they are getting their knuckles rapped for it.

The great Twentieth Century has, it seems, already established its way of life. International leadership has reverted to international dictatorship, and like the rabble on relief, we cannot look our gift horse in the mouth.

At least we can try to maintain an internal society where someone might be permitted to ask a question of policy. But this would be allowing unnecessary privileges. People might even ask questions of international policy, and that would be fatal. No, if nothing else, we can at least be consistent.

But we are above that. We have experts who know who will still raise their feeble voice. Their echo will be heard till we have resolved ourselves to idiots.

No Comment

The Varsity did not intentionally wish to cast any aspirations on the calibre of the University of Toronto Police Force. On the contrary, the force made a commendable effort to make certain idiot students realize the seriousness of injuries that can be incurred in snowball fights.

The police have a tough time of it at football games. But too many students, it seems, think they are there to convict someone. Is it not much more probable that they are there to prevent innocent students from unnecessary attack, whether from beer-bottles or time bombs?

Old And Helpless?

It Depends On Students

In an effort to present the views in favor of NFCUS, Scott Symons, one of the two Toronto delegates, writes this article.

By SCOTT SYMONS

The National Federation of Canadian University Students has been criticised as an old and helpless student federation which does not face up to its problems and which hence is contributing nothing to Canadian university life. Any worthwhile organization welcomes criticism, provided it is based on a knowledge of the problems the organization faces; and provided, too, that it is reasonable and constructive. However the criticisms which have appeared recently, while possibly given in a constructive spirt, have betrayed a msunderstanding or ignorance of the aims and background of the National Student Federation.

THE NFCUS, IN REALITY, is a new organization undergoing all the usual pains of growth. For, while it was in existence by 1929, the depression and the war prevented its development. Its present growth stems back only to 1947, when the idea of a national federation was revived. At present it needs badly interest and constructive comment from Canadian students. Fortunately the federation is already receiving considerable support. Three Universities joined again this year so that now every major university and four-fifths of Canadian university students support its work. In addition it seems likely that the remaining small universities outside NFCUS will join shortly. They are being encouraged this year to participate in the national university art competition to be held by NFCUS at Toronto and in the national university short story competition to be arranged by Bishops College.

CRITICISM HAS BEEN made of paying 50c to a federation which can offer the Canadian student so little when compared to the work of the European student unions. But it must be remembered that Canadian universities have their own particular problems. This year in an attempt to give a greater consistency to the NFCUS aims we have elected a full-time national president. It will be his job to give the coordination necessary for the successful work on projects such as the suggested Canada scholarships. He also will represent the Canadian universities in negotiations such as occurred last winter when a 5% reduction in textbook prices was achieved.

Queeries were made as to the faithfulness of NFCUS in representing student opinion. It is because NFCUS does so well representing Canadian students' opinions that it has such difficulties. Canada's own story is one of conflicts and differences—racial, political and religious. Her very geography has precluded a cohesive union. It would not be reasonable to expect NFCUS to evade or to solve easily at the student level problems of racial and religious co-operation which affect all aspects of our national life.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO is Canada's largest university, and as such she tends to advocate might as right. The result is that the smaller universities while looking to Toronto for leadership also view her with a certain amount of suspicion and, too, of jealousy. It is very important that we try to understand the special problems that face the smaller universities and the areas they represent. And within NFCUS Varsity is in a particularly good position to meet and to understand these problems.

There have been suggestions of withdrawal from NFCUS . . . and these should be given careful thought for Toronto's withdrawal would be a fatal blow to a young and growing, and hence unstable, organization. However there is no indication that a new organization would per se solve our problems. Perhaps if the critics devoted their time to constructive work for the present organization they could best achieve their aims For in the final analysis the success or failure of NFCUS largely depends on the support of interested students such as they are.

NEXT YEAR THE NFCUS conference will be at Toronto. Then is the time to best assess the progress made after a year under a full-time president. Between now and then it would be most worthwhile to support its work in every way possible.

Our Readers Write:

The Human Mind Laid Bare

The Editor,
The Varsity:
The city:

It is a sorry thing to see a University student champion the cause of "feelthy jokes" in campus productions. It is not only a sorry thing in the eyes of the "Prissy minority," but more it is an even sorrier thing to observe the workings, laid bare, of a human mind that apparently needs "feelthy jokes" in order to exist. One feels sorry for an individual who attends a production, to return and demand of the general public why that production contained no "real heman jokes."

Paragraph three of that restatement: "A feelthy joke only affects a feelthy mind." I would be interested to know what kind of mind it is that craves such jokes to the extent that the owner of that mind would stand up (without divulging his name naturally enough) and demand filthy jokes, in order that his mind might have something to ciate. The writer goes on to say that the McPhersons, the Armstrongs and the Sparrows would make of him an introvert. Does make of him an introvert. Does he think Hush, Maid in the Ozarks and The Moon is Blue will make him into an extrovert and what he imagines he already is, a campus character. I feel J. D. should be informed that you don't have to be a budding sex degenerate to be an extrovert.

Lastly he seems to feel that unless a show is loaded down with pure unadulterated sex for the panting and drooling audience, it kills spontaneity and hence the show. If he can back that every successful novel and fact I'll be glad to see what can do to warp my mind on his behalf. We are informed by him that every successful novel and every successful stage production has a liberal sprinkling of man's driving force. What does he consider a successful novel, The Cruel Sea, The Robe, or I, The Jury; or what does he consider a successful stage production, but he makes that clear — Maid of the Ozarks?

Someone had better inform J. D. that Le Lac de Cygnes does not mean the Lake of Sins or we'll really have an introvert on our hands and a frustrated one at that.

Tom Robinson.

The Cat's Practical Letter Of All-Purpose Protest

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I was (amazed, revolted, sickened, nauseated, overwhelmed, unimpressed) by the (letter, editorial, cartoon) in . . .'s Varsity. It is shocking that such an imbecile as (Mr., Miss, Mrs., Dr.) . . . could ever have become (a University student, a professor of Oriental History, Editor of The Varsity, a human being). (His, her) (adolescent, senescent, sickening, prepubescent, infantile) attacks are as empty of fact as they are of r e a s o n (or vice-versa). I, for one, am not ashamed of the epithet (gentleman, idealist, intellectual, reactionary, red, Christian, atheist, pig) which (he, she) hurls at all whose superior intelligence, and more mature experience enable them to realize how wrong (he, she) is. If (Mr., Miss, etc) would devote even a modicum of serious consideration to the problem which (he, she) treats so superficially, frivously, brainlessly), even (his, her) rudimentary mentality would be impressed with the untenability of (his, her) position.

I am (damn) (sick, tired, a- - wearied) of these (would-be, so- - called) (reformers, heroes, saints, devils) who have the (gall, effrontery, temerity, stupidity, arrogance) to set themselves up against (ME, or any reasonable synonym) and (My opinion, the wisdom of the ages, the considered actions of wiser men, The Truth.) I would respectfully suggest that . . . . take (gas, hemlock, a long walk on a short dock, a course in basket-weaving, a subway ride, X-lax). I could prove everything I say in this letter, but space forbids. Why doesn't . . . . provide some evidence for (his, her) totally unfounded (a s s u m p t i o n s, sophistries, lies)? I fear that (pigs, atheists, Christians, reds, reactionaries, intellectuals, idealists, gentlemen) like . . . . are impervious to the unembroidered logic of such as (I, me). However, I want you to know that I never thought (much, anything) of The Varsity, and now I think even less. I don't know why you print such (a word of the writer's own selection).

Signed . . . . . .

Mockery

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Guy Fawkes day is at hand. It is to be hoped that, 1) the model parliament committee has looked to its cellars; 2) the model parliament committee realizes that there is a vacant gallows and bonfire over at Vic. This corruption, this mockery of government must be done away.

Now where did I put that magnesium and 1, 3, 5-trinitro-1, 3, 5-triazascyclohexane.

News Page Melting Pot — McLuhan

The criterion of news reporting is not actual facts but a question such as "Will it appeal to the milkman in Oklahoma or his wife?" Professor McLuhan said last night. "But," he added, "if you regard the news page as a piece of art it tells about society. Its mosaic pattern of items is intensely more interesting than the news." He said mass communication is primarily anonymous but the page itself is a melting pot and has tremendous emotions associated with it.

Dr. McLuhan, professor of English at St. Michael's College and author of "The Mechanical Bride" addressed a capacity crowd of men and women at the Hart House library on the subject of "Anonymous History."

Anonymous history was defined as "the use of trivial items to reconstruct the inside story of human society." Prof. McLuhan took the assembly line as an example of the pattern which the people of our time have chosen to develop. It is a two-way process of analysis and reassembly, he said. The method of the detective who reconstructs a pattern from a series of fragments of evidence is the same process, he said.

Dr. McLuhan stated that a valuable clue for anonymous history is that man gives much more attention to some aspects of his sensory life than others. As he looked out the window he said, "We put up with visual horrors a medieval person would not tolerate and the auditory aspects of our advancement are hideous."

To explain the statement, "Ordinary objects you see around you express the wishes and impulses of the whole culture". Dr. McLuhan described the department store as a projection of a printed page of ads for various products, and the newspaper as a projection of the wireless.

Making a plea for anonymous history, Dr. McLuhan said, "It is desirable to translate into human terms objects which are masterpieces of rational technique." Things are meaningless for us except in terms of statistics. "If we could study an automobile with detachment," he said, "it would become an exotic, curious thing."

Our emotional satisfactions are rather infantile in the modern world, according to Dr. McLuhan. "Modern science wants to find a formula for control and does not want to understand the results or even the thing it is controlling."

Dr. H. McLuhan

Remembrance and Birthday

Birthday

Hart House is celebrating a birthday today.

Thirty-four years ago today, November 11, 1911, Hart House was officially opened. The house is the gift of the Massey Foundation, in memory of Hart Massey, father of The Right Honourable Vincent Massey, C.H., Canada's Governor-General.

Construction of the House was started before World War I, but was delayed until the completion of the War.

The majestic, gray building in its perpendicular Gothic style is a world-famous structure, steeped in tradition. Scores of thousands of men, and more recently women, have used the many facilities of the House.

Its purpose is to advance the knowledge of music, the arts and letters, and to encourage "suppleness of limb" among undergraduates.

The most famous single room in the House is Great Hall, with its almost Church-like Gothic architecture. In its kitchens over one million meals are prepared annually.

Ceremony

Today at Soldiers' Tower the Annual Service of Remembrance and Consecration will be held. The service starts at 10:00 a.m. and will be over shortly after 11:00 a.m.

Wreaths will be placed by the SAC, Princess Anne Chapter, IODE, the Presidents of College and Faculty Associations and a University wreath.

The COTC will provide the guard of honor, sentries and a bugler. The chairman of the Board of Governors, the Chancellor, the President, Senate and Teaching Staff will form the Procession that will lead off from Simcoe Hall. The Soldiers' Tower Carillon will be played before and after the ceremony.

All ten and eleven o'clock lectures will be cancelled. Classes will resume at 12.00 noon.

Harvard Crimson Doesn't See Red

Senator McCarthy has been the centre of attack in still another student newspaper.

An editorial in the Harvard Crimson of Cambridge, Mass., last week challenged the Wisconsin Senator to "put up or shut up" on his charge that Harvard students are being exposed to "Communist professors and party philosophy."

The editorial said it knows of "no faculty member who acted as if he were under Communist domination" and called on McCarthy to "actually name the professor or professors at Harvard who are Communists."

Dr. Nathan M. Tusey, Harvard president, commented that "... because of its very gravity, McCarthy's charge, if false, becomes perhaps the most irresponsible untruth he has ever spoken. And until he can show there is a member of the faculty who is now a Communist, his charge is wholly unacceptable."

Society of Today Sinks Individual Says Lady Violet

"In our present society the individual is submerged; we must resist mass produced ideas to count and remain as a whole man", said Lady Violet Bonham Carter OBE in the Sir Robert Falconer Lecture lectures to be delivered by her in the Sir Robert Falsoner Lecture last night.

The topic of Lady Violet's speech was "British Democracy Today and Yesterday—the Challenge to the Individual".

After a short history of the Sir Robert Falconer Lecture by Chancellor Beatty, Lady Violet was introduced by President Smith. Her first lecture consisted of a resume of the rise of British Democracy starting in the early 19th century.

In her introductory remarks she expressed her deep gratitude for the opportunity to give the Falconer lecture and said, "I see that if I am not careful, I may be the first as well as the last woman to give the lecture."

Lady Violet went on to discuss the danger that present democracies found themselves in. Quoting from a recent speech of Governor-General Massey who said, "We are in danger of learning the How and forgetting the Why", referring to the lethargic attitude of present citizens of democracies, she also added that the common disposition of people towards democracy is to live within the law and to consider this the discharge of our duty to democracy.

Lady Violet then went on to give a factual survey of the Evolution of British Democracy. She termed politics the impact of vast impersonal acts carried on in an extremely impersonal way. The rise of British democracy has a long tradition; the upsurge of it was not really felt until the Middle 19th Century, when many manifestations of modern democracy made themselves known. These she listed as the laws againts Child Labour, secret ballot, freedom of the press, the rise of the trade union movement; a combination of these and other factors achieved democracy, and it was done without violence.

Lady Violet then went on to give short biographical sketches of the prominent politicians in British Democracy. She started with Disraeli, then Gladstone, Lord Asquith who was Lady Violet's father, Lloyd George, Edward Grey, and Winston Churchill.

In closing Lady Violet said "We should strive to build a world in which we can live for freedom rather than die for it".

VCU Backs Membership In NFCUS

The Victoria College union assembly defeated a motion on Monday night that the University of Toronto withdraw from the National Federation of Canadian University Students

A motion by Sam Murphy III Vic that the VCU support the withdrawel of the U of T from NFCUS and that the money be used for SHARE, sparked an hour and a ahlf discussion by the Assembly on the merits and potentialities, or futility of NFCUS. The motion about which debate revolved omitted any mention of the alternative uses to which the money saved could be put. VCU President Ken Cork III Vic, pointed out that in bringing in reference to SHARE the main issue was being sidestepped and railroaded

A phrase in the NFCUS report to the effect that NFCUS would cease to be a pressure group, provoked much discussion. Publicity Director Basil Moore II Vic indicated that NFCUS could and should be a pressure group. He advocated that the U of T stay in NFCUS, but only on condition that NFCUS change. SAC rep Hamlin, IV Vic, provided members of the Assembly with copies of the NFCUS conference report to facilitate discussion.

Debaters' Union Chooses Judges

The Judges for the University of Toronto Debating Union have been chosen. They are Father Platt of St. Mike's and Professor Bagnani from U.C.

Neither the Judges nor the place for the women's competition have as yet been chosen. The open competition is to be held on Nov. 13, in room 8 of UC. The topic for both competitions will be "Resolved that McCarthyism is a greater threat to democracy than Communism."

Earl Berger, chairman of the UTDU said he hoped that the competitions would be well attended as "we have some Real George debating tours arranged for all interested cretins."

Vic Weathers UC Storm

By FRED GRAY

Intramural football action yesterday saw Vic take over sole possession of second spot in the first division as they bested the U.C. Tigers 15-11 in what proved to be one of the best played games in the league to date.

U.C., playing heads-up ball, jumped into a first-quarter lead as Jerry Hugo, dropping back to pass was unable to locate his receivers and, electing to run, galloped 55 yards past the startled Vic defenders for a touchdown. Jerry stepped in to convert his own T.D. Vic fought back strongly and were rewarded with their first major in the second quarter. Gaining control of the ball deep in D.C. territory, some fine running by backs Bill Rogers and Bob Goudie set the Scarlet and Gold in a scoring position and Rogers charged over to score. The convert attempt was ruled no good.

Starting the second half on the losing end of a 6-5 score the Vic squad settled down to the serious task of winning with a third quarter offensive that netted them two touchdowns. Capitalizing on U.C. errors to move into pay-off territory Vic took the lead when Bob Goudie capped a well-played game by scoring the second touchdown. The U.C. line broke through to block the convert attempt. Pouncing on a U.C. fumble in the Tigers end Vic carried to the U.C. through for the T.D. The U.C.line were again able to break through and block the convert.

Fighting desperately to get back 12-yard line from where Jack Gavers, playing well in his first outing as quarterback, danced in the game the Tigers filled the air in the last quarter with passes. Fading back almost to his own goal line Jerry Hugo produced the play of the game as he hit Ed Richardson with a long pass and Ed outran the Vic players to travel 50 yards for a major. The convert attempt was blocked.

U.C. launched a final drive by kicking short and recovering the ball after their touchdown. This effort was stopped in its tracks though as Don Lewis intercepted a Hugo forward pass.

Roberts' 16 Points Sparks PHE Win

The first of Tuesday night's threesome in basketball ended in a 35-11 win for PHE third year over Vic sophs. Vic had all odds against them having been out to two practises all season and played accordingly.

PHE opened the scoring early in the match on a long shot by Shirley Roberts, Shirley was high scorer of the meet tallying 18 for her squad.

It wasn't till the second quarter that the Viesters got a chance to tally. Most of this segment's play was down in the Vic corner and ended 22-5 for Physed.

After the usual formalities of oranges and half-time chat, the gals got back to good basketball. It didn't last long as PHE held play around Vic's basket for 13 more.

While Shirley Roberts was high scorer, her team-mate Nancy Kercher tallied six. Bev. Bailey rang up five for the losers.

Later, Vic Freshies' "A" team downded St. Mike's 'B' 29-16. Mary Foster showed the way by scoring 15 points, with Maxine Thompson adding six. Ann Kotze scored 10 for the losers.

JV Icemen Find Loop For 1954

After one season of catch-as-catch-can competition, Varsity's intermediate hockey team will find itself in a league this season. At a meeting of the Southwestern Ontario conference of the CIAU last week, it was decided to revive the intermediate hockey league which had been inactive last winter, although the teams competed with each other in exhibition games.

Toronto, Western and Ontario Agricultural College have agreed to enter teams, with McMaster a possible fourth entry. Waterloo College will also play these teams in an exhibition series and will have the right at the end of the season to challenge the league champions for the conference title. Toronto will also play home-and-home exhibition games with Osgoode Hall and the Ryerson Institute.

The Intermediates don't open their schedule until after Christmas but their big brothers, the senior Blues, play the senior "B" Lyndhurst Motors crew on Nov. 21 and open their home schedule against Montreal Carabins on Nov. 27.

To The Speakers

Sirs, you rise today to pay tribute to those who fought in the wars and have not returned. You will lead the many prayers.

But, sirs, let us also remember why the wars were fought. They were not fought to pave the way for other wars.

Yet today you will stand on the platform across the country and say we have "failed the fallen".

It does little to say you have failed. You, sirs, as the leaders of our country, have had the chance not to fail. Today is the one day of the year you come out and admit failure, but what do you do the other 364 days? If the eight post-war years are any indication, we would say you are not doing much to live up to the hopes the dead have passed on to the living.

A cutthroat competition for arms that in the long run cuts the throats of those that fight the wars, is no answer. Sirs, the blunders of our messy world rest on your collective shoulders.

"Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked, and we who fail to prevent them must share in guilt for the dead."

To The Listeners

You will stand at a very short ceremony today. You will listen to prayers, and you will bow your head for two minutes. In those two minutes you might cry.

But if that is all the two minutes have meant to you, then the Remembrance Day ceremony has been lost. If you walk away to the same life with the same values and with no desire to alter those values so that wars may end, then the two-minutes silence has been just silence. You might just as well not have attended, for you will have shown yourself as a hypocrite.

If you leave the ceremony believing that peace can be found only through strength, then you will have betrayed those for whom you have bowed your head. If peace is to be found, it will be in an atmosphere of neighbourliness and understanding.

When the tears, if any, roll from your eyes today let them be sincere and honest. Don't wipe them away and forget what caused them. Roll up your sleeves and do something to prove to the men whose day this is that we have not abandoned their ideals.

"Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked, and we who fail to prevent them must share in guilt for the dead."

To Those Who . . .

You donned the uniforms and you manned the guns. Now you are not here. Life was no less precious to you than is is to us.

We know you did not GIVE your life; you wanted it as much as we want ours. You left your education, or your family, or your sweetheart, to defend the principles on which your country was built. You fought for a world in which young people could get a complete education, in which families could stay together, in which sweethearts could remain near.

We have not that world.

Instead we have a world that is not too different from the one in which you once lived. Peace or war is still the most vital question, and the shadows of a global conflagration continually hang over us.

But we are the ones who have failed, not you. We are the ones who are standing before the Soldiers' Tower today, speaking and listening. And we are the ones who will return to our daily lives tomorrow as if this were just an ordinary day.

A little girl may place a homemade wreath at the base of the Tower. No one will see her. No, we must rush off to do our work; we are too selfish to worry about the kind of world she is going to grow up in. You may be her father; you would have worried about her world.

But we have failed to take over where you have left off. We have, too smugly, closed our eyes to the fact that:

"Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked, and we who fail to prevent them must share in guilt for the dead." (General Omar Bradley, Memorial Day, 1948).

The Last Post?

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

A Thing Of Past And Future

Below, we have reprinted parts of the text of United States' President Eisenhower's speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors. He delivered the speech last April 16, but we felt that the spirit and meaning of his address is extremely appropriate to Remembrance Day.

Eisenhower, perhaps more clearly than anyone in the post-war world, expresses the real meaning of the hopes behind the desire for peacee in the world. He says there is no place for armaments and for butter. He declares that arms are "a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, and those who are cold and are not clothed".

The question of peace is

President Eisenhower:

The Black Tide of Events

(From a speech by U.S. President Eisenhower)

In the spring of 1963, the free world weighed one question above all others: the chance for a just peace for all peoples.

To weigh this chance is to summon instantly to mind another recent moment of great decision. It came with that more hopeful spring of 1945, bright with the promise of victory and of freedom. The hope of all just men in that moment, too, was a just and lasting peace.

THE EIGHT YEARS THAT have passed have seen that hope waver, grow dim, and almost die. And the shadow of fear again has darkly lengthened across the world . . . The nations of the world have divided to follow two distinct roads.

This has been the way of life forged by eight years of fear and force. What can the world — or any nation in it — hope for if no turning is found on the dread road? The worst to be feared and the best to be expected can be simply stated.

THE WORST IS ATOMIC WAR. The best would be this: A life of perpetual fear and tension; a burden of arms draining the wealth and the labor of all peoples; a wasting of strength that defies the American system or the Soviet system or any system to achieve true abundance and happiness for the peoples of this earth.

Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies—in the final sense—a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed. This world in arms is not spending money alone.

IT IS SPENDING THE SWEAT of its laborers, the genius of its scientists, the hopes of its children.

The cost of one modern heavy bomber is this: A modern brick school in more than 30 cities. Or two electric power plants, each serving a town of 60,000 population. Or two fine, fully-equipped hospitals. Or some 50 miles of concrete highway.

We pay for a single fighter plane with a half-million bushels of wheat. We pay for a single destroyer with new homes that could have housed more than 8,000 people.

THIS, I REPEAT, is the best way of life to be found on the road the world has been taking. This is not a way of life at all, in any true sense. Under the cloud of threatening war, it is humanity hanging from a cross of iron.

These plain and cruel truths define the peril and point the hope that (comes with the year 953). This is one of those times in the affairs of nations when the gravest choices must be made if there is to be a turning toward a just and lasting peace. It is a moment that calls upon the governments of the world to speak their intentions with simplicity and with honesty. It calls upon them to answer the question which stirs the hearts of all sane men: Is there no way the world may live?

WE WELCOME EVERY HONEST act of peace. We care nothing for mere rhetoric. We care only for sincerity of peaceful purpose, attested by deeds. The opportunities for such deeds are many. The performance of a great number of them waits upon no complex protocol but upon the simple will to do them.

This we do know: A world that begins to witness the rebirth of trust among nations can find its way to a peace that is neither partial nor punitive. With all who will work in good faith toward such a peace we are ready—with renewed resolve—to strive to redeem the near-lost hopes of our day.

THE PEACE WE SEEK, founded upon decent trust and co-operative effort among nations, can be fortified, not by weapons of war, but by wheat and by cotton, by milk and by wool, by meat and by timber and by rice. These are words that translate into every language on earth.

The hunger for peace is too great, the hour in history too late, for any government to mock men's hopes with mere words and promises and gestures. The test is clear.

THERE IS BEFORE ALL peoples a precious chance to turn the black tide of events. If we failed to strive to seize this chance, the judgment of future ages would be harsh and just.

If we strive but fail, and the world remains armed against itself, it at least need be divided no longer in its clear knowledge of who has condemned humankind to this fate. (Our policies) conform to our firm faith that God created men to enjoy, not destroy, the fruits of the earth and of their own toil. They aspire to this: the lifting from the backs and from the hearts of men, of the burden of arms and of fears, so that they may find before them a golden age of freedom and of peace.

The Unknown Soldier

One day a man came to my door,

Saying, "We, your freely elected representatives, have declared a war.

"We stand for freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and freedom of thought.

"And you're going to protect those freedoms, Buster, whether you like it or not."

To make me appreciate living in a democratic nation

They taught me to do exactly what they told me, without either question or hesitation.

For, though nobody said it, all of them thought it:

"No one fights for his freedom, whose already got it."

They taught me to stand very straight, and to polish my brasses,

In case the enemy should have mislaid his glasses.

The Padre said: "God is with you, my lads; go, slaughter the Huns!"

And meanwhile their Padre was telling them, "Gott ist mit uns!"

And "Damn it, men," said the Major (who frequently cursed)

"Don't be afraid, they won't kill you. Not if you kill them first!"

Kick in their teeth! Bayonet, bomb and strafe!

You're doing it to make the world safe.

So we went. And we charged. And I stepped on a mine. I came down in showers.

And I never found out if the mine had been theirs or ours.

Posterity said: "Don't moan over it.

"Your grave won't contain very much, but we'll give you a beautiful stone over it".

They were true to their word. They built me columns with nothing to support.

And bicycle sheds of the more expensive short.

But do me a favour, will you, bud?

If you have to shed something, make it bicycles; not more blood.

Two Minutes

We Remembered

By BOB BROWN

"Take these for your examples; like them, remember that prosperity can be only for the Free, that Freedom is the sure possession of those alone who have the Courage to defend it." (Inscription on War Memorial, near Soldiers' Tower.)

The date was November 11, 1953. The clock on Soldiers' Tower showed 10.45.

The Academic Procession wound slowly and with dignity across the front campus, their gold and red and brilliant blue of their trim contrasting with the predominate black of their academic gowns. First came the gold mace of the University, then the Chancellor, the President, the heads of the Colleges and Faculties. . . .

The procession slowly came towards the Soldiers' Tower, past the stiff lines of blue and brown marking the University's COTC contingent drawn up in front of the Observatory. The carillon finished playing "O Valiant Hearts", and began "O God Our Help In Ages Past". The sound of the bells rang out sweetly over the campus.

The procession reached the blue-draped wooden platform near the base of the Tower. The band began to play the first bars of the Hymn —

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come. . . .
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defence is sure.

The Lord's Prayer was repeated.

President Sidney Smith then pronounced the Prayers of Remembrance and Consecration. "They are first in our hearts today — those gallant sons and daughters who gave all that they could give. We should dedicate ourselves to the task they left to us, so that their sacrifices may not be in vain . . . so that we can have a world in which children can grow up unafraid."

The three servicemen before the monument slowly and deliberately placed their rifle's muzzle down before them.

The last Post rang out clearly in the crisp Autumn air.

Two minutes of Silence.

Reveille. The servicemen returned their rifles to their shoulders. The wreaths were placed before the memorial, Chancellor Beatty on behalf of the entire University, John Stalker and Jennifer Rickard, President and Vice-President of SAC, on behalf of the students. . . . The bright, cheerful colours of the flowers showed up well against the grey, cold stone of the memorial.

The sailors, soldiers, and airmen quickly formed up and moved smartly away, their arms swinging in unison.

The carillon began to play again. The tune was "Gaudeamus Igatur". Guadeamus igatur, Iuvenes d um sumus. The words of the oldest of all college songs. . . . Let us therefore rejoice, while yet our youth is left to us. . . .

SAC To Remain In NFCUS But Kills Permanent Head

Toronto's decision against a fee raise this year has wiped out the position of permanent president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. But Toronto also decided to remain in NFCUS, over the protests of Law and Engineering.

At last night's SAC meeting, NFCUS chairman, Scott Symons, said Toronto's repudiation of their former stand on the thirty cents per capita fee raise had cost the federation $2,500. National NFCUS president, Tony Enriquez, stated in letter to Symons that this loss had virtually ended any possibility of financing the office of permanent president this year.

After giving up a year of my life for NFCUS activities, Enriquez wrote, the axe has fallen.

The position of NFCUS national president required that Enriquez give up a year of his schooling to devote all his time to the federation. He would be paid a salary to travel from university to university across Canada publicizing NFCUS.

The adoption of a full-time president at the Montreal Conference last month was called "the largest NFCUS project for nationalizing Canadian student activity." Without Toronto's support there is no chance to have this project implemented this year.

Symons asked the Council to make up Toronto's "other commitments" by "a series of auctions." This money would go to paying the NFCUS share in the Co-Ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students and the annual conference of the Secretariat to be held this year in Istanbul, Turkey.

Asked by Finance Commissioner, Don Lowe, SPS, to explain what Toronto commitments had been made at the Montreal conference, Symons answered that Toronto's decision was based on the one dollar mandate given them last ytar.

Symons said that while he had believed the fee increase could be paid by the SAC this year, Jennifer Rickard, the other NFCUS delegate had been convinced that Toronto would be unable to pay the raise since the fees had already been levied. On that basis no firm commitment was given at the conference, Symons added.

The Council refused to guarantee a NFCUS raise next year without getting permission from the Board of Governors first. This permission would have to be given before February.

The SAC also stipulated that Toronto would back a fee increase for NFCUS next year, only if all the member universities in the federation paid the raise.

High Court Royalty Fee Affects HH

A recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada will mean that organizations holding dances at Hart House must pay royalties on dance music played by their orchestras, said the Comptroller of Hart House, Mr. W. R. Cowan. The case before the court involved a dispute between the West End Kiwanis, who operate Casa Loma, and the Composers, Authors, and Publishers Association.

The Supreme Court decision was that the Kiwanis must pay royalties on all songs played by orchestras at Casa Loma to the Association. Mr. Cowan stated that this will also mean that royalties or author's fees must be paid on music performed at Hart House dances to the Composers, Authors, and Publishers Association.

Trinity Anti-McCarthy And For Effigy Bonfire

The Trinity College Literary and Athletic Society last night passed a motion justifying the effigy burning of US Senator Joe McCarthy by a vote of 16-12.

First speaker for the government, Doug Hill, III Trinity supporting the resolution, "that in the opinion of this house, the burning of an effigy of Senator McCarthy was justified", attacked both McCarthy himself, and his methods. Hill quoted freely from the campaign speeches of Adlai Stevenson, presidential candidate for the democrats in the last US election.

Speaking against the motion, Paul Bacon, II Trin., reiterated his support of the Senator, a stand which led to his resignation from the position as News Editor of The Varsity. "There are times when thought control are necessary," he said, "particularly in a fight against Communism."

Ken Freedy, II Trin., speaking against the motion, said the Victoria College demonstration held no significance. "It was simply mass hysteria," he said, "and since that does not mean anything, there is no opposition to McCarthy."

Speaking from the floor, Bob Johnstone, IV Trin., said the group should not have tampered with US foreign policy.

Youth And Innocence

By GORDON FULLER

"Youth of the Whole World!" (All other youths from other worlds are not allowed.) "Let us celebrate with joy and optimism World Youth Day." (All right, let's, parties are fun.)

It's nice getting invitations in the mail, even if it is someone else's mail and I am not going to tell you whose mail it is until you've read further.

This whinging is going to be a rip-snorter, with all youth pledged to "unity in the struggle for peace and our rights."

We are also for the benefit of students, going to "unite . . . for the democratisation of education" —you figure it out, I'm just reading the letter; for those of us who are "Young farm-labourers and peasants!" we will "demand land" and, in toto, "demonstrate together our ardent desire to live a happy life, a cultured and free life in a world of peace!" Well, there are always some at every party who just will not join in the spirit of things and must go high-hat.

Almost every paragraph begins "Young workers! Unite for . . ." or "Young Students! Unite for . . ." or "Young farm-labourers and peasants! Unite for . . ." but the last one is just "Young Men and Young Women!" with absolutely no reasons for uniting! —Now, let me tell them something. . . .

In all it is a very nice invitation with 21 sentences and 16 of them end in exclamation marks. It ends on a quaint note of bohomie with "Long Live World Youth Day for Peace and for our Rights!"

RSVP Budapest.

It was very nice of Scott Symons, committee chairman of the National Federation of (come on, there's only two more words) Canadian University Students (there now, that wasn't bad, was it?) to pass this kind invitation on to me. However it is too late to go but it is nice o know we have an organization ilike NFCUS to protect our interests abroad and chaperone these "joyous Youth festivals and demonstrations." It's nice to be a stabilizing influence.

There are two more letters here that Symons gave me. One is from three sweet - young - things, never - been - away - from - home-before types in Omaha who have heard rumours that this University sponsors guided tours of Europe. Now, 'fess up, who has spread this rumour?

Another young miss out West wants information about European universities. She'd like to get a degree in Moderns at "France, or Germany, or Switzerland" or she'd even "consider English universities". There's nothing like being broadminded about choices as she is but I do hope someone wants her about Paris, that wicked, wicked place. It just so happens that I can give her some information. There is a little bistro . . er, university down on rue . . .

ROBINSON

Fantaisie Francaise

By ELIZABETH LOWDEN

La Cercle Francais deserves congratulations on the quality of its French play. Supervielle's Robinson was chosen by those who had seen it last year as it was staged in Paris for its delightful fantasy and poetry which the present version certainly managed to convey to the audience.

It is based on the long-familiar story of Robinson Crusoe but to the basic plot Supervielle has added a complex love story. Robinson is the son of a draper and maladjusted to a merchant's life. However it is his belief at his orphaned cousin, Fanny, has turned from himself to his brother, John, that drives him to become a sailor. It is the island of the second act which gives Supervielle his real opportunity for fantasy as Robinson meets his lost uncle Perlan and led by Vendredei finds gold and has a vision of Fanny's presentation of the play. The third marriage to John, which, however, was cut to this basic fact in this act untangles the complications and indicates that Robinson will be happy ever after married to the Fanny of the second generation.

This plot gave the cast an opportunity for high calibre acting particularly from Hubert Fielden-Briggs as Robinson and John Walker as his father. Dave Jessel as the French-speaking savage lumbered concernedly after his white friends and vigorously paddled them to gold. We could only wish the script had called for more from Helen Cox as the lion who only wished to be left on his island in peace. Charlotte Schrager had a difficult role as both the older and younger Fanny and this duality probably accounts for the stiffness in her performance in the third act. With little Anglicizing of their French Gilda Fine, Jacqueline Armstrong, Valerie Fielden-Briggs, Fred Ward, Clarence Parsons, and David Wescott played well in their supporting roles.

While the play was not entirely without technical flaws on the whole they were unobtrusive. The scenery was designed in a simplified style which suited the setting of the fantasy. The second act became so removed from reality that eating an imaginary banana was a natural preliminary to a voyage taken by sitting behind a log. The lighting when dim seemed to diffuse sufficiently to evenly light the scene but in the brighter parts there seemed to be pockets of dullness which occasionally obscured the actors' faces but for the monolog e at the end of Act I and for the vision in Act II the lighting was very effective. Costuming was simple and yet characteristic. The light blue of Maggie's dress in Act I where she was a very subordinate character made her stand out too prominently.

It is to be hoped that Le Cercle Francais will produce other plays by modern French dramatists and build up a permanent audience for French language plays.

City And York Political Parties Hold Mock Parliament On Campus

A Mock Parliament of the Toronto and Yorks political parties will be held in the Junior Common Room of University College today. The program is under the auspices of the Liberal Party who will form the government. The Progressive Conservatives will be the official opposition with the C.C.F. acting as a third party. The procedure will be the same as that of the Hart House debates.

The motion for discussion will be "Resolved that this House approves the present Federal policy of combatting Communism in Canada." Other motions will be brought up from the floor. The Conservatives will present amendments to the Canadian Radio and Television Act.

A Speaker and Clerk of the House have been provided by the Liberals. The debates are open to the public and all the parties welcome who wish to speak.

SCIENTISTS... ...ENGINEERS

Canada's Defence Research Programme offers you an interesting and worthwhile position with ample opportunity for advancement.

Opportunities exist for graduates at the Bachelor's, Master's, and Doctor's level for full-time employment. In addition, seasonal employment is available for science students graduating in 1955 and for engineering students graduating in 1955 and 1956. Seasonal employment may lead to full-time employment after graduation.

Representatives of the Defence Research Board will be at the University of Toronto on November 16-20.

They would like to discuss permanent employment in Canada's Defence Research Programme with you if you can meet the following qualifications:

1. You must be a Canadian citizen or a British subject.
2. You must hold (or be a candidate in 1954, for) an Honours degree in science or engineering.
3. You must have a genuine interest in research and development work.
4. You must have a good academic record.

Consult your departmental notice board for time and place for an interview concerning either full-time or seasonal employment.

RC Church On Trial

The motion "Resolved that this House condemns repression of Catholic Church in Quebec" will be discussed at the UC—Vic Parliament today at 4.00 p.m. in the University College Junior Common Room.

Speaking for the government will be Tom Hammond, II UC and George S. Kell, III Vic. Kell feels that in Quebec there is much of that intolerance which breeds denial of civil liberties; he would be intolerant only of intolerance itself and the Roman Catholic Church, Quebec's answer to the "Pride of Wisconsin" in seeking to roast their pig have come very close to burning down the whole house."

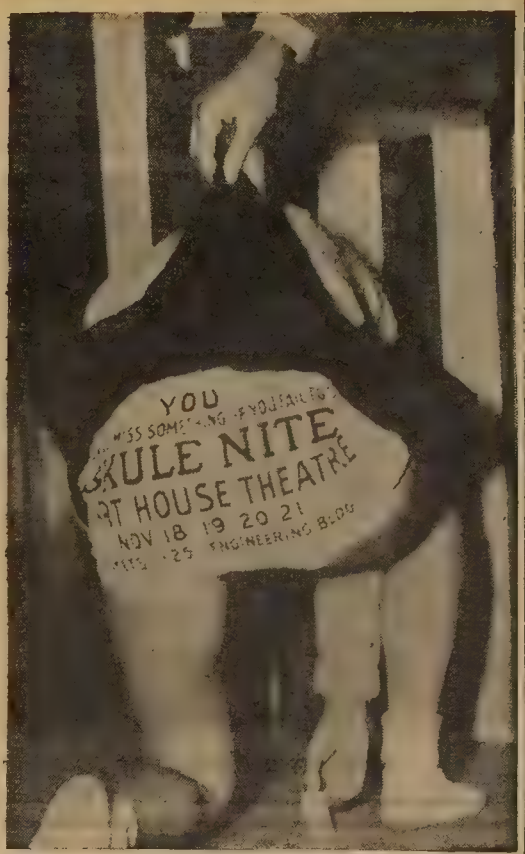
New Rules On Dances —Hart House

The new Hart House Dance Regulations recently announced by the Board of Stewards differ very little from those in force in previous years, said the Comptroller of Hart House, Mr. W. R. Cowan. These regulations provide that any of the faculties or major organizations on the campus may hold one dance a year at Hart House, and that there may be up to three football dances in addition.

Mr. Cowan stated that the previous had appeared to be very satisfactory, and that there had been no reports of dissatisfaction with them. He also said that he had received no complaints of drinking at any Hart House dance.

The new Dance Regulations provide that "any proposal to hold a dance not in keeping with the usual standard of dances in Hart House shall be reported to the Board of Stewards." No one is permitted to leave and then re-enter during a dance, and no tickets may be sold at the door. "Dances are primarily for the benefit of members of this house, and any attempt to achieve financial success through the sale of tickets to non-university persons will not be permitted."



To Challenge Male Position

An ancient feud is being brought back to life and custom broken when women will defend themselves against the resolution "Men are mentally superior to women" at St. Michael's College Oratorical Society's challenge debate on Monday Nov. 16 at 4 o'clock in Brennan Hall. This is the first time women have been invited to its debates.

SMC men are challenging the women, and are confident of proving their superiority said Greg Brown (II Premeds) acting Publicity Director, Bob Duncan (I SMC. Publicity Committee said, "Certain reactionary females have been brash enough to assert that mere woman has a mentality equal to that of man. The refutation of such unfounded thought shall be ridiculously easy."

Oh puffle said Nora Landriau (SMC) St. Joseph's Debate Society. Carol Fitzpatrick agreed, "The abysmal ignorance of men as blatantly displayed in their choice of topic shall prove their downfall."

Sections Of Campus On Television Monday

On Monday evenings, the television public can go to university — free! "Exploring minds," presented by the Universities of Toronto, McGill, and Montreal, is a C.B.C. programme televising faculty members illustrating their special topics.

Last year the C..B.C. mobile unit introduced the public to different university institutions. This year the programmes, filmed in the C.B.C. studios, have a different approach. They explore and explain a variety of subjects. Last Monday's programme was Professor Carpenter's lecture "The Ape and You"; the next one may concern logic in philosophy; others may deal with art and music. All, however, require exploration by the mind, as Mr. Harris, of the television committee, stated. He said that the title indicated the theme of the shows.

These television programmes are presented every Monday night. U. of T. takes the programme one week; either McGill or U. of M. the other week. There are at least two more this term. After Christmas, they will continue from January into March.

"These programmes are both education and entertainment," said Mr. Harris. He said that they were introduced as a both interesting and instructive feature, employing the advantages of television over radio. The programmes are a work of mutual agreement between the Universities and the C.B.C.

Movie Today For SHARE

Today from 12 - 12.30 and also from 1 - 1.30 in the east Common Room of Hart House, Dr. John Hastings will comment on movies which he took on the Indian Seminar this summer. Dr. Hastings was the senior medical officer on the seminar so that he is well qualified to speak on the health problem in India today.

For those who are still uncertain as to the aims of SHARE this is an excellent opportunity of hearing and seeing them presented in a dramatic way.

Develop Morality Lady Violet Says

"We must safeguard the future by making sure that our spiritual development keeps pace with our technical development" said Lady Violet Bonham Carter DBE, last night in Convocation Hall, in the last of two Sir Robert Falconer lectures.

Lady Violet outlined the development of British democracy from after the first World War to the present, commenting on its weaknesses. She stated that there no longer is a floating vote in Britain; there exist "two regimental forces each with a brute loyalty and no longer any individual choice.

She said that quality of the British Parliament has since suffered; "the British people are in danger of losing ttheir character and being left with only an institution." "Parliamentary government has given place to party government," she said, "and a state of reversals has led to such things as Nationalization, then Denationalization, and then possible Re-nationalization."

Lady Violet then went on to comment on the "catchwords" of democracy such as social justice, social security, standards of value, and will of the people.

In this respect, she commented on advocation of social security for all. She pointed out that adventure made Britain into a great power, not security. She said that this was still possible but that men were too content to get their adventure vicariously. In this respect she criticized the press as a levelling influence in our society in that it can influence a great many people and thereby effectively prevent individual thought.

In conclusion she said that the "British Commonwealth still has a destiny to fulfill, and WE ARE NOT CRUMBLING and do not intend to crumble. The present generation has the glorious task of building a better future, of trying to effect a compromise between the development of the implements of mass murder, and the possible conversion of these instruments to peaceful purposes."

Russian Club Meets Tonite

To-night at 8.15 p.m. a group, known as the Russian Club, will meet in the Women's Union Theatre. Various aspects of Slavic culture will be featured. A Russian choir has been invited to sing, with the guests later joining in for a sing-song of wellknown Russia sogs. Later a programme of Slavic Dances is planned. Russian style refreshments shall be served, followed by ball-room dancing.

The Russian Club is a non-political organization. The object of the club is to provide its members with a place to study the Slavic culture. Monthly meetings are held throughout the year. A varying programme of films, displays, discussions, is planned for the coming year.

Augustus, The Horse

Thereby Hangs A Tale

Equine specialists at the Paddock Pavilion indicated grave concern over the condition of Augustus, the Law School horse, who was the victim of a brutal assault at last Saturday's football game. The brave horse has been in a delirium ever since being brought in semi-conscious condition after magnificently fighting off a swarm of assailants said to be engineers by an innocent by-stander in a blue and white striped cap).

From the fragmentary statements by Augustus in conscious moments between spells of intense pain, and eyewitness accounts we have a picture of the assault which has shocked the campus. It began with a neighbourly approach to the Western drum-majorette. Suddenly from the corner of his wide-set eyes Augustus noticed a concerted movement from some dozen raggedly-dressed peasants. In an instant a flank attack developed which overran the rear positions.

"It was horrible" reports a woman by-stander, Mamie LaFlamme, 151 Bloor St. W. "the poor horse was incarcerated before me very eyes." Bertie Bascomb, minor, recently from Holme-Next-Sea, Norfolk, said, "Beastly show, jolly old fair play tempted me to go to the aid of this chap but we British have been trying to keep out of Colonial affairs, you know."

Specialists at the Paddock were puzzled by some of the features of the case. Besides the usual contusions, lacerations common in assaults there were latent indications of erythema of the lower fibula. Even more serious was the severance of the head from the body which necessitated emergency surgery, the Head Surgeon admitted.

Close friends of Augustus who were admitted to see their old friend on a compassionate basis came away weeping. Rhoda Barbeck, an old circus acquaintance, said that life was not safe for legitimate performers with all the clowns around in the world. Members of the School of Law wore black laurel today as a mark of respect.

Lights Dim

Wonderland And Dreams

By AUBREY GOLDEN

I had a wonderful dream last night. Let me tell you how it happened:

Late yesterday, I walked into Hart House theatre and finding it deserted curled up in the most expensive seat in the house and fell asleep.

My dream took place in the future, 100 years from now and it happened on the Toronto campus. (The place where most of my pre-exam nightmares take place.)

Lynn and Cliff were having romantic troubles because of Lee Meleck, only she was called Charlotte. I wanted to take Charlotte off their hands myself as soon as I saw her but some strange force stopped me from going up and asking her for a date.

My dream was starting to get nasty. Anyway, everyone began to dance when a number of other people came out. There was music playing. The music was really nice.

There was a waltz, some blues, a charleston and, some real hot jive. The music seemed vaguely familiar. I tried to recall who wrote it and finally remembered it was Gerry Readings. Being a fan of his I suddenly realized that all of the music in the dream was written by the "composer-laureate" of the Toronto campus.

All the deans in the University of Toronto were there but they didn't look like the ones I knew. They were funny, always talking about Orientation departments, and not much like the deans I pictured at all.

Then at the end of my dream everyone was on a stage and singing "Where on earth, somewhere in the future . . . . ".

I woke up, looked around and was I amazed. . . The theatre was empty. The stage curtain was open . . . . that was strange, I vaguely remember it being closed when I came in. No one was there. I looked around, and all I could find was a script, badly worn but still readable.

The cover said, "Where on Earth?". Puzzled, I left the theatre and as I came to the door I noticed it was dark outside.

I realized then that I had slept through a dress rehearsal of UC's "Where on Earth? . . . or had I slept . . . anyway it was fun.

MUST GUARD BACK DOOR, TOO

BY RICH ANCO

United States Republican Senator, Joseph R. McCarthy, self-styled, rip-roaring Red-hunter, purger of traitors, and purifier of public life, is coming to the end of his fourth year as standard bearer for "America's Minute Men". He has support and he is gaining support, make no mistake about that.

But day by day and month by month the rumbling of a growing opposition to what he is being heard—louder and louder. People everywhere are digging in their heels and calling a halt to the irresponsible purges of McCarthy, Jenner, Velde and Co.

Fortunately, the enemies of McCarthy are beginning to consolidate themselves, to express a boldness and courage which have been sorely needed in the last three or four years.

Underlying this is a deep confidence in the vigor and health of free institutions. "Our democracy was not created by indoctrination but by practice, and in the long run it will be preserved not by indoctrination but by practice. "If we, as university students, can shape a democracy that is vital and growing, then there is nothing to fear.

AMERICAN HYSTERIA

With McCarthyism, the old-fashioned democratic tradition of Voltaire—"I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it"—is being swallowed up. It is disappearing in the hysteria and confusion which today thoroughly permeates American life.

The deepening atmosphere of uncertainty, suspicion and divided opinion in America have made possible the tactics of McCarthy. He is taking advantage of, and is in fact contributing to, an increasingly nervous and panicky public opinion.

The net effect of McCarthyism is to create suspicion and hostility, and to turn citizen against citizen. Unless stopped, it will destroy the faith of each man in his fellow—a credo which is the foundation of democracy.

OPEN BACK DOOR

It goes without saying that Americans and Canadians see Communism as a threat. They have lived in political democracy and do not want to lose its advantages to any authoritarian system.

But there is, I might remind you, a Chinese saying that in guarding against the tiger at the front door you should not let your attention be distracted from the wolf at the back door. We must take care of both the wolf and the tiger.

An editorial in the Saturday Evening Post warns that it would be "well to remind ourselves sometimes that a poor way to ward off communist tyranny is to imitate it—even just a little."

McCarthy has become the arch character—assassin. He has lied, distorted and vilified; he has improperly received and used classified information; he has made promises which he has not fulfilled; he has used discreditable and disreputable sources of false information; he has destroyed the tradition of decency and faith in one's fellow man; he has prejudiced the interests of the entire western world.

PERMITS NO GREY

McCarthyism is gradually succeeding in dividing public opinion into two camps, into black and white, into for and against. To the McCarthy supporter there is no room for the independent thinker, the "free" researcher. In the present state of hysteria, one must be for the Communists or against the Communists. And this usually turns out to man for McCarthy or against McCarthy. This is the point of complete absurdity to which the whole question of the 'Red threat" has gone. To many Americans it is impossible to be both anti-McCarthy and anti-Communist.

The pressure of McCarthyism is growing. And as the pressure builds up it is creating the "wolf pack psychology": join the pack, or be turned on and torn apart by the pack. But thank God, there are people of courage and integrity who stand up against this pressure.

FOUR YEARS AGO

McCarthy had his big beginning back in 1950 (Feb. 9). In a speech at Wheeling, West Virginia, he charged that there were 205 Communists "known to the secretary of state as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department."

Eleven days later he denied saying this. He, instead, changed the number to 57, qualified it by saying they "appeared to be card-carrying members or certainly loyal to the Communist Party", and made no mention of the fact that the secretary of state knew anything about them. As an indication of the reckless abandon with which McCarthy quotes figures, the "57" was later replaced by "81 cases" and "more than 200".

The Whelling speech revealed, however, that there was plenty of favorable publicity in the Communist issue, no matter how phony it was. From that time on, McCarthy hammered it relentlessly, finding new angles as soon as the edge wore off earlier

—Acme Photo.

SENATOR McCARTHY

SMOKE BUT NO FIRE

He missed no chance at personalizing himself, and he was never bothered by "dirty political tactics". His attacks on Owen Lattimore hit the headlines while Lattimore was away in the South Pacific. A brilliant rebuttal of these attacks was made by Lattimore when he returned, but they did not hit the front pages with the sensationalism of the original charges.

In fact, when all the smoke of the phony McCarthy fire is blown away, there is really no fire. No startling expose of Communist infiltration has resulted, save for a very few individuals. On the other hand, immeasurable damage has been done to the personal reputations of a very great number.

WHAT'S BEHIND McCARTHY

Investigations of McCarthy himself have borne little fruit. While they have not brought his expulsion or electoral defeat, they have, however, uncovered a past that is not so purely American. Six questions which "should speak for themselves" were presented to the U.S. Senate.

They asked whether it was proper for McCarthy to receive $10,000 from the Lustrom Corporation when its future as a producer of pre-facricated housing was controlled by one of his committees; whether funds to fight Communism were diverted to his own use; whether he used members of his own family to hide speculative gains; whether self-interset motivated his activities on behalf of sugar, housing and China lobbies; whether transactions with the Appleton State Bank violated tax and banking laws; and whether he violated 1944-46 Senatorial campaigns.

McCarthy has efectively dodged answering these charges and has repeatedly called them Communist-inspired.

ACADEMIC PARALYSIS

Investigations by the Committee of Un-American Activities have, since 1950, spread themselves into education. The fear paralysis has gripped American universities and has regimented staff and student debate to the point where Communist topics are taboo.

The political opinions of professors and lecturers are being purified of "redicalism". The "right line of thinking" has been forced on them through fear of public persecution. By infamous loyalty oathes in the schools, mass thought control has become an American reality.

These campus witch-hunts have drained the very vitality of the universities and are making them machines for the automatic production of mental morons.

They pre-suupose that students cannot choose "right" from "wrong"—that students are stupid. And most startling, they presuppose that if all were left open to free discussion the principles of communism would be so attractive to the university members that the collapse of American society would be inevitable.

To this I can only say—and with every ounce of sincere belief in me—that young students are not dopes. Today's students are the most serious-thinking in all history. It is the investigator who is the dope; it is the investigator who is doing more damage to the university community than any Communist opinion in it could ever do.

It is too bad that Velde, Jenner and McCarthy are not men of better sense and manners. A leading Unitarian, the Rev. A. Powell Davies, raised a novel point when he called them "morally unfit for such an undertaking . . . What will be the effect upon young people . . . when they see their teachers 'investigated' by men who are reckless with accusations and careless with truth?"

The staff, and their students, must be allowed to recognize that, regardless of whether the theories of Communists are right or wrong, they are the theories which shape the lives of millions of people under Communist rule. To that extent they are not only theories but political actualities, and must be dealt with as such.

It will be the death knell of our Democracy if we allow the McCarthys to establish a party line of knowledge in such mat-

THINK INDEPENDENTLY

Research must not be bounded by any kind of political doctrine. When the presentation of unpalatable knowledge becomes dangerous to the individual, the state itself is endangered. We cannot, for our own safety, intrust the expert study of Marxism only to reactionaries who are opposed to all forms of liberalism as well as Marxism.

Owen Lattimore puts it this way: "I realize even more keenly than before that my obligation is to do everything I can . . . to establish, beyond question, beyond dispute, and beyond further challenge, the right of American scholars and authors to think, talk and write freely and honestly, without the paralyzing fear of the kind of attack to which I have been subjected."

BOOK BURNING

Another manifestation of McCarthy's attack on the schools has been his campaign of book burning. In this respect, the Senator almost, and I repeat almost, where books can be found "by fascists, racialists, imperialists, reactionaries, and radicals of every hue; Catholic and Protestant apologetics; idealistic and empirical philosophers; saints and skeptics; plays, novels, poems glorifying the American scene and others depicting its most squalid aspects."

This is not the spirit prevalent in the U.S. Information Service, and it has been knocked out principally by McCarthy.

ATTACK IN RELIGION

In religion McCarthy has found another area of attack. But it is here that he has also burned his fingers for public opposition and presidential pressure combined to force him to accept the resignation of his righ hand aide, J. B. Mathews.

While executive staff director of McCarthy's sub-committee investigating Communist influence, Mathews charged that "the largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States today is composed of Protestant clergymen". In the Mercury he restates this allegation: "The Communist Party has enlisted the support of at least 7,000 Protestant clergymen over a period of 17 years."

These statements carried an immediate result for McCarthy. It dealt him the heaviest blow of his controversial career. President Eisenhower denounced such "scattergun" attacks as Mathews had made, calling them "alien to America". One-hour-and-six-minutes after the Esienhower statement was in the hands of the press, McCarthy accepted Mathews' resignation.

In September, when participating in Martha Rountree's T.V. program, The Big Issue, Mathews could not name one leading Protestant who was an espionage agent, nor could he, under oath, name 15 living, leading Protestant clergymen who were card-carrying members.

Answering the Matthews attacks Bishop Oxnam said: "It is significant that no Protestant nation has been seriously infiltrated by Communism. It is not the churches that should be investigated. It is high time that Americans realize that this attack on the clergy is the vanguard of an un-American coalition of reaction that is determined to destroy the free spirit made President Eisenhower his biggest opponent.

In a press conference Eisenhower is reported to have said: "Don't join the book burners. Don't be afraid to go in your library and read every book . . ." But the President, at later meeting, backed down from thie heartening position. It was not surprising, after this incident, to hear people asking who really was the executive in the U.S.—Ike or Joe.

The book purge was begun in February, 1953, following attacks on the State Department's Information Service by McCarthy. To try and avert his wrath, the state department issued a directive forbidding the use by the libraries or the Voice of America, of material by Communists, fellow travellers, or controversial persons. This last phrase was changed to 'and so on'.

A new directive was produced in March (1952) but it has never been published in full.

Actually only about eleven books were burned. But the term "book burning" has been associated with the removal of certain books from the library shelves.

"It was supposed that the book burning madness had ended with the death of Hitler," writes J. V. McAree. "Certainly nobody supposed that it ever would be revived in a free Democracy. Yet that is what is happening . . . ."

McCarthy's two travelling "foreign ambassadors of Americanism", Ron Cohn and Gerard Schine, were the book inspectors. Among the authors whose books were banned are: Dashiel Hammett (Thin Man), Upton Sinclair (The Jungle), Bert Andrews (Washington Witch Hunt), Harriet Stowe (Uncle Tom's Cabin), Vera Dean, Walter Duranty, Edgar Snow, and a score of

In disagreeing with book burning, Dorothy Thompson, columnist, describes a great library, "one that exists for knowledge and inspiration", as a building in American education, American politics and American religious life. The free mind is basic to free enterprise as well as to other freedoms.

MAD FROZEN BRAINS

Supporters of McCarthy have hailed him as the great American. An auto dealer, Temus Bright, erected a monument in front of his place of business and on it he had inscribed "Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, American".

But at one time that very same monument carried a lipstick drawing of a swastika. In this way the enemies of McCarthy have dubbed hm the great un-American.

McCarthyism has not yet been successful in establishing thought control, but it is using well-tried propaganda methods in its efforts to do so. Throw a bomb which emits clouds of nauseous smoke and then turn in a false fire alarm. Next use the simple propagand device of the repetitive lie. Insist over and over again, even weeks after complete evidence has disclosed the false alarm, that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire.

McCarthy has done great damage to the reputation of the U.S. in foreign countries. Adlai Stevenson reported this observation, and scores of others have concurred with it.

But the very serious damage is at home where McCarthy has cooled so many feet and frozen so many brains.

RELIABEL ACCUSERS?

The extent to which McCarthyism has penetrated the very personal lives of American individuals and their personal thoughts is well illustrated in this newspaper dispatch:

"ALBANY, N.Y., July 16(CP)

—The Albany Knickerbocker News today fired reporter Janet Scott for 'grosso misconduct' in refusing to tell a Congressional committee whether she was a member of the Communist Party. Two witnesses before the Senate Un-American activities committee described Miss Scott as a member of the party. She has worked for the newspaper and its predecessors for 27 years."

Why should any person be forced to reveal his plitical party membership when it means probable public persecution? Moreover, just how respectable and reliable are the "heroic" accusers"

The witch hunting group of which McCarthy is a part is recruited from ex-Communists, pro-Fascists, American Firsters, anti-Semites, Coughlinites, and similar fringe fanatics of the political underworld. Why are their opinions any more acceptable than those of 'the accused'?

Huey Long, a cynical and unprincipled politician, long ago warned us that if fascism ever came to America it would come disguised as 100 percent Americanism. By the same token, one hundred and fifty percent denunciation of vaguely and impreciesely defined "Reds" may be a disguise for those who would destroy Democracy.

On one occasion, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt described McCarthy as "the greatest menace to freedom because he smears people without the slightest regard for facts."

PARALYSIS OF FEAR

The standards that the witch hunters are trying to impose on us are the standards of mob-thinking. We must fight this. We must break the paralysis of fear and win our way back to the traditional freedom to think and on the basis of independent thinking to express independent opinions.

The right to express an individual opinion is only secure if it includes the right to express a minority opinion; the right of minority opinion is secure if it includes the right to express an unpopular opinion.

We must defend the right of any man to his opinion even if it offends powerful men, criticizes public authority, or denounces those hungry for dictatorial power.

Charles Malik of the Lebanon, philospher and diplomat, said at AHarvard: "There have been very few times in history when the West was so challengingly called upon to come out with where it stands, what it believes, what it is after, as it is today."

Indeed, we must take a stand. But we cannot, and must not, stand on the side that supports McCarthyism.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Bobby Auld got tired of seeing other people make mistakes. For several seasons, he was one of the most frequently used referees in Toronto soccer circles and intercollegiate games came to be a regular assignment. Like hockey's King Clancy, being a player and then an official had given him a thorough, inside and out knowledge of the game of 'fitba', as they call it over 'ome.

Consequently, the challenge of coaching the Varsity team was more than he could resist. After all, the Blues shattered an 11-year charm last season by finally losing the intercollegiate championship. Where could he find a better opportunity of testing the understanding picked up by being in the middle of hundreds of games?

If an unbeaten season and two championships are the hallmarks of an efficient coach, Bobby has passed the test with first-class standings. His Blues have won e verything in sight, including eight of nine games—the other was 1-1 tie — and both the eastern and western conference titles. Along the way, they scored 36 goals and allowed the opposition only five. In their only exhibition game, they were sadly depleted by the McCarran Aces but wound up beating Buffalo State 4-3 anyway.

But if this tune sounds as though all the plaudits belong to Auld, we're playing in the wrong key. One of the big differences between the team that won the championship this year and the one that lost it last year is a chap named Ed Duru, the Blues' goal-tender. Anybody who pays much attention to the game will tell you that the netminder is a very important link on a soccer team. And when Mr. Duru signed his eligibility certificate early this fall, the Blues knew they had a fellow back in the goal crease who would stop nine out of ten scoring thrusts that slipped through the defence.

Ed was a well-rated goalie back home in Turkey, playing in international matches here and there, but when he came to Toronto to go to school, he decided to play soccer at the college level. It was a fortunate decision, too, as Duru racked up an impressive string of shutouts—five—before succumbing to a series of injuries that didn't keep him out of the lineup but which must have diminished his effectiveness. Still, you can't find much fault with a record of five goals allowed in nine games.

Duru wasn't the only contribution made by a foreign nation to Varsity's little United Nations. It was a lesson in international co-operation. Manager Mike Uzumeri hails originally from exotic Turkey, too. Of the 11 other players on the squad, four are native Canadians—John Hubicki, Ron Finch, Dave Johnson and Howie Ashbourne, from Newfoundland. Dave Lethbridge, Bill Leach and Rod Green make up England's delegation. From here on, it gets really interesting. Wally Eze came to Canada from Nigeria, Karl Tamberg from Estonia and Ron Williams from Trinidad. Captain Jose Atucha, the Blues' most prolific scorer with 12 goals, is a native Spaniard but lived in Venezuela before coming to Canada.

The objectives may differ, but the U.N. bigwigs might take a lesson from the Varsity Blues. Or, on the other hand, maybe all the U.N. needs is Bobby Auld. The chances are, though, that he's not available. He loves soccer.

Golden Gaels On Scoring Splurge Meet Blues At Peak Of Streak Three-Way Tie Could Be Result

Varsity Blues aren't the only hot team in the intercollegiate football league these days. The Queen's Golden Gaels are on a bit of a splurge of their own, too. They've roared to two consecutive high-scoring victories over the McMaster Marauders in the last two weeks and are only two points behind Western and Toronto, who are tied for first place.

Somebody's streak will be broken Saturday in Kingston's Richardson Stadium, when the Blues engage the tricolor in the final game of the college schedule. At the same time, McGill Redmen will be in London to play the Western Mustangs. The possibilities are unlimited. If Queen's should win and Western lose, we would have a three-way tie, a threat that makes league officials shudder. But the Redmen aren't conceded much of a chance to stop Western.

If Varsity and Western win, the two-way deadlock for first place would continue and they would flip a coin, the winner to name the place for the Yates Cup playoff which is compulsory this year. Queen's could tie the Blues for second, too, but Varsity has a big lead in the scoring column. One thing is certain: there will be a playoff on Saturday, Nov. 21, and the Blues need to win this one to make sure they're one of the teams in that final test.

What makes this Queen's outfit click? Well, for one thing, they've got perhaps their best backfield since the war. They have the league's top scorer in Ron Stewart, a Toronto high school product who has scored 40 points on eight touchdowns, including six in the last two games. Stewart is what sportswriters usually call a scatback or ponyback, standing a mere 5' ".

Also in the backfield are Al Koeman, the bow-legged safety, who electrified a Toronto audience a few weeks back with his sensational punt returns, veteran Jack Roberts and Pete Zarry. Three serious losses they suffered last week were rookie back Gary Schreider, quarter Al Poutanen and fullback Doug Bell. Pete Cranston will probably bear the brunt of the quarterbacking duties Saturday, with backing from Wally Mellor.

In Frank Geard, the Gaels have at least as good a kicker as there is in the league. Keyman on the Tricolor line is team captain Gary Lewis.

Last time the Blues and Gaels played was Oct. 3, with the Blues taking a 16-7 win before a Varsity Stadium crowd. Last year, in Toronto, the Blues won 18-1 and they repeated 9-1 down at Kingston with Bill Bewley making that stirring end-to-end touchdown dash.

Hoopsters

Forestry Fire Blazes Comeback Singes Saints Trinity Topples Dents

By MOISHE REITER

The double Blues of St. Michael's College are very much so this day. Last night the Mikemen were caught out in a blazing Forestry fire on the back campus. The double Blue was singed 17-6.

Intramural Football was turned sharply toward a dramatic e nding of the schedule as the Foresters comeback took its second stride, trampling the Mikemen and aiming a third boot at kicking the Red and Black Trinitys out of the playoff picture. The Trinity's won their game today 16-11 over Dents. After defeating the Trinity squad 2-0 last week the Woodmen spouted confidence and advised us to watch them surge back in the final half of the schedule. At the time their chances were all mathematical, with any chance against the powerful St. Mike's crew just a crazy dream of the tree-men. Now the Foresters are causing a lot of worry to all those concerned with playoff developments.

The Forestry boys are an undermanned team with less than 20 players and seldom do they use more than 16 of those. Still they have their opponents wishing that they wouldn't use even that many. They seem to be too much for the other teams in Division II.

"The best defensive line in the Intramural League," is the Foresetrs evaulation of their front wall, and it is generally conceded that they have a good argument on that score. Last night the Woodies' wingline looked to be just what they think it is. There were rough spots and there were times when that great wall looked more like a rotted log but these came too seldom to give the Mikes a chance. The Foresty line gained its greatest fiory early in the third quarter, and oddly enough this was just after that line had faltered, and given St. Mikes their first, and only touch of the game. The Mikemen appeared headed for another T.D. when they blocked a Woodie kick at the Forestry 20. Instead of moving downfield for another major the Saints were thrown back 10 yards and the Woodies took over at their own 30. On the next play every forester performed perfectly, axing all the Saint defenders out of the play so that Ed Marcus could slip off tackle, cut over to the opposite side and stride freely a full eighty (80) yards for a touchdown. Armstrong added the convert, putting the Woodchoppers up 17-6 at that point.

The Forestry passing attack is nothing to write to the Big Four about, but they scored a beautiful major on as crazy a pass play as we've seen all year. From the St. Mike's 32 Woodie quarter Tom White threw and end-over-end pass to Don Harrot at the 20. Diving back, Harrett managed to snare the ball. He had some difficulty as there were two Mikemen jumping on his back almost immediately, but he paid them no mind as he staggered, on his knees, all the way to, and collapsed, over the Saints goal line. Previous to this score Harrott had added to the Forestry lead with a single.

Trinity had to work their way up from the bottom to beat Dents in the other half of the back campus double header. The men of R. J. Gray found themselves in a bad spot with Forestry coming back and trying to cut them out of the semi-final set-up. The Trinity's kept right in the race by defeating the Dentists 16-11.

Peter Gordon was the biggest wheel on the Trinity steamroller, running in two touches for the Red and Black and toeing a convert for the last. Dave Smith plunged over from the 1 for the other Trinity major.

Ralph Hicken carried over for one Dents major and Don Gilbert took a pass for the other. Reid Currie accounted for the other Dentistry point by converting the first touchdown.

With this latest victory Trinity have a total of 6 points. St. Mike's have 3. Forestry have 5 and Dents

Meds Firsts Lacrosse Wins 8-3 Over Skule

Meds Firsts won a Lacrosse game today over their old rivals SPS Firsts by a resounding 8-3 score. The Medsmen were never in trouble from the start and just kept adding to their lead through the match.

Urquhart and Thompson were the Meds snipers each notching a pair of goals while Walsh, Schatz, Kitty and McMillen scored a singleton apiece.

Len Rosebrugh was the star for losing Skule as he scored two and Barnes added the third SPS marker.

In volleyball action in the Gym last night Vic IV posted a win over St. Mike's D squad in two straight games. The Vicmen had it easy in the first match taking it by a 15-6 count. The Mikemen were dangerous though in the second game and came close before the Viesters finally beat them down by a count of 15-10.

In soccer action on the front campus last night the Jr. Engineers lost a hard game of soccer. The SPS squad didn't even show up for the game so Meds Seniors took the match with a minimum of effort.

Swimmers In Demonstration

A group of U of T women swimmers will be included in a swimming demonstration to be held this Saturday, the 14th, at the new Moss Park Community Center. This is the first big swim show the center, opened recently, has ever had and is being directed by Joan Coppin, swimming instructor at Moss Park.

Entitled "Aqua Capers of '53" the show will include competition in the afternoon and water ballet displays in the evening. Forty-seven swimming clubs are tobe represented there, the International group who just won honors at Fort Lauderdale included in the bill.

The Community Center, located on Sherbourne Street has extended an invitation to all University women students to attend Saturday.

Soccer Blues Play Western

It may seem rather anti-climactic now that they've won both intercollegiate championships but Varsity's soccer Blues have another game to play. That's Friday when they travel to London to play Western. The intermediates are also playing Friday against Western Seconds. Manager Mike Uzumeri is anxious that all players of both teams take note that the buses leave at 10 o'clock Friday morning from Hart House.

Titoism Talk By Reynolds

"The Development of Titoism" will be the subject of a talk this evening by Prof. P. A. Reynolds. Under the auspices of the Political Economy Club, this meeting will be held in the Vic Alumni Hall at 8:00 o'clock.

For this one term Prof. Reynolds has been brought to Toronto by the Department of Political Economy to lecture on external affairs. Ordinarily he is Wilson Professor of International Politics at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth. Before he accepted this position he had served in the Middle East, Greece, and Austria, written an account of Allied civil relief operations in the Balkans, and taught international history at the London School of Economics and Political Science.

UC Bad Men Renew Fight

Students of 5 Willcocks Street last night renewed an inter-residence fight among University College residences. Fifteen to twenty students besieged the residence at 85 Grenville Street about 11:45 p.m. with sticks and water. "We recognized many of the students as being from 5 Willcocks Street," said Jack Lewis, resident at 85 Grenville.

"Last year the students raided 73 St. George Street on November 11, and it seems that it has become a custom," said Lewis.

SHARE In High Gear Nursing, Trinity Lead

After 3 days of the SHARE campaign much remains to be done towards reaching the canvass objective of $4546.00. As of Wednesday evening 12 percent had been realized.

In a few of the faculties such as Trinity, Nursing, Wycliffe and Law the campaign has been going very well and they should reach their objective within the next few days. Engineering, which did so well last year, is behind to date, along with P and OT, VC, Forestry and Pharmacy. Medsmen are writing term exams this week and many students from Architecture are out on field trips. It is hoped that these faculties will be heard from in the near future.

One undergrad who was canvassed today answered a definite "no" to the canvasser. However, after having SHARE explained to her, she gladly contributed ten dollars.

If the objective is not reached by Friday night, the campaign will continue into the next week.

In addition to the undergraduate canvass another $1,000 is expected from graduate and staff members. Also $1000 should be raided from such special events as the SHARE dinner, the Helsinki Choir and parking at the football games. Thus the campaign has an overall objective of $6500, 18 percent of which has been achieved to date.

Barren Land Travel Topic

The barrens of the District of Keewatin will be the topic of Bill Shore and Eric Neil at the second open meeting of the Hart House Exploration Society in the music room of Hart House tonight at 8:00 p.m. Shore and Neil both worked for the International Nickel Company this summer in this district which is North-West of Hudson Bay. Peter Tobias, who was in the mountains near Banff this summer, will also speak.

Must Arm For It

Future Strife Inevitable

By O. PIDHAINI

Contending that the causes for the tensions in the world today do not emanate from Western policy, the writer supports rearmament since the inevitable future war must be won by the West.

YOU SAY OUR leaders have failed. And you say that they, having a chance to win peace did not want it. You say our leaders are traitors, hypocrites who hire Speakers to stand up on the Remembrance Day to mumble prayers.

But our leaders are what we are: they are as bad as we are, or as good as we are. The Government is our Government. The leaders are the people. The Speakers who have risen and spoken on the Remembrance Day are our speakers. They will speak as we have taught them. They will speak as we speak.

YES, WE HAVE failed; the leaders, the speakers, the people have failed. We believed in honour; we have failed. We believed in justice and love; we have failed. We believed in truth; we have failed. We believed and believed and believed again. We acted on the supposition that war is a crime. We failed utterly.

To our sincerity, Moscow returned duplicity. To our sense of justice — "the end justifies the means." To our honesty — a pack of lies. And to our hopes, we received from Moscow sneers, polite sneers, no doubt, but sneers nevertheless.

We have tried to justify the Dead. We believed that the Brave New World can be built. We forget the former iniquities, lies, selfishness. We opened our heart to the Ally. We gave all.

WE WERE DISAPPOINTED. We were betrayed. Moscow did not forget her pretensions. While keeping alive on the Lend Lease she ensured Poland and Roumania and Hungary and other republics for herself. But we trusted her. We knew we saved her and so we expected gratitude and honesty. We were betrayed.

You say, you Editors, that we have had a chance not to fail. When? What chance? Was it at Yalta? Was it at Potsdam? Was it at Moscow, that we wanted to conquer the world? Canada, Great Britain, the USA, and all the Free World went even as far as to offer to give up the control of their own foreign affairs, of the trade, even of the army. And you say we did not try.

YOU TELL THE PEOPLE that the one who raises the sword is felled by it. What would you have the people do? "Let us stop the armament race," you say. How? To stop building our own armaments. And, surely, seeing such generosity Moscow is going to stop hers? Are we to trust again, to be betrayed again, to be finally enslaved? No, we have been betrayed too often.

You charge that we are not doing much to live up to the hopes of the Dead. That hurts; yes, purely and simply, hurts to have that told to the people. What more can they do?

We have done all we could do. But Moscow does not receive things in the spirit we give them. Our presents are their spoils. Our humility is an indication of weakness to her. Our honesty is stupid blundering to them and our hope is just a thing to be exploited.

MOSCOW CANNOT afford peace. A dictatorship must either have war or perish. During the peace the slaves become discontented, during a war they will bear many things. Napoleon knew it, Hitler knew it. So did Peter, the so-called "Great" one and so does Kremlin of today. There will be a war.

Yes, we have failed. The gentleness, the sincerity, the truth and th ehopes have failed, sincerity, the truth and the hopes have failed.

WE FAILED, but although we failed we do not share and shall not share in the guilt for the dead. It is not our fault. We tried and we have failed. We trusted and we were betrayed. We believed and we were lied to.

We will have to win the coming war.

Dead Or Alive

Once again Toronto students have committed themselves to financial support of and presumably active participation in the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

These are the students who have responded to repeated queries concerning the organization with the question "What does N-F-C-U-S stand for?" These are the students who according to a recent forum in The Varsity either do not know enough about what the organization does or, if they do, couldn't care less.

If this is the opinion of the majority of students on this campus it would seem that they didn't care enough even to go to the meetings of their colleges and say they didn't care.

Apparently they are willing, and if last night's vote is any indication, even eager to support a national group about which they know very little. The students may not care what it does, it may not do anything, but they can still say, dead or alive, we belong to NFCUS.

Reach For Better

Empty idealism. A profound bit of phraseology. We heard a student use it yesterday after reading the Remembrance Day editorial.

We will grant you the 'idealism', but we must take exception to the 'empty'. Admittedly, it is very simple to look at a very difficult problem, and reach hopefully for the simplest practical solution. But is that any reason for not trying to understand a better solution? It is as if we had all turned pagan, and refused our moral obligations.

What are they trying to do? Do they so firmly believe idealism to be such a wrong that they must make it a crime? Already, one sees individualists who have at one time had high ideals, now too ashamed of them to defend them in coffee-room debate. True, there is no immediately acceptable place for the idealist, but The Varsity would regret the day we cannot find one.

No Comment

The Varsity presents a note from an outraged friend across the border:

I would be willing to wager one million dollars that the 'Students' who participated in the burning of McCarthy's effigy the other night were either Kikes or Kommunists—or both . . . and unquestionably prodded by some higher 'master mind' who was also Kike-Kommunist.

A normal, healthy, patriotic Canadian boy would never have engaged in such an outrage, an effrontery to a magnificent, fiercly pro-American gentleman. Kindly tell the b—— who engaged in it, for me, to go back to their ghettos and inferiority complexes.

Our Readers Write:

Courageous And Heartening

The Editor,
The Varsity

I am writing to congratulate you and your publication on the courageous and heartening stand stand you have taken against the American brand of fascism which is McCarthyism. At the same time, I want to press the hand of every student who took part in the demonstration in which the un-American Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy was burned in effigy.

I wonder if you and these students realize what a service you have performed for American democracy by this courageous act, which was widely publicized in American newspapers; and how much it strengthened the minority of Americans who are aware of the dangers of McCarthyism and are at the same time trying to expose it, often at the risk of a jail sentence if they denied they were many students in universities all over the United States would like to participate in just such a demonstration — only they would not dare, for fear of being labelled a Communist and being hauled up before a Congressional committee at which they might be confronted by professional liars who would swear that they saw the students at Communist Party meetings, etc., etc.!

No doubt you receive reports about what is happening to America but one must actually live here to realize the extent of the fascist menace, which has grown by leaps and bounds during the last few years. Surveys conducted by the New York Times, conservative newspaper, have shown that the faculties and students in all universities are afraid to discuss "controversial" subjects lest they be branded "subversive." Students are careful not to ask questions about socialism, etc. Once — stimulating social discussion groups have been disbanded. Regimentation and conformity in thinking are the rule. You can imagine the state of the social sciences as taught in our colleges! But that isn't all. Teachers who were members of some mildly reformist organizations, perhaps years ago, have frequently been brought before Congressional committees. Fearful of the charge of perjury and a jail sentence i fthey denied they were Communists (for the testimony of ex-Communist stool pigeons and informers is believed, in preference to that of innocent people), they exercise their Constitutional right to refuse to answer questions on the ground that their answers might tend to "degrade or incriminate" (the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution). Up until recently, this protected them against further persecution or loss of jobs. But during the past year, the school system in New York State has obtained legal sanction which overrides the Fifth Amendment — and it now has the right to discharge teachers who refuse to answer questions on the grounds of this Amendment! I know a dearly beloved high school teacher who has received numerous commendations for his teaching but resigned from the school system after 25 years — he is now, in middle age, trying to make a living as a salesman! — because of McCarthyism. (Incidentally, he is anti-Communist but unfortunately he believes in reformism!)

It is against this background that the despairing American intellectual reads the news story about Toronto students burning McCarthy in effigy and sees the photo of them doing this. You can't imagine how it heartens him, inspires him in the fight against fascism, makes him feel grateful and want to embrace all the students who took part in the demonstration. Here in America, we burn books; in Canada you burn McCarthy. More power to you — we need your help. At the same time, in attacking McCarthyism in the United States, you are defending democracy in Canada — for McCarthyism is not a local or national problem. It is international in scope (Adlai Stevenson, after his world tour, said that he had found that McCarthyism is known all over the world) — and its real name is fascism, the identical brand of Hitler and Mussolini.

Please tell P B for me that your editorial policy is not un-American but pro-American, for the greatest menace to our country and to American democracy is not Communism but McCarthyism. You are brilliantly right, too, when you refer to the danger of Canada becoming "a satellite to a totalitarian state" as the amount of Wall Street investment in Canadian industry amply demonstrates.

Sincerely,
An American Citizen.

Brick Bound

As bricklayers the instigators of this shenanigan fall down pretty badly. Nevertheless considering the difficulties under which they were working the end result proved very effective. It is reported that an inter-Anglican feud is in the offing. It is very unfortunate that they did not think of using a very fast-drying mortar.

Chapel Bricks Stray To Trinity Entrance Helped By Theologs

A serious situation has arisen, it seems, in the bricklaying business. Last night some frustrated bricklayers blocked the entrance to Trinity College in an attempt to advertise their trade.

In the wee hours of the morning it is reported that a half successful attempt was made to stop up the entrance to Trintiy College with some of the loose bricks lying about that are being used to build the new Trinity chapel. One of the downtown dailies reported that "sometime between 2.00 a.m. and dawn today," Trinity's porter solemnly announced today, "unidentified students had piled bricks up in front of Trinity College entrance. A work party will remove them today," he said.

An open letter to the student body of Trinity was received in The Varsity office yesterday. In part it said "We understand that you are short of man power, and that the removal of the bricks represents an all but unsurpassable problem. The student body of Wycliffe College would therefore like to offer their assistance, if, by noon tomorrow, November 13th, you have been unalbe to remove this impediment to expedite entrance to your admirable edifice." The letter closed with "Yours in the spirit of true Anglican brotherhood, (signed) John Wycliffe and Sons, Cutrate contractors."

It seems that suspicion has been laid at the door of Wycliffe due to the unfortunate fact that two Wycliffe men were apprehended by local gendarmes, while in the act of placing bricks. Now Wycliffe would like it understood that the mere fact that two of their number were involved in the heinous crime, doesn't necessarily implicate the whole college.

It is reported that the evening was an eventful one for Trinity. The bricklayers labored amidst a shower of water until dispersed by a sally from the police; then later on in the evening the job was completed in a more peaceful environment.

7-Cent Coffee

Sanctuary For Vanishing Species

By CHRISTINA McCALL

The coffee is the savouriest, the talk the noisiest, the atmosphere the cheeriest and the apple pie the tastiest in the Vic Union Coffee Shop.

Located on the ground floor in the New Wymilwood on Charles Street, the Coffee Shop was opened in October 1952 and it has already become a sort of fetish at Vic. "Hey, let's go over to the Union for a cup of coffee" is an oft heard (and loudly lamented around about May time) suggestion among Victorians.

For residence types who miss the last call to breakfast and baggy-eyed street car commuters it opens its doors at 8:45 in the morning and the last dregs are drained at 11:30 at night. What happens during those fourteen-odd hours is wondrous to behold. People talk and drink coffee, meet friends and drink coffee, play bridge and drink coffee; you'll even see them copying lecture notes of kind (and conscientious) course mates (the coffee makes the most interesting brown stains on the paper). The joy of it is—the brew only costs seven cents a cup.

If you wipe the tears from your eyes and peer through the smoke you'll see that the Coffee Shop is tastefully furnished — or is it equipped — in the best modern, utilitarian manner. Along one wall are comfortable booths with large, low (too low, oh well you can hold the cup on your knee) tables in front. Windows that look out on a stone patio line the other wall. At one end, grouped around a fireplace — they light a fire in it occasionally, at which times the entire populace moves to the opposite end — are a couple of fat couches and another low table. In the rest of the space between walls there are several tables with four chairs hovering around each of them.

But who cares about the surroundings when you can hear such fascinating snatches of a hundred conversations amid the din. "Read Wasteland? Not on your life — think I wanna go nuts too?" "So then I parked on this nice, quiet back road and . . ." "Hey, just to even the tally let's burn Malenkov this Saturday night. "So this guy bet me I couldn't down two score ale, and boy, do I feel lousy this morning . . ."

Besides coffee your shekels will buy you cocoa and soft drinks; sandwiches and pie; sundaes and milkshakes; toast and even tea (the Buttery has nothing on us — who knows they may be stocking crumpets yet). The eservice is speedy, the prices are reasonable and the food is terrific.

So rouse yourselves out of the stupor, you dogged devotees of the JCR and come see how the gods live.

Gov't Wins In UC–Vic Parliament

The motion, "Resolved that this House condemns Repression of Civil Liberties by the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec" was supported 28-12 at a combined University College and Victoria College parliament, yesterday afternoon.

The first speaker for the government, G. S. Kell, IV Vic, stated that he saw the debate, not as an attack on the Roman Catholic Church as an institution, but rather solely on the basis of its action in Quebec.

"Magazines and movies are censored in accordance to Catholic principals by an all-Catholic Board of Censorship," he said.

Kell concluded his arguments by stating that there is a wanton neglect of individual liberties in Quebec where intolerance breeds a denial of civil liberties.

R. Saunders, II Vic, pointed out to members of the government that Ontario also has a very strict censorship code.

T. Hammond, UC, continuing the case for the government, cited the also listed several other examples Padlock Laws in Quebec as a repression of civil liberties. He of repression.

The second speaker for the opposition J. Roberts, III UC, said, "The government has cited eleven examples of repression in Quebec but could not prove in one case that the Roman Catholic Church was behind them." "It is time," he said, "to redefine what we mean by civil liberties."

Speaker Harriet Thompson, IV UC then put the discussion to the floor. Latin, papal encyclicals, and the realm of physics entered into the subsequent discussion.

In summing up the government's position Kell called on all those who were against the suppression of civil liberties by no matter what authority to support the motion.

Student Opinion In Favor Of Supporting Delhi Centre — Yesterday's SHARE Poll

"SHARE is definitely a good cause. We need universal education and understanding to surmount the difficulties we are facing," said Roy McMurtry of the Blues' Football team yesterday in an opinion poll conducted yesterday to test student opinion towards the SHARE campaign.

Some other students polled yesterday expressed much the same opinion. Liz Bazely III Vic said "our duty is to help Indian students in order that the time will come when they will have the education and health sufficient to lead their country on to a great future."

Joan Archer II Trinity said "Helping to put people through college is worthwhile at any time." Bill Wilson III Meds, "In this world, India is a country where medicine is needed the most and to build a health centre is the most deserving support we can give."

Ed Harris IV Commerce sratched his head for a while and said "SHARE'S all right."

Ralph Caswell II SPS said, 'Before the campaign started I was adverse to Share but after learning what it really stood for, I think it is a very worthwhile enterprise and I am all for it."

The most profound statement of the day was issued by Jack Dies II Vic. When asked what he thought of share, went into deep contemplation and came up with "I beg your pardon?"

Jim Steele I Pre-Meds thought that "Share was very beneficial to East-West Relations."

This fair young miss is one of the many students who found SHARE a very good investment for their spare bucks. However, it seems by glancing over the results of the campaign that there were not enough of this type around the campus with bucks to spare.

What's Coming Up

UTDU DEBATING TRIALS

3:00 p.m., Friday, Nov. 13

OPEN COMPETITION	WOMEN
ROOM 8, U.C.	ROOM 59, U.C.

TOPIC

Resolved that McCarthyism is a greater threat to Democracy than Communism.

Those interested phone Earl Berger — HU. 8-9365

Correction

The meeting to elect five independent members for the Model Parliament will be held to-day at 1.00 p.m. in Room 151 in the Economics building, not in UC as was stated in an earlier article in The Varsity. Those students who cast votes at to-morrow's meeting will not be allowed a second vote at the general election on Nov. 19. The Model Parliament will sit on December 3, 8, and 10.

McCarthyism, Communism Topics In Debating Trials

McCarthyism is to be debated by all entrants in the University of Toronto Debating Union trials. The topic is "Resolved that McCarthyism is a greater threat to Democracy than Communism."

The debates are to be held in Room 8 of University College this afternoon. The Judges will be Professor Bagnani and Professor Woodbury of University College, and Father Platt of St. Mike's. The chairman of the proceedings is Horace Krever.

Each candidate will have five minutes to deliver his prepared speech either in the affirmative or in the negative. In addition to his prepared address each contestant must speak extemporaneously on a topic to be selected. The extemporaneous speeches will also be judged Friday if time permits.

Any undergraduate of the University is eligible to enter. This includes females.

The purpose of the debates is to five debaters who will be sent on tours of American and Eastern Canadian Universities. These will include Harvard, West Point, Boston University, Boston College, and New York University. Norfolk Prison may also be added to the itinerary. If finances permit, a team will be sent to the Cross Examination Tournament of the University of Pittsburg, where they will have an opportunity to debate against US universities and also Oxford.

Meteorology Using Radar

Radar can detect rain and snow as well as aircraft. In his lecture "Radar and Weather," tomorrow evening, Dr. J. S. Marshall, Associate Professor of Physics at McGill University, Montreal, will explain this fact and others similar.

Dr. Marshall will be guest speaker at the meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute in Convocation Hall at 8.15 p.m. As well as being an Associate Professor at McGill and Fellow of the Society, he is an Associate Editor of the Journal of Meteorology, Chairman of the American Meterological Society's Committee on Radio Meteorology, Chairman of the Canadian Commission II of the International Radio Scientific Union, and past President of the Canadian Association of Physicists.

320 Grads At Tonight's Assembly

The Fall Convocation of the University of Toronto will be held in Convocation Hall at 8.00 p.m. this evening. About 320 students, both undergraduate and post-graduate, will receive their degrees. These students have completed either their theses or their supplementals successfully.

President Sidney Smith will give the congratulatory speech to the graduates this year. He will be followed by Chancellor Beatty who will present the degrees.

SCIENTISTS... ...ENGINEERS

Canada's Defence Research Programme offers you an interesting and worthwhile position with ample opportunity for advancement.

Opportunities exist for graduates at the Bachelor's, Master's, and Doctor's level for full-time employment. In addition, seasonal employment is available for science students graduating in 1955 and for engineering students graduating in 1955 and 1956. Seasonal employment may lead to full-time employment after graduation.

Representatives of the Defence Research Board will be at the University of Toronto on November 16-20.

They would like to discuss permanent employment in Canada's Defence Research Programme with you if you can meet the following qualifications:

1. You must be a Canadian citizen or a British subject.
2. You must hold (or be a candidate in 1954, for) an Honours degree in science or engineering.
3. You must have a genuine interest in research and development work.
4. You must have a good academic record.

Consult your departmental notice board for time and place for an interview concerning either full-time or seasonal employment.

Another chair left home when a group of Engineers captured this one at 4:00 p.m. yesterday afternoon. It is (or was) the Speaker's Chair of the University College Parliament. Its departure forced the UC speaker at yesterday's debate to descend to an ordinary chair to officiate over the discussion and acceptance of the motion "This House condemns repression of civil liberties by the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec."

York City Club Mock Parliament Defeats Principles And Policies Of Liberal Party As It Exists

The motion for debate at the annual meeting of the City Club's Mock Parliament was: "Resolved: That this house has confidence in the principles, policies and platform of the Liberal party." Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Joe Potts, opened the debate by challenging the opposition to find any platform that would equal the Dominion Government's long, successful record.

The key for the debate was set by Mr. Rogers, P.C., when he attacked the government's policy on radio and television. He declared that the present CBC stations are importing more American programmes than are private stations.

The first application for private television was received by the government in 1938. Now, in 1953, we have just established the first four stations — three state owned.

Mr. Potts also attacked the lack of definite policy and the present governments policy towards University grants and proposed a motion censoring the government.

To Mr. N. Gordon, CCF, the CBC was just one more failure in the government policy which also include lack of housing, a Universal health scheme and a lack of civil rights code. He came out in favor of complete government control of radio and television to abolish commercials and encourage Canadian Culture by paying local artists more.

In the speeches from the floor, Mr. Wells stated that the stock piling of supplies by the Ottawa government now being "A dead horse" the Liberals seemed intent on stock piling western wheat. He defined the Liberal policy as a such from the traditional liberty, unity and security to power, patronage and perpetuity.

The prospect of Canada being swallowed culturally was outlined by B. Kenzic of the CCF. He told of the adoption by the CBC of American sales methods, commercials and programs. This was necessary to combat the methods of private stations, and could be eliminated if the government were to nationalize all such stations.

In the final vote the government was defeated by the combined forces of the opposition, by a vote of 65-12.

$35 Buys Co-Ed At Trinity Auction

A beautiful young lady slowly lost her apparel yesterday as an expectant crowd shouted encouragement. This young lady was selling all for SHARE at the Annual Trinity College Auction Sale at noon in the Buttery.

The third year "syndicate" einally removed her from the block for the sum of $35.00. Thrown in with this gorgeous co-ed were two tickets for a local theatre.

The girls of St. Hilda's put up $38.75 for a local wrestler in another closely-fought contest. Other donated goods sold included a stuffed muskrat, a bathing suit worn by Edward VI, a putter, a box of CNIB candies, a husky young Divinity student, (sold by the pound), a game preserve sign and much beer, sold for as high as $2.00 per bottle.

The sale netted SHARE $107.00 but this is only a start. Gordon Montezambert, the auctioneer, reported that because of the many valuable articles still unsold there will be a second auction to-day at noon, in the Buttery.

'West Europe Socialism Needs United Workers'

A lecture on Socialism in Western Europe was delivered yesterday in Room 4 UC by Sam Clasky, III UC. It was one of a series of lectures on Socialism sponsored by the CCF Club.

Clasky described the development of Socialism in Western Europe from its beginnings until the present. Britain, Scandinavia, and Russia were omitted, since these will be presented in subsequent weeks.

Clasky concluded that Socialism in Western Europe has thus far proven a failure. Two reasons were given. The European Socialist movements have been led by middle-class intellectuals and not by the workers themselves. A dogmatic outlook has been the result, with a tendency to disunity and factionalism, over questions of policy and philosophy. Secondly, the Socialist parties of Western Europe have been unable to resolve the conflict between national loyalties and the international character of Socialism.

In response to a question from the floor, Clasky asserted that Socialism will not succeed until the movement becomes a unified force based on the principles of international co-operation of the working class.

Universities In Quebec Face Critical Situation In Financial Question

The average Quebecois will not be able to find a qualified doctor to look after his wife in childbirth in five years, except outside the province of Quebec, wrote Raymond Deraspe, editor-in-chief of the Laval University newspaper, Le Carabin, if the government of Quebec refuses to make up from the provincial treasury the grants to the Universities of which they were deprived when the provincial government refused to allow federal aid.

Since the question of federal grants to higher education, which is constitutionally under provincial jurisdiction, came up more than two years ago, the financial status of the universities of the province of Quebec, namely McGill, Bishop's, Montreal and Laval, has become increasingly critical.

The federal government offered unconditionally two million from a total of seven million dollars for aid to Quebec universities. This was never received because the provincial government under Duplessis declined. The reason was fear of federal attempts to control and pass legislation on provincial education through designating the use of the money.

The result is that Quebec Universities have remained the only ones in Canada that are not subsidized. To meet the rising costs and drop in registration since the graduation of the veterans, they have had to increase fees by as much as 20 percent. "We deplore such a system of education as this which makes itself the tool of a small group of privileged people," states a letter which McGill is addressing to the Honourable Maurice Duplessis.

Donation Sent Anonymously

An anonymous letter to the editor of The Varsity, received this week, read "Please accept $20.00 investment in Asia" and enclosed the cash.

This money will go towards the SHARE project of building a health centre at Delhi University. Five thousand dollars or more of Canadian students' money is being asked for this project alone.

SHARE donations have been extracted from the Toronto campus in a variety of ways over the past three years.

The Donor stated, "I think that the SHARE committee might be wise if they made provision for anonymous gifts."

Our Readers Write:

We Need Not Be Sterile

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I think that Mr. Budd's article in The Varsity of Nov. 9 contained some very constructive suggestions. His main point was that the negative treatment which NFCUS gave to the possibility of affiliation with IUS and its "brushing over" the Canadian-Soviet student exchange necessitates that Toronto act independently of NFCSU and go ahead on these issues.

The IUS consititution accepts single university affiliates. Toronto could pursue the possibilities of closer co-operation even though NFCUS all but rejected it. Likewise it is also very probable that a Soviet university would accept an invitation from the University of Toronto for an exchange of students. If NFCUS side-stepped the expressed student desire for an exchange on a national level the SAC could at least carry through an exchange on a university to university level.

Not only did NFCUS fall short on the important international issues but it was also very feeble on biggest exclusively national issue today—namely the need for immediate direct federal aid to needy students as recommended in the Massey Report. It isn't just a matter of giving some needy students a few more dollars to help them through university—although considered solely from this angle alone, federal aid is quite important; it involves the whole future of Canadian arts, letters and sciences. Yet the NFCUS conference contented itself with the weak efforts of the past when the urgency of the situation actually required a strong national campaign—one that would go beyond the university students and rouse widespread public opinion in the nation as a whole. No new programme of action was laid down by NFCUS. Here too, Toronto must take independent action and seek perhaps joint action with universities such as Western Ontario and McGill who also had their fees increased.

If NFCUS is sterile, that doesn't mean that Toronto must be sterile. Nor does independent action centre around whether we are "in" of "out" of NFCUS. On the big questions such as IUS, the exchange, and tuition fees, if Toronto took the lead other universities would follow.

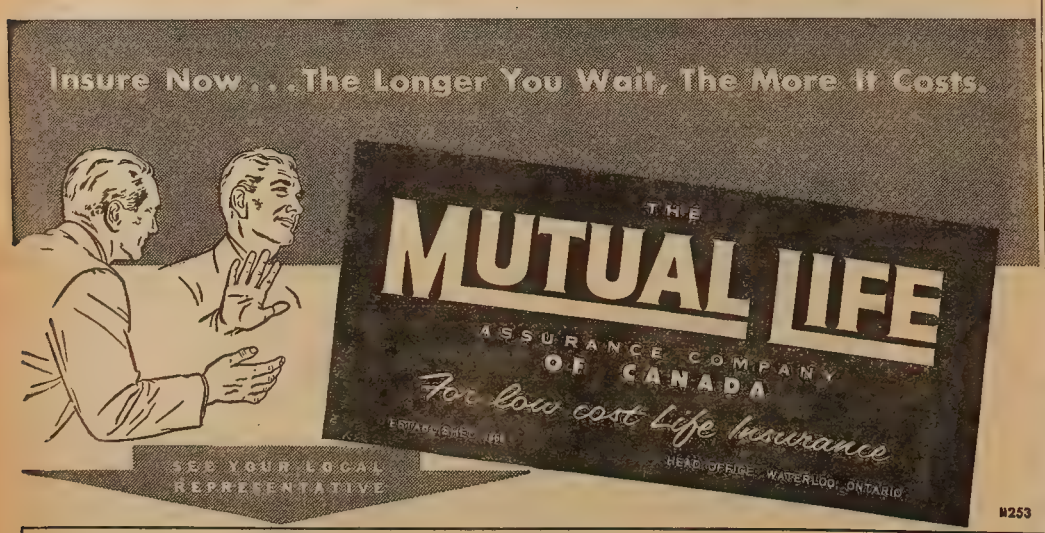
What Spirit

Cold hands and colder feet
The field was like an icy sheet,
Ten thousand brave the wintry gale
To witness Varsity prevail.



The stands are choked in soggy snow
The mercury is at a freezing low;
Well equipped with anti-freeze
Ten thousnad braved the icy breeze.

They huddled in the driving snow
They watched ol' Varsity get up and go
Slipping and sliding in the snow
The boys from T.O. will not yield
For thirty minutes a scoreless tie
Then all at once they start to fly.

An uninviting day for a game
But we're not sorry that we came
Soaked but sober through it all
We watched the Western Giant fall.

They called us crazy, stupid and bold
To sit all day in the wet and cold
But we don't regret the effort it took
For the game we saw was one for the book.

since playing the Colts, the Baby Blues have moved ahead and have a record of three shutouts in their last four games. In those games the Varsitys scored a total of 108 points. Add to that their scoring against Western and the first O.A.V.C. game, and the Baby Blues have a season record of 141 points for them while a mere 29 have been marked up against.

About 11 o'clock tonight Varsity will welcome home the Baby Blues and sole possession of first place in the Intermediate league.

OPEN-STAGE PRODUCTION

Right You Are

Jupiter Theatre's production of Luigi Pirandello's Right You Are was perhaps not the best choice for the opening of their Theatre-at-Ryerson experiment of acting without the artificial restraint of a proscenium arch. This particular milieu demands that the play create an effect of complete realism and draw the audience, in spirit, on to the stage to feel and experience with the actors.

Right You Are is a slightly fantastic play—one cannot quite believe in all of its characters and all of its incidents, although most of them are credible. Taking this into consideration it is probable that had the play been produced with consistency of mood and acting style and had Laudisi's introductions been omitted a convincing production would have resulted.

As it was, Laudisi became so very much a spectator by making himself one of the audience that he reminded us that we too were merely spectators of what was happening on stage and not a part of it.

The introduction had further unfortunate effects in that it explained to us exactly what was going to happen instead of letting the play speak for itself. The action of Right You Are, is, if credibly presented, conclusive proof that its theme is right—but only if it succeeds in surprising and confusing the audience as it does the actors. As a result of the prologue, however, we knew exactly what was coming next and why; the situation became almost ludicrous as we watched the actors doing all the wrong things.

The best performances of the evening were turned in by the actors who took the play seriously, as stark realism rather than as comedy. Karen Glahn as Signora Frola was wonderfully moving and convincing; every movement, every grimace conveyed the picture of a very old and tired woman, a very unhappy mother. Equalling her in intensity and sincerity, if not in detail of characterization was James Doohan as the son-in-law, Signor Ponza. The scenes of conflict between these two were the only convincing moments of the play; then one could almost be carried away and believe in their lives.

The more stylized acting of the others, however, always destroyed the illusion; a stylization which under other circumstances might be the proper interpretation of the play, but in Theatre-at-Ryerson is out of place. Jerry Stoven, playing councillor Agazzi, was particularly caught up in this, with his jerky movements and his jerky pinches of snuff. If all the actors had followed this example the play, of course, would have become a comedy instead of leaving the feeling that it should have been and wasn't.

These tactics, however, although they would have been momentarily satisfactory, would not really have gone to the heart of the matter. For it is really a tragedy, this story of an unhappy old woman hiding a secret, surrounded by the vulturous eyes of her neighbours. For the women are harshly curious; they smile and raise their eyebrows at her pitiful defences.

On the other hand, with a swift and confusing change of mood they clucked and chattered sympathetically. This sort of inconsistency made it impossible to receive a unified impression from the play.

The play does have a certain unevenness of construction, an occasional sudden change in mood however, would be unnoticeable in or shift of characterization which causes a few jarring notes. These, a production with integrity of purpose and direction. As it was one was left with the feeling that something had failed, that the pace was wrong or the mood was heavy. Only later did realization dawn that the fault lay in the initial assumption that the audience would take nothing for granted, that the main point must be be-labored until it was thoroughly pounded into their heads.

Right You Are is a pleasant and worthwhile evening's entertainment; its set is efficient and decorative, its cast is competent and its production smooth. But as an exposition of its own theme it fails because of inconsistency, and as really good theatre it falls short because of over-emphasis.

Nancy Donnell.

Donald Garrard At Wymilwood

Wymilwood's concert season opens this Sunday with a recital by Donald Garrard, bass. The Music Room at the Vic Union will be open to all students of the university for this concert, which begins at 9:00 p.m.

Donald Garrard was the grand award winner of this year's "Singing Stars of Tomorrow" contest, and he was recently heard as bass solist in the Mendelssohn Choir's performance of Elijah. He has also been heard in leading roles with the CBC and Conservatory Opera companies, and will take parts in their productions this year as well.

Hi Wymilwood concert will include four songs by Johannes Brahms, an aria from Rossini's The Barber of Seville, the second movement of Sir Arthur Bliss' Serenade as well as several other groups of songs.

No tickets are required for admission.

Teagarden Jazz

The Teagarden family has taken over the Toronto jazz scene without even a semblance of a struggle. The jazzophiles who frequent the Colonial Tavern actually met the clan's invasion with open arms—and with good reason; this is a very fine Dixieland group Big Jack Teagarden has brought to town. Big Tea's golden trombone occupies the spotlight and that is only natural because here we have an immortal of jazz ranking with Louis Armstrong and Jelly Roll Morton. Even so, a big share of applause can't be taken away from the two other Teagardens, trumpeters Charlie and pianist Norma.

Perhaps the fact that this sextet is fifty per cent a family affair helps to explain why it produces as well-integrated a brand of Dixieland as I've heard. A solid, foot-tapping rhythm section—drummer Ray Bauduc, bassist Cass Malone and the pianistics of Norma Teagarden, who has an unusually powerful left hand for a female pianist.

Somehow, it's big Tea, Jack himself, who captures the audience's attention. In two typical segments one evening this week, he provided a few moments of immortality by singing three of his trademarks: Basin Street Blues, Baby, Won't You Please Come Home? and Stars Fell On Alabama. The Teagarden flavour is still there after the years which have elapsed since he recorded these songs with Louis Armstrong. It's a drawling, lazy style that drips with rhythm, suspiciously similar in improvisation to his approach to trombone playing. Jack's trombone may lack volume but nothing else. It's tastefully, swinging and when the man serenely closes his eyes, leans back and plays, you know it's inspired.

It takes a little research to find out who the man with the clarinet is but eventually it can be ascertained that it's Jay St. John, whose work has a great deal of zing. Charlie Teagarden is one of the better trumpeters and proves it as he counters his brother's trombone nicely and comes up with fine solos every time he gets the chance. I liked the three best, though, when they were playing in ensemble on Shine and Sweet Georgia Brown. Scholarly-looking Cass Malone, like most bassmen, is the unsung hero who keeps things moving. He has his innings here as does a tired-looking Ray Bauduc. I can't recall a drummer who beat out such a true melody as Bauduc.

Norma Teagarden deserves a paragraph of her own. She crams a heap of piano-playing into the short solos she gets during each selection. As mentioned before, she features a strong bass and her right hand rambles around the melody in question without moving too far away.

For a pianist, she's very, very good; for a woman pianist, she's great.

The Teagarden clan will hold forth at the Colonial for another week before Toronto's adopted son Muggsy Spanier, moves in on the 23rd for his umpteenth visit.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

BOYS BECAME MEN

Back on October 5, this column expressed the opinion that Coach Tindall of the Queen's Golden Gaels probably learned not to send a boy on a man's errand. The opinion that the Gaels could be compared to a boy was formulated because the Gaels looked like they fell apart in the final quarter of their game with the Blues on the Saturday at Varsity Stadium, that weekend. It may be coincidence but it would seem that the good Queen's coach learned his lesson. Since Oct. 3, the Gaels have won three and lost one.

A REVIEW

Let's go back and take things once again from the beginning.

The men from Kingston came from that fair town to this fair town back on the first weekend in October to play a game of football. It looked a bit like someone forgot to tell them that a football game is 60 minutes long. At the end of half time the Gaels were doing good job of pushing the Blues around. Queen's was winning 7-0.

After the intermission the Gaels seem to let down and before they could turn around twice, the Blues had scored a couple touchdowns to go ahead and win 16-7.

Shortly thereafter Queen's played and won a game against McGill, lost a game to Western, and won two from McMaster. The games with McMaster were won by the fabulous scores of 34-20 and 28-0. In both the games with the Marauders, Ron Stewart ran wild for three touchdowns to take up second place in the point-scoring race with 35. Our Honest Steve is in first with 39

DON'T BE FOOLED

But don't let those big scores with McMaster fool you. Mac has been weakened (it it's possible) by injuries. On the other hand, the Gaels are usually at their best when they play the Blues and that's particularly true down in Kingston. Last year the Blues won 13-1 in one of the roughest games witnessed in the Intercollegiate for some time.

Another good reason for suspecting that tomorrow's little epic in Richardson Memorial Stadium will be no pushover for the Blues is that for thirty minutes, back when the Gaels visited us in October, Queen's looked like giant killers.

THEY'LL HAVE TO BE

You have every reason to suspect that Queen's will have to be giant killers tomorrow. The Blues are out to stretch their defensive record to 240 minutes of scoreless football. On top of that, Steve Oneschuk could clinch the Intercollegiate scoring championship by a few timely points against the Gaels. But more important, the Blues need a win tomorrow to at least finish with a tie with the Mustangs for first place. If they lose by more than ten points to the Gaels, they don't get to play in the playoffs.

But, as One-eyed Benny said last night when he dropped in, all the smart money is on the Blues.

END NOTES

Our column of Monday concerning Interfaculty eligibility stands corrected. A man is permanently ineligible if he holds a first color for Intercollegate sport. The Interfaculty Sports Committee was studying a motion and amendment to change a first color holder's eligibility to read so that after one academic year he would then be eligible for Interfaclty sport. If One-eyed Benny's predictions are right this weekend and how can he miss, taking Toronto and Western, his average over the season will be 83.3 per cent. My God, hope he doesn't want another pay increase. We'll go broke. Leo Madden who played some good basketball for Varsity last year and who is currently playing with the Tri-Bells will be writing a basketball column for The Varsity starting two weeks from today.

Blues B-Ball —

By LEO MADDEN

Will the new replace the old?—The abundance of tall men eliminates one headache the coaching staff had last season. Last year they had to be satisfied with two or three tall boys. This year they can be more demanding and if the veterans don't show up well the hustling new boys will be on the starting five, come opening night.

Work is continuing on the development of backcourt men. Jim Russell has just about captured one of the guard spots but the other is still wide open. Several boys have been worked in with Jim this week and one who comes as a bit of a surprise is Florian Matsella. A graduate of Saint Michael's Collegiate, "Mats" was a bucket man in high school but finds himself playing outside with the bigger men at Varsity. He does fairly well in the backcourt as a dribbler and ball handler but he will have to develop his set shot if he wants to make that first team.

Ruby Richman who played for Vaughan Road in his high school days is another boy who has caught our eye. He can shoot from

Varsity Tackles Queen's Both Teams Need Win

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Like the last two seasons, much discussion in the intercollegiate football league this fall has centred around the Varsity Blues' efficient defensive corps. And well it might, too—the Blues' opposition has scored a mere 20 points in the five games to date. That's an average of four a game—less than one touchdown; as a matter of fact, the opposition has scored only three majors, Western two and Queen's one. And to make the outlook even better, the Blues have racked up three shutouts in a row up until last Saturday, a string of 180 scoreless minutes.

Tomorrow afternoon, in Kingston's Richardson Stadium, the Blues will be looking for their fourth shutout in a row when they face Frank Tindall's Queen's Golden Gaels. They'll settle for just a win, though, as a victory for the Gaels would mean a two-way tie for second place. In that case the team having the best points average from the two Varsity-Queen's games would go into the playoff. Right now, the Blues have a 16-7 edge left over from the Oct. 3 game against the Tricolor in Varsity Stadium.

If Western should lose to McGill in their game at London tomorrow, and Queen's win, a three-way deadlock for first-place would result. As to how this would be settled, intercollegiate authorities are just keeping their fingers crossed.

If Western and Varsity win, they'll continue their first place tie and would flip a coin with the winner getting the right to act as host for the Yates Cup playoff.

But, as far as all that emphasis on defence is concerned, a great many people seem to be forgetting that the Blues have just as effective an attack as any college team this season. They've scored 96 points in five games which is just one less than Western's total, the tops in the league. In Steve Oneschuk, they've got the runner-up in the scoring race and certainly the most effective all-round man. Oneschuk has five touchdowns, one field goal, one single and ten converts for 39 points, one less tha the Tricolor's Ron Stewart whose total is made up of eight touchdowns. Bob Pinkney has scored three touchdowns and Ted Kennedy, Phil Muntz and Bill McFarlane have two each. No team has a backfield foursome to match that output.

The Blues will probably field the same team tomorrow as blanked Western 12-0 last Saturday. Steve Oneschuk has a badly bruised shoulder, but it will not likely keep him out of action. If he is sidelined, Al Riva would be the probable replacement. The line is in good shape and the quarterbacking assignments are likely to go to Ed Skrzypek and Ollie Mandryk. Their passing set up both majors last Saturday.

He Shoots—

Don't ask any embarrassing questions such as one pertaining to the identity of these lacrosse players. It is sufficient to say that an interfaculty boxla player is reaching around the goalie's shoulder to fire home a goal. Two defenders are moving up behind him but appear to be a bit too late.

Cross-Country At High Park

There will be more than one parade in Toronto tomorrow morning. While the Santa Claus parade is moving through the downtown Toronto, High Park's barrier course will see two speedier processions. The University of Toronto is the host this year for both the senior and intermediate harrier meets.

Starter's gun will be fired at 11 a.m. Queen's are defending senior champions and they'll have to fight off challenges from Varsity, McGill and Royal Military College. In the intermediate race, McMaster, Western, OAC and Varsity are entered. Western currently holds the intermediate title.

Veteran Dave Preston will lead the senior Blues into the race. Supporting him will be Herb Tilson, Gord Banks, Gord Rintoul and Bill Eakerley. Pete Watson junior interfaculty harrier champions, heads the Intermediate squad and his team mates are Ken Yates, Ross Linton, Vern Spring and Ian Campbell.

Knox Squad In Close Win Over Pharm.

Knox College put on a second-half drive yesterday to shade Pharmacy 3-2, in a Division Two lacrosse game. The game was all tied up at 1-1 after the first half but the theologians roared out of the dressing room after the intermission to earn themselves a one-goal margin.

Kent rapped home two goals for the winners with Graham adding another. Bud Gillap scored both counters for the druggists.

Interfaculty lacrosse winds up its schedule next week with playoff time looming the following week.

Soccer

This promises to be a busy afternoon on the University of Western Ontadio campus in London. Besides the Blues-Colts intermediate football encounter, two soccer games will be played.

Varsity's senior soccer Blues have already clinched the Blackwood Trophy for the western conference championship, so this afternoon's game against the Mustangs will be something of an anti-climax. Meanwhile, the Varsity Seconds will engage Western Seconds in an intermediate game.

Benny Says—

One-eyed Benny was not exuberant last night over the news that if his predictions are right this weekend he will have hit a season's percentage of 83.3 percent. "figure" Benny has put it, before "figure" don't mean anything to me, I only know that the smart money is with Toronto and Western this week-end." For those with loose change that are interested in a little capital gain Benny has suggested the following scores:

Toronto 18	Queen's 9
Western 31	McGill 12

Baby Blues Can Win Title By Beating Western Colts

By MOISHE REITER

The Varsity Intermediates have left the Campus, but don't despair, they'll be back soon. The Seconds have travelled down to London to settle up a small difference of opinion regarding the proper home of a certain Shaw Trophy. It seems the boys from a University out in Western Ontario feel that the Shaw belongs in London. The Varsitys however are sure that it has found a permanent place right here in Toronto. After all, the Shaw Trophy has been here for the past two years and has had ideal treatment. Anyway, it hasn't complained yet, so it must be happy.

Western was the strongest team to show against Varsity Seconds this year. Playing on the Baby Blues' home field, the lads from London almost broke the Varsity victory string, and it was only a magnificent Blue comeback in the last half that gave the Seconds the edge. The score of that game was 19-16, after Western had held a half-time lead of 11-0, and a later margin of 16-6.

The Baby Blues left early this morning and will arrive in London at exactly 11.32 a.m. The boys will have just enough time to swallow their food then hop out to squelch the play-off dreams of the Westerns.

With today's victory the Baby Blues will finish their second straight season of 4 wins and 0 losses. Last year the Seconds finished off with that but this year the league championship will signal the start of very interesting action for them, if certain signs are correct. There are indications that if Varsity win the Shaw Trophy this year they may be invited down to play with the winners of the Eastern Intermediate Championship — The R.M.C. Cup. Nothing is as yet certain but two years ago the Queen's team invited the Varsitys down to play for the Cup and, as befits generous hosts, paid a good part of the shot. Varsity repaid this generosity by defeating the Queen's club for the championship.

Varsity Intermediates are favoured as they come into London for this last season game. In their only other meeting the two squads outside and drives hard for the basket when the opportunity presents itself. With a little experience this boy could develop into a fine ballplayer.

Harold Rotman has been trying harder this week. He got off to a bad start but seems to be shaping up to his form of last season. Rotman was expected to do big things this year with the senior squad. Last season he played some excellent basketball for the intermediates.

All these boys get a good chance to prove themselves in the nightly scrimmages and soon Dalt White will be making that final cut. This should come some day next week should come some day next week. Dalt is planning to have an exhibition game during the last week in November. This will give the team a bit of game experience before they start the regular season on December 2nd against Niagara.

While we are preparing for the coming season we can take a quick look at what the other teams in the circuit will have this year. Much to our pleasure, both Western and Queen's have been hard hit by graduation. Western has lost Ray Truant and Doug McNichol, their one-two punch of last year. Queen s will be without the services of Don Griffin, Bill Oliver and Ken Atwood. These losses should weaken both teams considerably.

McMaster on the other hand will be stronger. They have Lorne Wrigglesworth and Max Wooley back and their only loss was Gerry McTaggart. McGill should have a better team this year with several of their veterans returning.

Assumption is going to be the team to watch this year. They still have Lou Verres, their big man last year, and they will have the four Americans who performed for their freshman squad last year. They also have Dick McKenzie from Niagara Falls High and several good players who will be up from their high school team. With this wealth of material at their disposal Assumption should be a definite threat for the championship.

Hold On, There

—Cartoon by Al Bernholtz.

But Patience . . .

A number of students have expressed impatience with Hart House membership cards. The Hart House people seem to consider these necessary in identifying members, although every male undergraduate student is a member without being asked. Students, now, can only eat lunch in the Great Hall if they first present their membership cards.

The cartoon above depicts the possible dire consequences of carrying this sort of thing to its natural (?) conclusion.

Ah, Sweet Mystery

There is a natural appreciation of the beautiful in every eye.

But, alas, how much of it we do miss; we are of the city. We are not "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife", the frantic shouts of those in the market places, the clang of man-made machinery, the rattle of ever-circling wheels, the dust of heavy traffic.

Nay, we do not experience the silent beauty of night, the autumn moon, the twinkling stars. The tragedy of millions is that these go unseen. To many are imprisoned in the cities where high walls and glaring lights limit vision.

Unhappily this is the treasure of the rural folk. They are not dazzled by bright lights and flashing signs, nor plagued by noisy streets. They know of the laughter of the stream, the scent of the blossom, the sweetness of stillness.

Darkness forever carries the curse of our illogical traditions. In darkness, it is ruled, we must sleep. What precious little darkness we get after sunset is lost in the brassy din and loud voices of our city.

But this is the fateful price of progress which is levied on man. He discovers to improve, and has destroyed.

Incredulous Credulity

Ruthlessness Is Needed

A student who has seen the work of Communism both in Democracy and in Communist states present the case for McCarthyism in North Amreica.

By ALEC PEEV

It is hard for someone who has seen Communism at work to understand how and why certain people in Canada take such a thoughtless attitude towards it. On the other side it's even harder for people, who have not experienced Communist methods, to understand why so much "fuss" is made about it.

TEN YEARS AGO THE GREAT majority of the people in North America, including their leaders, thought of "Old Joe" as a swell fellow. Whether this was due to lack of information, or an unwillingness to see the facts such as they are, is of little importance now. What matters si that, as a result of this naiveness, irreparable damage has been done to scores of countries, and millions of people, not only in Europe, but in Asia as well as in Africa. There can be no forgiveness for the leaders who displayed such utter incapacity and short-sighted credulity. What, then, is the excuse for those people who continue to advocate and support this "soft-body" policy?

Turning to a more specific question, some people on this campus find the burning of an effigy of Senator McCarthy as a well justified act. They sustain that:

(a) this is in no way an expression of Anti-Americanism.

(b) they don't oppose McCarthy's fight against Communism, but merely his methods.

HOW WOULD THOSE CANADIANS feel, if the students of the University of Wisconsin (or any other American University, for that matter) would burn the effigies of the originators of the "Padlocvk Law"? Would they consider this as a friendly gesture towards Canadians, and if yes, why?

As far as McCarthy's methods are concerned, a little eye-opening seems to be desirable. First of all, the fight between Communism and democracy is a matter of life or death. Naive souls tend to compare it all too easily with a fight between Liberals and Conservatives, or Republicans and Democrats. These parties have always fought each other, but life on the North American Continent has not been affected by it. Not having experienced anything else, our naive idealists think that even if Communism happens to seize the power on this continent (which, "of course", it can not), life and business will not be greatly affected.

THE TRAGEDY IS, THAT it will be. Life will be modified to such an extent, that only few can imagine it. Compared to what we have today here, an existence under Communist regime is worst than death. Why, do you think, do thousands of Europeans risk their lives, and the lives of their women and children, to break through the Iron Curtain? Why do thousands of North Koreans and Chinese refuse even to hear the "explanations" of the Red officers? It would be very interesting to hear your answers.

You may also say, this might be true for Europe and Korea, but the Communist threat on this continent does not justify the autocratic methods McCarthy employs, Doesn't it? Just because Europe and Korea are far away, the danger here is not less. In fact, it is even greater here! Communism knows that Democracy is the biggest obstacle to Red world-domination. The fights in Erope and Korea and Iran and Guiana are only pilot-fights. It's just testing how strong the enemy is. To anyone who knows the smallest little bit about Communism, it is obvious that world domination has, is, and will always be its ultimate aim. The methods in achieving it do not matter. Time is no objection either. The methods can vary from aggressive stubbornness to friendly politeness. Since the former resulted in western rearmament and strength, now the latter is used, hoping to bring us to the point when they will be able to strike when we are off guard. So much about diplomacy.

AS FAR AS SUBVERSIVE ACTIONS go, it is no news to anyone that the Reds are masters in ruthless fighting. The spy-rings in Canada and the United States are sufficient proof for that. Red-inspired strikes only add to the picture. The Communists are constantly hitting under the belt. The only way to fight back, is to hit harder, under the belt!

"Fighting McCarthyism is very worthwhile," says The Varsity. "It must be whittled down to the annihilation it deserves." Go ahead, naive souls, annihilate it! Destroy all the strong arm methods with which it combats Communism, Eliminate the only thing for which Communism has respect: strength and power! You will find yourselves with velvet gloves and conference tables against hordes armed with dynamite and machine guns. Fight legally and weakly a crooked enemy, and your children will damn you and the day they were born.

YOU SAY McCARTHY is discrediting the very principles which Americans and Canadians claim to profess. Yes, he is! He is disregarding democratic principles in a fight against autocratic powers! This fight is imposed to us by savages. We cannot, but fight savagely. True, we'll lose part of our civilization. But we have to sacrifice that, in order to save our lives! And if some Canadians and Americans think they would prefer to die without violating principles, rather than stay alive with violated principles, let them be reminded that the free world looks up to them for leadership. If the leaders bury themselves, the savage forces will make these high principles unavailable for those who remain alive.

Before fighting McCarthyism, destroy Communism! If after that McCarthyism still exists, you'll have all the right, time and means to annihilate it. But if you're so soft and naive not to realize the real danger, don't stop a man who has realized it, and has the courage to fight a ruthless enemy ruthlessly.

Narrow-Minded View Of Life

The Editor,
The Varsity:

H. L. Wipprecht's letter in last Tuesday's Varsity was appropriately headed "Sickening and Juvenile", for it was just that in both form and matter. The writer's style is the crowning glory of his narrow-minded view of campus life and life in general. True, some of the pranks so far this year may have been uncalled for, however H. L.'s attitude towards them is quite hilarious. In referring to the participants as "juvenile brats who should be thrown in jail", he (or she) gives us an exact picture of his (or her) distorted mind.

Continuing in his warped style, the writer rashly judged an entire college by the opinions of one of its students. He, therefore, has placed his own fellow students in the uncomfortable position of being likewise judged. In the closing paragraphs of the letter, a comparison between Communism and Catholicism is drawn in that both are tyrannical —at least according to this prejudiced individual. To what does he refer when speaking of Catholic domains? Where are people persecuted and killed for purely religious reasons? In his narrow-minded view, as shown above, the writer has failed to realize any political implications linked with the matter at hand. The warning that one "must stand on guard against the RC Church", has been sounded every twelfth of July for the last few centuries—but seldom to any avail. For mature unbiased minds have always penetrated the smog of petty prejudices in which statements like this are wrapped.

To conclude his little masterpiece, H. L. defies anyone to oppose his views, although readily admitting lack of evidence at hand to "crush any denials." It is hopefully anticipated that, before conjuring up anymore gems of knowledge, H. L. Wipprecht will have removed his foot from his mouth.

An Emotional Outlet?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It's "hate America" week in The Varsity.

No constructive rational ideas have been put forward; we have been subjected to a blind emotional attack on all American policy. Instead of building original Canadian thought we are trying to tear down everyone else. Is this Canadian nationalism?

A few years ago, one, Henri Bourrassa, defended the extremist views of the Quebec nationalists in our usually staid House of Commons. Die hard Tories outside Quebec, conveniently overlooking the fact that this was the opinion of only one member of the Canadian nationalist delegation, labelled his views as the views of the entire nationalist movement. This technique is again being used in the case of Senator McCarthy. Jittery outsiders have seized on his views as the ideas of the entire US Senate.

This is not a defence of Senator McCarthy but a plea for reason; please let us use a little sense. The Senator has not yet highways. The US is not a "to-the US — as we never accepted Bourrassa. There are not yet fires in front of US libraries, or barbed wire camps along their highways. The US is not a "Totalitarian nation."

Does this "hate America" attitude supply an emotional outlet for frustrated Victorian students and Varsity editors? Perhaps we should look in our own backyard.

Thomas Middlebro,
II Trinity.

Workshop

Anyone interested in working for The Varsity in any capacity is invited to a Workshop to be held in the news office today from 1.00 p.m. to 2.00. The news editor will discuss principles of newswriting as they apply to the past week's issues of The Varsity. All those who have contributed articles during the week as well as those who wish to begin will find it of great value. The offices are located in the basement of the SAC Building.

BLUES IN FIRST PLACE

Feinting McFarlane

Big Bill McFarlane faints out a clan of grovelling Gaels as he steps neatly past them, running back a long Geard kick. On runs like this McFarlane ran up a total of 150 yards to lead all Blue ball-carriers. Al Kocman is the Golden Gael in the foreground, who is being repaid in his own coin. The foxy Gael deked Varsity tacklers into the daisies on his own runbacks. Background—Bill Koski callously gallops over crouching mate in vain pursuit of McFarlane.

Blues Defeat Gaels 6-1 McFarlane, Muntz, Great

By MOISHE REITER

Kingston, November 14 — Paced by the great running of Bill McFarlane and Phil Muntz, Varsity Blues today defeated Queen's 6-1 to end the season in first place. It was McFarlane who completed a march, by Muntz and himself, from the Varsity 48 to the Gaels' goal late in the final quarter by driving around end for the day's only major. Meanwhile, in London, the McGill Redman played the spoiler's part by upsetting the Western Mustangs 16-13 thus dropping the Londoners into second spot and giving first place to Varsity.

The Gaels were a fighting club out to beat Varsity and these underdogs came within a bobbled pass of the playoffs. Undermanned, with only seven men on their bench, Queen's lost two more before the first quarter ended, but refused to buckle even under the pressure of the tremendous Blue wingline. Ron Stewart and Pete Zarry were carried off early in the game, reducing the Queen's backfield crew to Al Kocman, Jack Roberts, and Jack Simpson, all of whom finished the full game. The Big Blue line had some trouble containing the like of Lou Bruce and Sherm Hood who played fine ball both ways for the Gaels.

Bill McFarlane, in his last season as a Blue, displayed magnificent form, playing almost 60 minutes. McFarlane ran back kicks, played defence and carried the ball for a total gain of 101 yards on the offence. Add to this the 150 yards Bill made on kick runbacks and he stands the top Varsity ground gainer of the day. Phil Muntz was superb, kneeing his way through the Gael line for a day's total of 105 yards. Injured slightly in the second quarter Muntz came back in the fourth to lead the Blues' scoring drive, completed by McFarlane.

The Varsity's played a coy kind of ball, moving repeatedly down into Queen's territory, then shying uncertainly and stalling just short of a score. Reason for this seemed to be that Varsity moved strongly downfield along the ground with their fine runing game, but coming into close range of the Gaels' goal the Blues switched to the pass plays—and these weren't coming off.

Men along the big Blue wingline, like Don Mattason, Roy McMurtry, Baz Mackie, Jack Strapp and Bob Waugh account for the difference in yards gained rushing by both teams. The Blues piled up 376 along the ground while the Gales managed only 39. It was surprising that the Blues went to the air while their ground attack was performing beautifully . . . both Ollie Mandryk and Ed Skrzypek worked well in the quarter slot.

While the Varsitys might have floundered in the passing department the Gaels came up with a great march through the air that carried from their own 21 almost to a touchdown, and almost to a victory, but not quite. Following the Blues' touch Roberts returned the kickoff to the Gael 21. Wally Mellor shipped a short one to Jack Cook at the 38 and from there two more flings brought Queen's right to the Blue 27. Mellor then threw long to Cook over the line but the Gael end stumbled, bobbled the pass and couldn't hold it.

Varsity's touch was the fruit of some neat runs by Muntz and McFarlane who carried play from their own 48 right up to and over the Gael line. McFarlane began with a ten-yard gain with Muntz coming up on the next play right to the Queen's 39. McFarlane went for 12 and Pinkney drove to the 20, with Muntz requiring only two runs to set the ball on the 2. A pitchout to McFarlane around left end got 5 points and Oneschuk toed the extra.

SMALL STUFF: . . . Oneschuk's convert put him in a tie with Stewart for second place in College scoring . . . . Stewart dazzled Varsity ends with such intricate footwork and feinting that they were left diving at daisies. . . . Gaels' Sherm Hood and Lon Bruce were outstanding all the way through, Hood recovering a fumble

Trinity Raided By Wycliffe Auctions Memorial Brick

Wycliffe College invaded the SHARE auction in Trinity's Buttery at noon Friday, where $364.20 was collected in the two days of the Trinity-St. Hilda's sell-out. About 25 Wycliffe men marched in singing, "Joshua fit the battle of Jericho, . . . and the walls came tumbling down", as they carried in a brick to be auctioned off.

In the bidding between Nancy McCaslin of St. Hilda's and the men from across the road, the value of the brick was established at $38.00. Trinity-St. Hilda's, who won, then passed the hat and found $56.00 in it when it was returned.

Another St. Hilda's freshie was auctioned off for the sum of $41.00. The class of '57 was the winner.

Champagne went for $9.40 a bottle, beer averaged $1.40 per pint and rum was sold under the auctioneering of Gordon Montizambert. Miscellaneous items sold included a kitten, a pup, an old-fashioned wind-up gramophone, a bike and a pop-up toaster. A carton of books was deemed worth exactly $1.00 by the bidders.

The auction was a success financially, with Trinity and St. Hilda's grossing $364.20 for the two days. Out of this amount about $350.00 will go to SHARE, the balance to contribute to operating costs.

When Queen's Lose
Kingston Goes Back To Sleep

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Once a year, at least, Kingston, that somnolent little college town at the western end of the St. Lawrence River, comes to life. That's when the Varsity Blues, along with a beery multitude of their supporters, come to town to play the Queen's Golden Gaels. Such an occasion occurred last Saturday, with very few alterations in the regular football week-end script.

The residents of the Limestone City (that's what the folder in the hotel room said) — penitentiary officers, college students, cadets and people who sell things to penitentiary officers, college students and cadets — got their first inkling that something was stirring when the Varsity team plus a few early birds pulled into town Friday evening. They moved in to tax the facilities of the quaint LaSalle Hotel. The following night, after the stampede of fans had commenced

But we digress. The quiet before the storm was upon the LaSalle friday night as the players slept the sleep of the righteous and you could hear a pin drop on the linoleum.

By noon Saturday the cavalcade was on. Apparently, a fair number of people had got through the Santa Claus parade because a four-car SAC Flyer chugged into the station and it was full — of people. They were met by a handful of Queen's students, plus half a dozen bagpipers, plus their kilted cheerleading squad. And incidentally, all kilts should be worn that way.

Next on the agenda was, let's see now — oh yeah, the football game. It was one of those "all-roads-lead-to-the-stadium" games since this was the first year the Gaels had a chance at the championship in a long time, and by game time, they were hanging from the rafters. Hanging from the rafters in this context means close to 10,000 people. The goal posts were standing, mute testimony to the efficiency of the science freshmen who, as part of their initiation, were compelled to guard the goal posts all Friday night. The sophs were on hand to see that they stayed on duty. After the game, these same sentries saw their work go to waste as the victorious Varsity visitors charged the field to rip down these posts and chop them into souvenirs and toothpicks.

The game itself will be left to the lucky Varsity staffer who got a seat in the sumptuous press box of Richardson stadium. The half time display featured both bands with the two majorettes captruing the spotlight as usual. Statuesque starred Elbow Room.

Tance Alcock, who wears the Royal Stewart tartan as though it were designed especially for her, was the darling of the crowd. And why not? She has such a pretty smile. Varsity's tiny Shirley Eckel, in leading the Blue and White band, proved once again that quantity isn't everything.

The violently partisan Kingston fans, who cheered their loudest when Varsity players were injured, were disappointed as their squad did everything but score a touchdown and ended up on the lower side of a 6-1 score. No complaints came from the Gaels brass, though, even their morose coach, Frank Tindall. Like the late Babe Ruth, who looked as good striking out as he did hitting a home run, the Gaels were distinguished in defeat.

As for what followed the game, we could fabricate a story. Who would remember enough to check the facts? But the editors insist on ethics. So ethics it is.

Dean Bissell To Tour US Study Campi

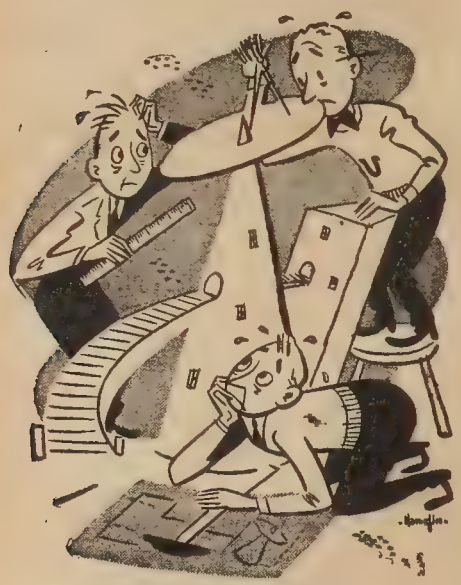
Dean C. T. Bissell, Vice-President of the University, is leaving on November 15 on a month-long tour of Universities in the Eastern United States. The tour, held under the auspices of the Carnegie Corporation, will be for the purpose of studying and discussing administrative problems with officials of other universities.

This will be the third trip that Dr. Bissell has taken for the Carnegie Corporation. Previously he has visited Universities in the UK and Western Canada.

Some of the universities that will be included on the present tour are Yale, Chicago, Brown, Cornell, Michigan, and Buffalo. "My object is to familiarize Canadian University Administrative officials with the problems and work of other universities," said Dr. Bissell.

The survey will be entirely informal, and will cover patterns of organization in universities, problems in research grants, and lines of communication between administrative officials and bodies. The financial position of universities, and sources and methods of raising funds will also be discussed by Dr. Bissell.

Trinitarians Contribute Lion's Share to Asia Objective Not Reached



The SHARE campaign is making a better showing this year than last and should reach its objective according to campaign chairman, Peter Russell. The campaign will run into this week as the last odds and ends get finished up.

"We feel we could do a lot better but we're happy with the result," said Russell. The Medical and Meds' exams occuring last week Architecture divisions are nowhere near completion, mostly due to and an Architecture field trip. These will be looked after this week.

"Trinity has done very well," stated Russell. They have already achieved 151 percent of their objective and have not finished as yet. Vouchers must still come in from the auctions and it looks as if the college with one-twentieth of the total university enrolment will contribute about one-ninth of the SHARE objective.

"The faculty canvass is going very well, but it takes a long time to see them," said Russell. He added that contact was the difficulty with staff.

It is interesting to note that last year's canvass objective has already been reached this year.

What's Coming Up

New Home Ready Now For Nurses

The School of Nursing will officially move to its new home tomorrow at 4:40 p.m. After 20 years, the corner of Russell and St. George Sts. will take the place of 7 Queen's Park Ave.

The School will be formally opened by the Hon. Dr. Mackinnon Phillips, Minister of Health for Ontario. President Sidney Smith and Miss Fidler, Director of the School, will speak. The Chairman, Chancellor Beatty, will be present, and members of the staff of the School. After the opening ceremonies, there will be tea served and a tour of the building.

A new building has been the goal of the School of Nursing since 1920. The School was started then, as a course in the School of Hygiene, under Miss E. K. Russell. In 1933 the present school was organized at 7 Queen's Park and has been there ever since.

Last October, Premier Leslie Frost laid the cornerstone of the new building. Work progressed quickly enough that classes began there in July. The construction of the new School of Nursing was made possible by gifts from the Rockefeller Foundation and the Province of Ontario, as well as private donations.

Dobbin Talks To Engineers

President of the Engineering Institute of Canada, Mr. R. L. Dobbin will speak at an open meeting of the Engineering Society today. The meeting will be at 1:00 p.m. in Room 102 of the Mechanical Building, and the topic is "Engineering in Canada."

Lectures in the Faculty of Applied Science have been cancelled from 12 to 2:00 p.m. for this meeting.

Dobbin was born in Lindsay, and had his schooling in Peterborough. He came to the University of Toronto, and graduated in 1910 in Mechanical Engineering.

He was Chairman of the Canadian Section of the American Waterworks Association in 1922, and was elected President of the 51st Convention of the Association in 1931. He was also on the Senate of the University of Toronto for six years.

SPS Auction Arts' Chairs

The Skule Auction will be held today, in front of the Engineering Building at 12 noon. The proceeds will go to the Community Chest.

"Representatives from Trinity, Vic, and UC should be there," said Auctioneer Woody Friedlander III SPS, "to retrieve various valuables which were found in the Skule House." He said that since being auctioneer is a tiring job, he would sit on a "very uncomfortable chair". He added he would sell the chair when he had no further use for it.

The proceedings will be livened up by the Skule Cannon, and the Vic Cheerleaders, who are coming to help with the auction.

OPENING ADDRESS TO STUDENTS AND STAFF

Wise and pithy, the Opening Address of President Sidney Smith to the University makes high demands of staff and students. The President observes:

" 'Education is not a book of knowledge, but a quality of mind.' . . . 'They are not years of retreat from life, they are life at its best.' . . . 'The most valuable member of society is the man or woman who has the capacity for dissent, who sets up a resistance to mass movements and mass ideas . . . Canada could easily support more 'characters' . . . I hope that every member of this University will develop the habit of thinking toughly and tenaciously for himself."

Start School Of Canucks In Rochester

The subject of Canada has come into the focus of attention of the University of Rochester. It announced on Friday that it intended to start a Canadian studies program which would eventually lead to the establishment of an Institute of Canadian Affairs.

The program is designed to establish a centre for information on the economics, development and culture of Canada to be used by students, researchers and others from all parts of Canada and the United States. Its objective is to promote better understanding and to develop more knowledge of Canada throughout the United States according to Dr. Cornelis W. de Kiewiet, president of Rochester University.

He feels that in spite of a long period of friendly relations between the U.S. and Canada, the whole subject of Canada has been generally neglected in American colleges and universities and that there is a broad gulf of ignorance concerning each other among the citizens of both nations.

Dr. D. W. Gilbert, former professor of economics and dean of the graduate school has resigned to become director of the program.

This is a true story only the names have been changed to protect the innocent. The only thing wrong with the situation is that there isn't an innocent person in sight. Scene of the crime is the intercontinental express to Queen's where the Blues murdered the Golds but no one was arrested. The man in the cigarette wants to catch the guilty party by taking down their names and addresses. Since the only vestige of women is in the upper left corner, he is welcome to them.

Fin Male Choir To Sing To-Day

Helsingin yliopiston ylioppilaskunnan laulajat tervetuloa Torontoon!

Welcome to Toronto, Helsinki University Choir!

The University of Helsinki Male Choir, a symbol of Finnish-Canadian friendship, will present the students of the University of Toronto with a token of this friendship in Convocation Hall at 1:15 today.

The token of friendship to be presented to the students of Toronto from those of Finland is the Nurmi Statuette. The Charge d'affaires for Finland in Ottawa, Mr. H. R. Martola will make the official presentation of the Statuette to Warden McCuiley for Hart House.

The Chorus will be guests of the University at a 12:30 reception and lunch at Hart House to be followed by the student welcome in Convocation Hall.

After the ceremony in Convocation Hall, the Choir will hold a short recital. Here they will also be welcomed by President Smith and Chancellor Beatty.

This evening, the Choir will present a concert at Massey Hall. Tickets to this concert have been made available by the Consul for Finland, Mr. K. Graham, for SHARE to sell.

Students are invited to all three events: The Hart House reception; the Convocation Hall recital and the Massey Hall concert.

The Nurmi Statuette which is being presented to the University is also a token of appreciation for the aid given by a group of Canadian students who spent the summer helping to build the Olympic Village for the Olympic games in Helsinki in 1952.

The statuette is an exact replica of the statue standing before the Olympic Stadium in Helsinki. It was carved by the famous Finnish sculptor, Vaino Aaltonem.

Sixty Finnish students who sing for a hobby comprise the chorus under the direction of Martti Turunen. They are on a five-week tour of the United States and Canada and have performed before President Eisenhower.

The Chorus will arrive in Toronto from Buffalo. At Hart House they will be met by members of the Glee Club, who will escort them to lunch in the Great Hall. After lunch, the Chorus will sing in Convocation Hall. Later they will tour Hart House and meet their Toronto hosts.

Mrs. Helen Ignatieff will be ing the group welcoming the Finnish students in Convocation Hall. Her husband, the late Warden of Hart House, Nicholas Ignatieff was associated with the University of Helsinki where the Chorus was established in 1883.

The choir will also be guests of Lieutenant-Governor Louis Breithaupt. They are under the auspices of the Society of Finnish Advancement in Toronto.

"Dirty Voting Politics" Cry IPA "Soviet Tactic" Countercharge

Charges and counter-charges were hurled back and forth on Friday as an open feud broke out between members of the Independent Progressive Association and the Model Parliament Committee of the Political Economy Club.

Seven members of the IPA walked out of an Independents' meeting of the Model Parliament Committee, charging that the meeting had been packed, and that every dirty political trick in the book had been pulled to deprive them of representation in the Model Parliament.

The meeting, held at 1:00 p.m. last Friday in Rm. 151 of the Economics Building, was for the purpose of selecting five independent members for the Model Parliament. Students who voted at this meeting will not be allowed to vote in the regular elections which will be held on November 19.

Ron Price III Vic charged that the time and place of the independents' meeting had been switched by the Committee on Friday morning. John Lee, a member of the Committee, stated that the confusion about the location and time of the meeting was due to a mix-up in Wednesday's Varsity.

The issue that aroused the most controversy was the legality of reopening nominations for the five independent seats in the Model Parliament. After the meeting had been opened, the IPA nominated five persons. After one other name had been added by some of the other independents at the meeting, the nominations were closed.

At this point, about fifteen new arrivals entered, and requested that the nominations be re-opened. After a great deal of discussion, Slogan the chairman of the meeting ruled that the nominations could be re-opened. This was done, and then the seven members of the IPA walked out.

Price said that the meeting had probably been packed, and that allowing late-comers to vote was a most irregular procedure. Lee denied both charges, and stated that John Roberts, second vice-president of the IPA had agreed to the proposal to re-open the nominations before-hand. Lee also said "The IPA seemed quite determined to railroad their proposals through the meeting."

The secretary of the IPA, Dave Gauthier, IV UC, said "For once in my life I am speechless, with the injustice done to the IPA. Slogan has repeatedly assured me of his desire to be fair to all groups, but his actions have included every dirty political trick in the book."

Slogan, on the other hand, said "The IPA have consistently refused to conform to the decisions of the Committee, and have tried to railroad their proposals through the Committee by the use of Vishinsky tactics. They have attempted to limit all independent members of the Model Parliament to the IPA."

Following the meeting, the IPA issued the following appeal. "The IPA, in view of the corrupt and dishonest tactics of Slogan and his Committee, is making a widespread appeal to students of the university to write in IPA on the ballot in the elections on November 19 to prove that this autocratic bunch of petty politicians cannot impose their will on the students of the U of T."

CBC Yule Records To Far-Off Lands For Students Here

Christmas cheer and good public relations are accomplished by the CBC each year as they open their facilities to overseas students so they may send greetings to their loved ones at home. The International Service of the CBC records the messages of the students attending universities across Canada, prepares a master disc for each of the countries and ships them off to the respective countries for delayed broadcast.

The students sending the messages prepare a list of those whom they wish notified. The various local papers tell the time and station of the broadcast to the general public. The transcriptions are sent to Latin, South American and European networks as well as the smaller island stations.

The students are encouraged to voice their reactions to the Canadian way of life and to discuss homeland and Canada. It is this way that the programmes become solid advertising for Canada. They are discouraged only from talking about the weather, which too frequently becomes a time consuming topic.

By Nov. 25 these programmes will be well on their way to the homelands of the students who were fortunate enough to make a recording.

The Toronto offices of the CBC, 354 Jarvis St., will be the scene of the recording of the Christmas messages of local students from the British West Indies, British Guiana and British Honduras. The time is 7:30 p.m. and the date is Monday, November 23.

CBC ask the co-operation of this group which is usually quite large, especially of those from the smaller islands. All are asked to print their name, country of origin, telephone number and the name of the person whom they would like advised on a pad in the SAC office.

Any inquiry about this service should be addressed "Christmas Broadcast" and left in the SAC office.

La-di-die

Hearses & Horses

The ominous wings of death are beating over the declining spirit of our beloved Augustus. The thread of life is spinning out and we the s a l u b r i o u s smite our breasts in grief with cleuched fists. Death is a common occurrence these days. People have hardened their hearts against stark, inexorable reality.

But humanity (The Law School) cries out in protest against events which have brought our Standard Bearer to this ignominious and unjust pass. Is it any wonder then, that we anxiously await each despatch which further reports the progress of our beloved Augustus?

The atmosphere is electric with concern as our Great Champion hovers on the brink of Eternal Darkness, that land from which so few return who live to tell about it.

The noble head lies imprisoned within the transparent rectangle of the oxygen tent; the noble eyes are feverish with the exigencies of the struggle raging within. The valiant nostrils are dilated and quiver greedily after the life-giving oxygen. In short, it looks bad for Augustus.

But we here at the Law School have not abandoned hope. While he struggles, so do we with him. To all those who love him as dearly as we, we would like to say that everything equestrian is being done which is humanly possible. In attendance we have those self-abnegating "Angels of Mercy" from the School of Nursing. Expert transfusions of Win, Place and Show Juice have been performed and no hurdle is being left overturned to see that Augustus gets his.

While that regal frame heaves with courage and pluck we can only offer our readers — our sympathizers — blood, perspiration, and salty water. Ever, as now, we are reminded of that famous legal maxim, "With equal mind in contests, equal go."

We wish to thank all those who have written in since our last report expressing their deep concern for Augustus. But letters are not enough, send money!!! Progress reports will be made from time to time to the faithful.

Half Alloted For Athletes In Maritimes

Fredericton, N.B., Nov. 4—(CUP)—The Students' Representative Council of the University of New Brunswick has re-affirmed its policy of alloting one-half its funds to the college athletic association. A motion to limit the athletic association to a "minimum percentage" received nine of sixteen votes but failed to poll the required two-thirds majority.

Both the news story and the editorial article in the campus newspaper called the action "Cutting their own throat," and points out that the athletic association has admitted that they do not need the $8,8000 they will receive this year while the student council has a long standing debt of $3,000.

According to the editorial, this financing will mean "The elimination of all the non-athletic activities on the campus."

UC Underground Uses Women To Decoy Skule

"Down with Skule" was the triumphant cry of the UC underground as they made off with a large Skule Night sign from the Engineering Building on Friday afternoon. The raiders, a group of irate UC students used women decoys to distract the skulemen's attention as they did their deed.

The UC underground took this action in retaliation for the theft of the UC speaker's chair by the engineers last week. If the engineers last week. If the engineers want their sign back, they can contact a member of the underground in the JCR and arrange to exchange either the UC chair, or a UC sign that has also disappeared.

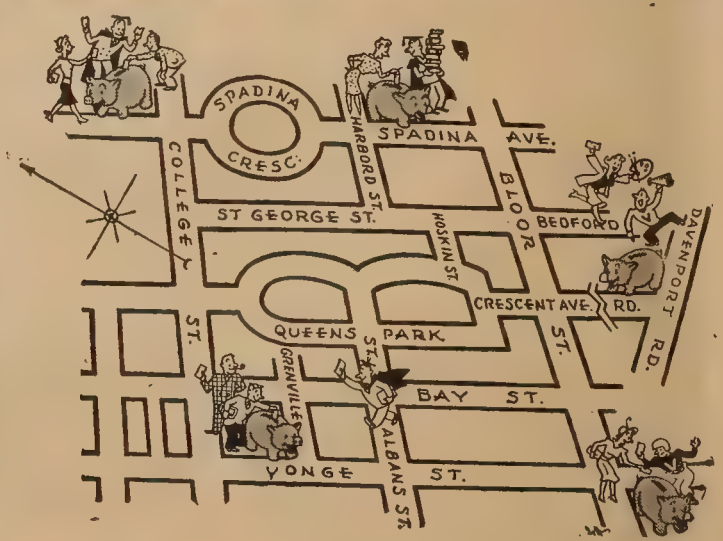
Commons Opening Impressive Hand-Shaking Members Meet

By WENDY MICHENER

"Orr-DRE". . . "OorrDERR," droned the insistent voice above the excited buzz of voices. And the many black men left off their handshaking. The women, bright as peacocks, sat behind bouquets of flowers. After three knocks an austere man strode through the momentary hush announcing a visitor who was given admittance. A wedding? A masquerade ball? A fashion show? A funeral? No; it was the gathering of the parties in the House of Commons preliminary to the opening of the twenty-second parliament.

Just as in the History books, only not dehydrated, the Governor-General's messenger was come to invite the members of the Commons to the senate. Like the rats behind the Pied Piper most of the members followed the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to the Senate chamber to learn Her Majesty's will. A few remained behind in the gothic chamber with its elaborate wood carvings, curtains of dull gold, indirect lighting and thick green carpet, to exchange greetings and hand-grippings in the manner of Old Home Week.



The Queen's wish was the election of a speaker for the Commons. From somewhere just behind my right ear Prime Minister St. Laurent nominated M. Rene Beaudoin, which was greeted with great thumpings on the desk tops. They must be made purposely loose in order to produce the greatest possible sound from the least possible effort. While the speeches continued secretaries scribbled bilingual shorthand, clerks complete with white tape, black robes and a small square apparatus for catching the drips of oil from sleek, but imaginary wigs, kept the records, pages perambulated here and there with messages, books and water, members made notes, chatted, wrote letters, read papers or listened; spectators spied their friends, and a polite policeman approached me to say that the house had funny rules: no clapping, no talking, no reading, no laughing, no smoking and above all no writing. As the speaker was frocked the golden mace was placed upon the table. Intuition must have told him he would be elected for he had moved into the speaker's quarters shortly before. The scene was set, now what great event would take place? The sitting was adjourned till after lunch.

Two hours and a beefsteak later the events attendant upon the opening of a parliament were continued in the Senate. Furs, jewels, silks and satins, laces, taffetas trooped past over the red plush rug to guest seats in the chamber and antechamber. Here and there was the gold chain or red hat of a dignitary almost rivalling in elegance the officials who entered. There were the clerks of the house, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, in black the portly judges of the Supreme Court in scarlet and ermine(?), policemen and mounties (which I needn't describe, I suppose, since they typify what is most "Canadian") body guards from all branches of the services and finally his excellency, the Governor-General in a uniform very much like that of Sir Joseph Porter in H. M. S. Pinafore, substituting gold for tinsel and other such minor changes. (The Governor-General had won his gamble on a bright day to ride in an open carriage.) But still nothing happened. The most important people had not yet arrived. The members of the Commons. Maybe they wouldn't come at all. They would refuse and set a new precedent. But they did come. Apparently they were just out refreshing themselves.

Still chatting and convivially shaking hands they tried to accommodate themselves in the small space behind the bar. Some went around, some climbed through the gothic wooden arches separating the chamber and ante-chamber, and some just stood in the aisle. Now the Gov.-Gen., seated on the covered throne read aloud in French and English the speech from the throne while the plumes on his hat waved in the air conditioning. I have the first fact on trust because none of us in the ante-chamber could hear a word of it (nor could the members). The most effective PA system of the Commons is not present in the Senate. Hearing-aids seem to be the style. I know the second fact because I could just manage to see his hat by standing [illegible] behind the members. I can't tell you what was in the speech, I could only relate the conversation of two French members standing in front of me. Vincent Massey, having delivered himself of his responsibility, walked out to the waiting

Licia Albanese

Licia Albanese, leading soprano of the Met. appeared in Eaton Auditorium last Thursday evening before a captivated audience which included "hundreds turned away". Though the soprano has won her wide and fervent following mainly through the media of radio and records, one does not fully realize the extent of her artistry till one sees her performing in person. For Madame Albanese is an actress of first quality, who enhances her songs with her ebullient personality.

She came back for six encores, and the audience was still asking for more when she finally had to refuse them. With her strong expressive voice she gave an expression to the simple songs of Tchaikovsky and Malotte that left the audience sitting at the edge of their collective seats.

Madame Albanese opened with three songs in English translation, by the Russian composers Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky. Though her diction was a bit stiff in places, she managed with the help of her vivid acting to convey the gamut of emotions from tenderness to fear to panic.

Her last song, a selection from Verdi's La Traviata was presented with the warmth and lyric purity which have become her trademarks in the operatic world, and provided a climactic ending to an exciting evening for an excited audience.

The French songs, though unintelligible to this reviewer were sung with freshness and joy in Fourdrain's Carnival, a lyric sensuality in Delibes' Les Filles de Cadix, and a tender expression in Clair de Lune.

Pinaist Pablo Miquel was excellent as accompanist.

Les Petits Chanteurs

Les Petits chanteurs a la Croix de Bois gave a program of songs partly in French and partly in English with a Parisian accent at Eaton Auditorium on Wednesday. It was very refreshing to attend a concert presented with such a delightful informality and lack of self-consciousness.

The program was divided into secular and religious works, the first half being secular. It was apparent from the first that here was a choir with spontaneity and vigor. It took a little time, however, for them to warm up. In the first two songs, Nous n'irons plus au bois and La Nui by Rameau, the sound was inconstant and the chords fell apart while the singers hurriedly snatched another breath. Jardin de France, which followed, was a charming pot-pourri of ten French folk songs woven together.

This piece and She'll be coming round the mountain were arranged in a dramatic manner similar to that of the arrangements used by the "Compagnons de la Chanson". In the parts which do not have the melody, are accompanying sounds suitable to the word meaning. For example the hiss of the train, and at the end the toot of the whistle. There were several solos in this and the following German lullaby which showed that almost every one of the boys was capable of carrying a solo himself. The voices were all clear with an unusual strength and constancy of pitch for boy-sopranos. The boy who sang the descant in the German Lullaby, whose name I unfortunately did not catch, had almost coloratura range. The commentator announced with frank pride that he would sing a High D. And he did.

The most impressive of the secular works was "Babylone" from the Cantae des Deux Cites, by Darius Milhaud. This piece has a most interesting combinaton of disonances and melodic beauty. Although this was powerfully executed the childish quality of the boys' voices seemed out of place. Because of this the rich quality of the line of men was prominent.

Mgr. Maillet is to be complimented for his imaginative yet economic conducting. By the concise motion of his hands he suggested the feeling of the pieces so that the boys easily captured the mood.

Contrary to my expectation, the religious half of the program was disappointing. True, some spontaneity remained so that they never reminded one of a pious church choir singng sweetly, yet fatuously with eyes raised on high. But the boys were evidently tired from a long and strenuous program. Also they remained soloists singing together instead of striving for the unanimity of anonymity. All the effects which are obtained by a softness and blendings of voices were missing. The Tenebrae factae sunt of Poulenc was the most successful of this group, as it is the most suitable to the individual approach. The old church music forms plus "modern" harmonies found in this as in many of his works create a great strength and haunting beauty.

For a choir composed mainly of young boys, it was a notable feat to perform so many demanding works, especially as they did so without the benefit of musical scores. But even with adult choirs they would compare favourably for their accuracy of pitch, tonal quality and most particularly vigour of attack.

I noticed particularly in the religious pieces the difference in tonal quality between this choir and the average English boys choir. For someone accustomed to their head tone, the French tone seemed slightly nasal, yet more vibrant.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Poor Man's Olivier

The Beggar's Opera at the Towne Cinema, has been mentioned by various critics as excellent, as well-intentioned, as bad film, as bad opera, as bad Laurence Olivier, and a boring entertainment. This critic, ever one to flee the well-worn paths, thinks that though its filmic short-comings are only too obvious, it contains some grand entertainment in a style that has been neglected by the English-speaking screen for many years.

From an opera written over two hundred years ago by John Gay, the brilliant young stage director Peter Brook, whose productions have brightened the London stage for several years. His film style betrays a certain amateur unsureness, but has a nice vividness which is best displayed, oddly enough, in the shots on which the final lengthy credits are superimposed.

Sir Arthur Bliss's arrangement of the music is excellent, and the singing of the voices on the soundtrack is also above average. It is to be devoutly hoped, however, that Sir Laurence will never again be permitted to sing on the screen, as his voic reminds me of nothing so much as Bing Crosby singing grand opera. Stanley Holloway, on the other hand, stands out as the most individual (and understandable) of the lot.

The tale of the dashing highwayman MacHeath, though somewhat drawn out, is an admirable one for film purposes, but has been a little beclouded by Mr. Brook's failure to realize that the exigencies of film require a sharp pair of scissors for both the original script and the completed film.

The other players, among whom may be found such stalwarts of the stage as Athene Seyler, are of varying excellence, and the various arias and ensembles, though well-directed in stage terms, are not always entirely cinematic.

Despite the above remarks, I found The Beggar's Opera quite delightful, with one particularly good part, the trio sung by Messrs. Traips, M. Peachum and Lockit, in a careering carriage. Even Sir Laurence's performance, while by no means up to his usual standard, has moments of superb comedy which he has never been permitted on the screen previously. The best thing about The Beggar's Opera, is however, that it was made at all. Despite its many failings, no picture has depicted the era of Hogarth so well on the screen.

Germaine Clinton.

WHERE ON EARTH?

Certainly Not Toronto

Where On Earth?, UC's contribution to campus entertainment this year, was a sort of mirror image to the Vic Bob Revue; this show was better than the idea behind it. The exuberance and vitality of performers and producers tended to offset the dreary insipidness of the plot and dialogue.

Out of an almost total vacuum three skilled showmen managed to create three memorable musical figures, each of them exhibiting both sides of the standard musical comedy human being: a hilarious one and a sentimental one.

Anette Oelberg, raucous or tearful or just plain funny as a ballerina in the waltz section of the first-act finale; Sheila Firestone, deliciously flat on her high notes and ingratiatingly sentimental; and Sam Huberman, hapless and lovable and droll — these turned in performances of distinction and warmth.

None of the rest of the cast succeeded in producing any living characters, and truth to tell, it would have been a matter of creating them in the face of opposition from the script to do so. Where On Earth? makes a just barely tolerable musical comedy book; the imagination boggles at what it must have been like as a play.

Perhaps in Detroit local references gave a little point to the goings-on. But the book had been only very superficially Torontonianized, and any point it may once have had was dulled beyond recognition. None of the characters or situations bore any real resemblance to those at this university.

All kinds of obvious revisions might have been tried, but were not: for example, changing "Students' Council" to "SAC," or "Orientation Dept." to — well, say "Remedial English Dept." or something else with a connotation on this campus.

Further improvement in the script might have been effected by pruning the terribly talky sentimental scenes, which were without exception far too long. No one minds a sentimental song or two, but dripping sentiment in cold, spoken prose is insufferable.

One could go on to point out that the plot construction was far inferior to that of either of the oher two campus shows so far this year, that it made no provision for the inforporation of the dances, that the climax was hopelessly bungled, etc., etc. The moral, of course, is Don't Import Discards from Other Universities.

Sandwiched into this excuse for a plot without even an attempt at relevance were three dance sequences, and two of these were first-rate. The rather obscure Space Invasion seemed dull, but both the Nightmare and the Space Ship Stomp were both imaginative and gay in all respects — dancing, choreography (far better than the drab-looking singing chorus groupings), costumes and music.

The Nightmare sequence would have looked even better against a more imaginative set, such as the "Hart House Snack Bar", or the "U of T Nightclub", both of them livelier than the "UC Rotunda."

Gerry Redings's music for the dances was much more distinguished than that for the songs. (The less said about the lyrics the better.) When he can let himself go on some dissonanances and cross-shythms, Reding does well in a somewhat Stravinskyish manner; but writing singable songs is a different problem, and melodic invention does not seem to be his strong point.

It may be significant that the two most singable songs in Where On Earth? were almost identical: try whistling "Just a Fella and his Girl" and "You've Got More than You Think You Have" and you'll see what we mean.

Finally a few words should be said regarding the first performance (the one we saw). To be brutally frank, it looked and sounded like a dress rehearsal. The orchestra seemed to have no idea what was coming next in the overture, and the performance was punctuated with embarrassed and embarrassing pauses. However, these things probably remedied themselves before the last show on Saturday.

MY LOVE IS IN TORONTO

(A Canadian Poem)

Between the yellow Humber and the filthy yellow Don Toronto squats, detested from Vancouver to St. John,
Ecclesiastic scholars
Hold that wicked Montrealers
Spend eternity in Hogtown
When their hope of joy is gone,
But hold, Recording Angel, ere you dip your pen to write:
My love is in Toronto, and she fills it with her light.
Toronto has a flavor. From the water-front it lifts
And across the sweating city, gaining garbage as it drifts
Till the effluence of sewers
And the affluence of brewers find their glorios fulfillment
And crescendo over Swift's,
But delay, Avenging Angel, ere you sentence it to death,
My love is in Toronto. It is sweetened with her breath.
Good, respectable Toronto, one of virtue's last resorts,
(With its well adjusted taverns, and well regulated courts)
Where the rubbadubb lurches
In the shadows of the churches
And the aging harlot searches
For the less attractive sorts,
But avast, Destroying Angel, ere its errors you erase
For my love is in Toronto, and she justifies the place.

Speaking Of Sport

THE MEN

No one can accuse Coach Frank Tindall of not sending a man on a man's errand last Saturday. The Gaels weren't boys, they were men. And, although they won't figure in the Senior Intercollegiate playoff next Saturday, Queen's University can be proud of the team that fought the Blues right down to the whistle in Kingston and that heap of rubble that they call Richardson Memorial Stadium.

Like everyone expected, the Gaels came up with another stellar performance against Varsity in the Queen's backyard. The statistics will show that the Gaels were no balls of fire on the offense but that is understandable. Going into the game, Queen's were without the services of such valuable men as Gary Schreider, Doug Bell and Al Poutanen their blocking half, due to injuries. After the game started they lost Pete Zarry, who is always an offensive threat, on the first play of the game. Later on Ron Stewart, who is their leading scorer, was injured and didn't return to the game. So for better than three quarters of the game they were without an offensive half line. The only offensive half that saw the end of the game was Jack Roberts who played a tremendous game both ways and had to take six stitches in his tongue after the game.

DEFENSE GOOD

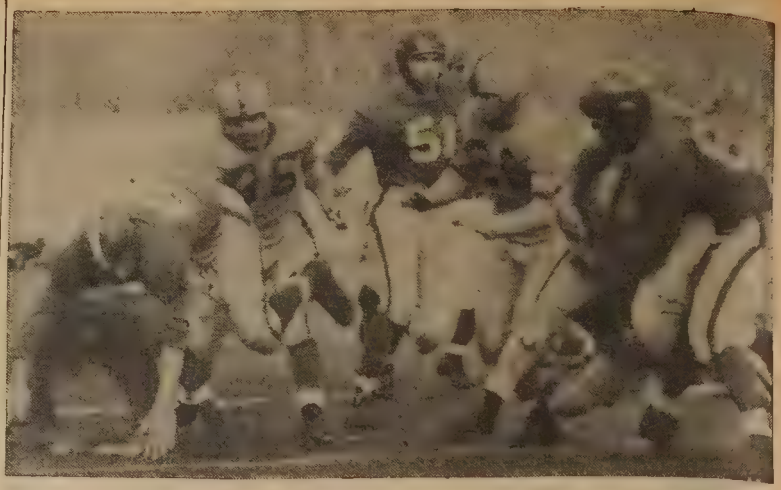
Defensively, the Gaels were every bit as good as the Blues behind their twenty-five. The score gives the Blues one converted touchdown by Bill McFarlane who played his best game of the year. The Blues should have had at least two others, one in each of the first two quarters. That they didn't score more than one TD can be attributed to poor strategy on the part of the Blues and a terrific Queen's pass defense headed by diminutive Al Kocman. Late in the second quarter, the Blues marched down the field on the ground with Olie Mandryk calling the signals and Phil Muntz, Bob Pinkney and stellar Bill McFarlane carrying for big gains. On the twenty with two yards to go for a first down Bob Masterson sent in Ed Skrzypek with instructions to pass rather than go for the first down on the ground. The pass was incomplete thanks to the Queen's pass defense and the Gaels took over the ball. A first down probably would have meant a TD.

After the game Coach Bob Masterson absolved Ed Skrzypek of all blame for calling the pass. Said the Blues' coach: "From where our bench was located it looked like we had about eight yards to go rather than two so I sent in Ed for a long pass which would have been the natural play if we had eight yards to go for the first down."

A REAL GENTLEMAN

A lot of the credit for the great showing of the Gaels in the last half of the schedule should go to their Coach Frank Tindall. Queen's, like the other small colleges in the Intercollegiate, is handicapped by a small enrollment. While they can field a team of Intercollegiate calibre such as they did last Saturday afternoon, they do experience a scarcity of Intercollegiate-calibre players.

On Saturday the Gaels lost more than a football game. They lost their first chance at the Yates in many a moon. A win by the Gaels would have meant a three-way tie for first place and a ten-point win for Queen's would have meant a playoff with the Mustangs for the Yates elsewhere.



In spite of this, their coach took the defeat like a real gentleman. No yarns about Queen's looking for a new coach next year nor stories about some colleges playing students that are receiving under-the-table scholarships. As Tindall put it, "we were without an offensive half line for most of the game but our defense was pretty good; the Blues played a great game and deserved to win." Queen's has a coach that is a credit to the University and to the league.

THAT DEFENSIVE RECORD

The Blues finally had their defensive record stopped.

Line Play

This melee illustrates why Varsity Blues were able to shade Queen's Golden Gaels 6-1 in their intercollegiate football game at Kingston Saturday. The Queen's ball-carrier has just run into an impenetrable barrier in this smash at the Blues' line. He is being grasped about the shoulders by Varsity's Bill McFarlane at the extreme right and another Varsity tackler has grabbed him by the legs. In short, he's not going far. Other Gaels in the picture have done their jobs well. John McCombe (26) has Bruce Johnson (51) screened out of the play while Jack Zwirewich (36) has knocked Varsity's Gene Chorostecki sprawling while another Blue is on his hands and knees to Chorostecki's rear. If you will look carefully to the right of Johnson's head, you will see one of the green-clad officials peeping at the play. If he can't see the ball any better than the writer of this caption, he's in difficulty. But the play has stopped anyway so it won't matter much.

to spike a Blue scoring surge. . . . Don Smith, Varsity end played excellent ball, and Ted Kennedy, freshman end for the Blues' also went well. . . . . Queen's fans made themselves look a bit bad when they cheered happily for an injury to Steve Oneschuk—they ate those cheers when Oneschuk came back to tie up his race with Stewart. . . . . Frank Tindall, Gael coach, was philosophical about the loss, feeling that in a way it was good that his boys lost because they wouldn't have had any players for the playdowns had they won. . . . Tindall had no complaints and only praise for both teams, who played a fine game. —Geard's single ended a Varsity record of 235 scoreless minutes of play.

Intermediates Win Title May Playoff In East

Varsity's senior football team may be the only one to represent the U of T in post-season playoffs this fall. The intermediate team won their league championship—and the Shaw Trophy—for the third year in a row Friday by outdistancing the University of Western Ontario Colts 31-17 at London.

There is a possibility that the Varsity Seconds might travel to Montreal to play either McGill Seconds or Loyola for the Eastern Canada intermediate championship. The Baby Blues have held the RMC Cup, emblematic of that title, for several years but haven't had a chance to defend it.

A foursome of tank-like runners Wally Bulchak, Ross Woods Al Wong, and Bob Smart, pulverized the Colts' defences. Woods marked up a pair of touchdowns and others were scored by Bulchak, Wong, and Jack Rogers. Bulchak added four converts for a total of nine points. Dick Risk completed the total by hoofing a pair of singles.

More than 1,000 Western fans looked on as the Blues opened the scoring and then ran wild in the second period.

Western touchdowns went to Glyn Lehshon, Al Gleeson and John Sweeney with Bob Labbett adding two singles.

Big Harry Wilson passed brilliantly all afternoon, completing eight of 16, and threw one TD pass.

Wrestlers Prep

The chances for Varsity taking the College wrestling crown this year constantly improve. The daily turnout at 5 p.m. increases much to the liking of Coach Kirk Wipper.

The scheme of training is basically the same as previous years. Movies are shown about once a week. The rest of the time is devoted to gruelling exercises, the practising of basic holds, and Wipper are Jack Amos and Bill Chykaliuk, both former Varsity champions and Harry Hom, a former Swedish Olympic star.

Last year's heavy weight champion, Harry Robinson, is expected to repeat his performance. Doug Hamilton is favoured to take the 191-pound class and Leon Smith of the '51 squad will probably hold the 177-pound crown. Last year's captain, Tommy Hatashita, 137-pound champion, is also back with an impressive number of last year's contenders.—Al Miller, '53 Intermediate Team, Bob Waugh from the rugby team, Bill Bush, Joe Caimen, Paul Phelan, and Fred Wood.

Coach Kirk assures us that, with support from the student body, good results may be expected from this year's team. Time still remains for students to come out for practise, as the teams have not been finally made up.

The schedule for the teams is as follows, with changes to be made in the future:

Dec. 5—Junior Intramural Finals.
Dec. 12 — St. Catharines.
Jan. 9 — Inter-squad dual meet.
Jan. 16 — Blues at OAC.
Jan. 23 — Western at Toronto—(2 teams).
Jan. 30 — Blues at Buffalo.
Feb. 5 — Senior Intramural (here).
Feb. 6 — Blues at McGill.
Feb. 18 — Blues at Rochester.
Feb. 26 and Feb. 27 — Canadian Senior Tournament at Queen's.

Ruggerites Score Early, Often To Trounce Avros In Rugger

In a fast, scrappy game last Saturday Varsity Rugger team outclassed Avro Scottish to mark up a 16-3 victory.

Varsity pressed hard from the opening whistle and came close to scoring several times before Pat Kelly managed to carry over the line. He lost the ball in the ensuing pile-up but Dave Gunsmuir recovered to score the try. Dave Fayle converted to make the score 5-0. It remained at this until the half.

The Varsity play in the second half was much improved, the scrum breaking well and the backfield really playing as a team. Bill Chadwick scored on a beautiful 50 yard run during which he wove his way through practically the whole opposing team. Rich Anderson then broke through to score and Stan Lepper ended Varsity's scoring spree by a fast follow-up of a kick to score between the posts. Fayle converted the latter try. In the dying minutes of the game Varsity was called for an off-side and the resulting Scottish kick split the uprights for the three points. Final score Varsity 16, Scottish 3.

V-Ball, Boxla Soccer Make Mural News

In what proved to be somewhat of a disastrous day for St. Mike's two intramural volleyball games were played on Friday faternoon. In the first affair S.P.S. 50s dropped St. Mike's C team two straight 15-2 and 15-6 scores following this U.C. 85 Grenville defeated St. Mike's E squad 15-9 and 15-13.

Lacrosse action saw Pre-Meds 1st. yr. roll over Trinity B team by a solid 9 to 1 score. Grose, Lvack, Zajac Skawinski, and Wilson all netted singles for the 3 ds team while Robertson and Soroko-lit scored twice. Pointing tallied Trinity's single point in the final quarter. S.P.S. 4ths defaulted their game to Pre-Meds 2nd yr.

On the soccer scene the Pharmacy boys were soundly trounced by a superior Knox team. Crawford booted one while Kekiwiay and Costerus both netted two, to lead Knox to victory.

masses and the guests and members started again on their rounds of hand shakings.

The following day in the Commons official business was begun: the adoption of the speech from the throne. With seeming lightness remarks were tossed from government to opposition and vice-versa as in a debate qua debate. Only occasionally one was reminded that this was 'for real'. It was fascinating. But I hear that the debate on the adoption of the speech from the throne lasts months some times, before everyone has had a chance to throw in a word about something or other; so I reluctantly left the scene of action (Ed.

Redmen Score Upset, Edge Mustangs

London, Nov. 14, (Special) — The McGill Redmen scored the Senior Intercollegiate upset of the year by downing the University of Western Ontario Mustangs, 16-13, before about 10,000 rabid London fans. McGill's win coupled with a Toronto's 6-1 win over the Queen's Gaels gives the Varsity Blues sole possession of first place in the college final standings. Toronto and Western will playoff for the Yates Cup, emblematic of the Senior Intercollegiate championship next Saturday at Toronto's Varsity Stadium.

Western's coach, John Metras to play without the services of Jacques Belec and halfback Ralph Simmons who was hurt in Toronto the week before.

There was no score at the end of the first quarter, but Western struck for a Td early in the second. Garnet Mason carried the ball to the McGill four yard line and Gino Fracas who scored two TD's and converted one during the afternoon, carried the ball over and converted himself. The score was then 6-0 for the Mustangs.

McGill came back strong with a TD before half time. The Redmen were two yards short of a first down when Harry English passed to Jack McMullen on the Western four on a third down. Len Shaw went around the right end for the TD and Fred Wilmot converted. Half time score was McGill 6 Western 6.

In the third quarter, Ken Wright was dropped by Jack Fowler and Dick Martin on an attempted kick for a safety touch to give Western a two point lead. Harry English put McGill into the lead with a spectacular 80 yard run around left end for the second McGill touchdown. Wilmot again converted. At the end of the third quarter McGill was in front 12-8 which the Mustangs in possession of the ball on the Redman one. On the first play of the fourth quarter Fracas went over for his second TD to give him the Intercollegiate scoring championship. The convert was blocked. Western was in front 13-12.

Later in the fourth quarter Fred Wilmot kicked a field goal and Ken Wright kicked a single to give McGill the 16-13 win. McGill finished the year in fourth place with two wins and four defeats.

Another Intercollegiate Title For Blues As Harriermen Win

The University of Toronto picked off still another intercollegiate championship Saturday at High Park when they won the senior harrier title. Varsity's five runners compiled a total of 20 points, eight better than Royal Military College of Kingston.

The defending champion, Queen's, sent only one runner, Van Plugh, who won the race in 27 minutes and 38 seconds. Varsity's Dave Preston showed the way for his team by finishing second. Herb Tilson was fourth, with Varsity runners, Gord Banks, Gord Rintoul and Bill Eckersley finishing well in the five-mile event.

In the intermediate meet, Western walked away with the title for the second year in a row.

Help! Help!

The observant reader will notice that instead of saying "Help!", we are saying. "Help! Help!" The reason for this change is, not because we need help twice as badly as before, but that we have a two-column hole instead of a one-column hole.

This interesting makeup problem is just one of the many things you will learn as a Varsity sports writer. You can join us by reporting to the sports desk any time.

Soccer Blues Down Western

The final whistle at Western Friday brought to a close the Blues' Soccer season for this year. It was a "happy ever after" ending, as the Seniors downed the Western squad 5-0, while the Jay Vees registered a 2-1 victory.

The big Blues did not really start to roll until the last quarter of the game; the first half score being only 1-0. Karl Tamberg, unable to play the entire game due to a knee injury, accounted for two clean-cut markers. Dave Wood, up from the intermediates, showed well as he netted the first and last of the Blues' goals. The other Toronto score came from the boot of right-winger Rod Green. Rod also assisted in the final goal when he slipped a beautiful pass across the goal-mouth. The stalwart performances of backfielders such as Lethbridge, Williams, and Johnson helped goalie Duru gain another in his long string of shutouts.

Despite a last period barrage on the Colts' net the intermediates were unable to increase their score.

Both Toronto goals were scored by right-winger Gerry Babcock. Other standouts were forward Jim Treliving and hard-booting backfielder Chazz Ablack.

Coach Bobby Auld's first season with the Blues has been a great success and he deserves much of the praise; as the team expressed it "he's a jolly good fellow" and he proved to be a jolly good coach too. The same may be said for assistant coach Bill Small, who worked hard with the intermediates. The coaches were assisted by able managers Uzumeri and Sing.

In capturing the Blackwood Trophy the Blues had four goals scored against them while netting 48 of their own. The senior team was composed of Duru, Exe, Hubicki, Lethbridge, Leach, Williams, Johnson, Munday, Green, Ashbourne, Tamberg, Attucha, Finch, and Liz. Members of the intermediate squad were McCann, Jubb, Storey, Murrey-Audain, Ablack, Babcock, Treliving, Vember, Dezal, Lehman, Wood, and McKinley.

Intercol. Team Picked, Three Vets Return

Only four of last year's swimmers will be on hand to compete for honours in the intercol circuit this year. The big squad picked about two weeks ago suffered heavily with graduations to narrow the returning gals down to the remaining few.

Beryl Lewis, chief point getter in the league has been disabled from active sport for the past few weeks but is reported to be in condition to compete in the big meet to be held here on the 27th. Beryl was in the winning medley squad last year and set a record in the interfaculty backstroke that season.

Glail Lowther, newcomer to the intercollegiate ranks and Mary Elinor Ridell, third Vic have been out at practises for the relay. Joan Archer and Jenny Crawford, first and second respectively in interfac diving, will represent the University in that field.

McMaster has invaded the Toronto ranks in the person of Nan Peal who swam for that squad last season.

The gals have been out at practise three days a week for about the past month under the direction of coach Freddy Baxter. Miss Baxter also coached the squad of Joan Davie and Mary Wingate who performed at the John Innis Community Center Saturday night.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Though it hasn't been talked about too much on this page, the women's basketball loop is in full swing and has been for the past two weeks.

Any night of the week, you may find groups of athletic gals draggin gym shoes and T-shirts along Bloor street in the direction of OCE. That's where the bouts are held from 5.30 until about nine o'clock each evening. Quite a schedule don't you think? This year the schedule has crammed in 22 squads which is a lot to contend with. As a result, meets have had to be played at night though facilities have a lot to do with this too.

The night meets are being refed by girls who have passed the required local or intramural rating in b-ball quite a few of them OCE students and PHE grads. There are no classes for refs outside of the PHE course on the Toronto campus. Those who are refing the games these evenings have passed at least the lowest rating, that of interfaculty. Now and then, throughout the year, these ratings (writen and practical tests) are given to those desiring to look after refing jobs in the interfaculty meets.

The highest rating in Canada is the National. This is presided at and judged by three basketball experts, one at least being an American. This rating will be tried in late January and those interested in attempting to reach the National standards or the other two are asked to contact Miss Nancy Simpson at the PHE offices. The next local rating will be held the first week of December.

We haven't had many chances to view the meets this season though it almost goes without saying that PHE second and third year will take the loop by storm. The reason for this is found in the fact that out of all those on last year's inter-col squad, half of them were from second and third year PHE. This will probably be the case this year as well. The gals are good so let's face it.

By the way, if the games are to be written up in the sports page, they will have to be turned in to The Varsity office before nine p.m. the evening they are being played. We would recommend a rep from each team to look after its publicity. Due to the small size of the women's sports staff, we cannot possibly have the games covered by reporters all the time.

In the fourth quarter, with five minutes to go in the game, Frank Geard hoisted a long one into the Toronto end zone for a single. Up to that point the Blues had played 235 minutes of football without the loyal opposition scoring a point. Bruce Johnson is one man that really helped the Varsity along to this record. Time and again, Big Bruce smashed Queen's line plays. At one time Johnson stopped two successive Queen's bucks by himself.

On to the playoff and LET'S BRING BACK THE YATES.

END NOTES—

A couple of weeks ago The Ryersonian of that feeble excuse for a journalism course ran a story accusing Toronto players of accepting athletic scholarships. In their Nov. 10th issue, they carried a story claiming credit for a scoop on their "scholarship" story and pointing out that Vic Obeck's outburst only substantiated their scoop. Since this paper, The Ryersonian, is published by a school of journalism we thought that they would know that scoop only is applicable to a story that is an original. Well, in the first place the story isn't a scoop since it has only been coming up for publication about once a year for the last four or five years. Secondly, it really isn't a story but a rumor since it has never been backed by proof. And that applies to Obeck's outburst since Vic has yet to come forward with facts to substantiate his wild claims. Of course any newspaper, including The Ryersonian, can spread rumors. It doesn't surprise us that The Ryersonian would claim a scoop on a rumor that is only four years old. It's typical.

The Perennial Debate

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

Let's Take Stock

We may need more characters at the University of Toronto; we may need more libraries, books, labs and Hart Houses for women; maybe fees and texts are so expensive that the ideal of democratic higher education has evaporated and exists only in the minds of those who can afford it. But one thing we have got is opinions. Lots of them.

Make a statement on a world, local or national issue to a group, then watch the division into two sides. Which particular issue you broach isn't important. "Do you like eggs sunny side up or over?" will result in the same definite separation as "Should we stay in NFCUS?", "Is McCarthy the greatest menace to democracy?", "Should the US trade policy to Canada be censured?", or "Should students marry before graduation?". We hear the issue and pick a side, form up in verbal battle array and argue staunchly till the beer runs out, the girlfriend phones or the call of that overdue essay gets too strong. Argue, discuss, prove, enumerate; use histrionics, examples and sheer vocal power. When the battle is over, leave with the soul-warming feeling that it has been a real good argument.

But don't change sides. We want no dialectic cowards here.

If your opponent makes a point, hit it if it is not too strong, but if it is, go under it or over, around, behind or just ignore it. If all else fails, announce pretentiously that it is not strictly on topic or look superior and insist he define each word till you, he and the audience are completely confused and don't quite know what the original point was.

There are problems facing the world today, and as we are a university these problems echo in the minds of all us. Since grade one, teachers of various competence have bent all their energies and skill into training our brains. We give them the benefit of the doubt and decide they have succeeded to varying degrees. We are supposed to think on these problems and arrive at some solution. We don't just bleed well, we have a right to share in the decisions vital to our futur.

But where did all of us drink at the fountain of knowledge and why are there so many fountains? Why are we all like slide rules with one end set, so that we can answer any problem by moving a mental pointer over the problem and reading the solution immediately? Where did this first setting came from?

This is a plea for intellectual tolerance. It is a plea addressed to those who read the Nation and the New Republic to take a crack at Fortune and the Atlantic Monthly, and vice versa. It is a plea addressed to those who were raised in Conservative homes to attend a few metings of the Liberal Club, and vice versa. It is a plea to make an attempt to see the other viewpoint; to acknowledge facts and ideas brought forward in a discussion. To decide that the only possible way of losing an argument is by not having the verbal poyer to express your ideas—all else is knowledge or broadening which is victory. It is an invitation to all those who abjure McCarthy to judge him in the light of the spies and espionage agents who have been discovered and an invitation to those who believe he is a saint to think on the innocent men who have been slandered and the hysteria that has been produced.

This is not a championing of the cause of ignorance of world and local problems. The end of tolerance is not indecision. What is needed is a greater realization that heresy is not treason and a greater emphasis placed on the ability of democratic peoples to have a plan, change it, swing from one extreme to the other while still preserving the same ideals. Let us remember, the slide rule may have an incorrect setting. We may be wrong.

Our Readers Write:

Armament — Not The Answer

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I am writing in answer to an article written by Mr. O. Pidhaini in The Varsity, Thurs., Nov. 12, labelled "Future Strife Inevitable." Mr. Pidhaini states that Moscow wants war, and that we, the West, are going to have to win that war.

In the first place, Moscow does not want war. The expansion of communism is much more effective by the method of infiltration. All the communists need to work on is a people dissatisfied with the government. Such a condition does not exist in this country. But if we disarm, the communists will, you say, conquer the country by means of their armies. To do this successfully, the communists would have to maintain a terrific police force, because the Canadian people just would not accept such a dictatorship. And even if they had such a police force, they could only control us physically; they could not control the spirit. Such a control could not last in a country as large as Canada, where democracy has ruled for so many years. I hope I have proven the absurdity of Mr. Pidhaini's statement that we would 'be betrayed again, to be finally enslaved."

But unfortunately, there are countries such as India, where there is discontent, and consequently the threat of communism. But even here, there are so many people in India that Russia could not conquer them if the vast majority were unwilling. If India turns communist, it will be because the people can see no other way out. Fortunately, with organizations such as SHARE, we can show the Indian people that the West is their friend, and that they can do without the Communists. It is in programs like this that we should spend our wealth, rather than in armaments. For if there is a third world war, we will not win. There will be no winner. If we are lucky, there will be a few survivors to carry on with the remaining fragments of the civilization which has now the potential for a great future, if we only do not make an unwise choice in this time of crisis.

Me And Sycology

Dear Al:

Things has been going along not too bad Al since the last time I wrote you and I am starting to get used to this here university life which is O.K. except that I don't care too much for the city it is so big you know and there are too may people and all but I get along not too bad. I dont mind where I am Al , a person can get along O.K. I figure if they just know how to get along in life and that is the kind of person I am. You know me Al I can always get along.

There's one thing about college that makes it sort of expensive and that is all the books you are supposed to buy. Just for example I have this one course Sycology (I dont know what its got to do with Animal Husbandry but they tell us we have to take it so I figure the best way to get along is to do what you are supposed to). The jasper who teaches it is kind of a skinny old guy called Smithers. J. C. Smithers and he has a string of degrees as long as a buggy whip. Anyhow he teaches this here Sycology and the first day he come into the classroom wearing sort of a black dress and his white hair was all mussed up and he was looking over his glasses and all sort of bent over and I says I guessed he just got up and one of the other fellows whispers no he looks like that all the time and I says well if that is what happens to you when you learn Sycology I dont care to learn it and he says you'll be lucky to learn anything and the way you talk you ought to take remedial English. I came back to him real smart and says all the remedy I need is made by Dr. Chase and I can get it at the drug store. He was going old Smithers begun to talk.
to say something else but then
Smithers gave us a list of the books we would need to buy and I pass it on to you Al just cost my old man more than the to give you an idea that it will $50 a month he figured to send me to college. College Sycology by Smithers, Sycology for College Students by Smithers, Freshman Sycology by Smithers, An Introduction to Sycology by Smithers, This Is Sycology by Smith-Smithers, Sycology for College Freshmen, by Smithers, The Elements of Sycology by Smithers, The Story of Sycology by Smithers, This I s Sycology by Smithers. An Outline of Sycology by Smithers, Modern Sycology by Smithers, The Sycology of Children by Smithers, The Sycology of the Adolescent by Smithers. Adult Sycology by Smithers, Sneile Sycology by Smithers, Sycology After Death by Smithers, Sycology of Life by Smithers, The Meaning of Sycology by Smithers, What Sycology Means by Smithers, This Is My Life by Smithers.

And whats more the old goat told us there was no use trying to buy used copies from last years pupils because he has revised all these books over the summer holidays

So you see Al it is going to cost a lot of money but I'll get along somehow. You know me Al old pal.

Your old pal,
Ed.

The Jokes On Us

To my friend from the South, Sir:

If someone where in the deepest depths of hell, there exists a spirit (a very Small spirit) called Hitler—surely then he must be laughing. He laughts at a joke that is on us. We whose families gave in blood and tears, we who suffered from the scourge of your sickness of hate. We who died in the cause of peace, happiness, justice, and even more—tolerance. He laughs at us.

Yes, he laughs for all that Herr Adolf represented still lives, still burns deep in the bigotted depraved souls of those who still revere and worship his memory. To those who do like you, friend from the South, address this letter.

Sirs, I like to think myself as a normal, healthy, patriotic Canadian boy. One who has already volunteered his service when the occasion should arise that he must fight to protect his liberties to uphold his rights, and to give his life to protect his beloved Canada.

My friends, my family, I am pleased to report, is also normal, healthy, and patriotic. We buy Canada Savings Bonds, we straight Liberal, observe the laws. But Sir, we do neither live (nor desire to, thank you), in a ghetto, nor are we, or ever have been, Kikes.

I pray you Sir to let me reply to you, for as a citizen of this realm, I still—(thank God that I do)—have an opportunity in the clean fresh air of freedom of will and thought to do so.

Friend, you are blind, you are bigotted, you are a demi-gog. What is worse you are disgrace to your nation which pertains to be a beacon of liberty. You are a surviver of the plague of Hitlerism a Dachau, a Buchenwald, an Ausenwitz incarnate, come back from the chasms of butchery to haunt the free people. Take heed my friend, your cause died in a fire in 1945.

Your friend from Canada,
Zangwill.

How Phony ?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I have read one too many letters in The Varsity denouncing "phony idealism" and written by persons under the influence of that recently evolved Americanism, "Freedom to think as we want you to think." These are the people who denounce revolutionary governments because they are told that revolutionary governments should be denounced, not realizing that a short time ago, their own government rose from a revolution. These are the people who ridicule idealism because it is not now the fashion to be idealistic.

If these people were builders, they would say, "No doubt, if allowed to exist, fire will destroy some of our buildings. Therefore, let us forbid the use of fire." The Idealist, on the other hand, would say, "Fire is inevitable; therefore we will try to construct buildings which fire cannot harm." Thus the Idealist when fire did come, would only be singed while the "conformist" would make an ash of himself. Here, sir, you will find an Idealist.

'COMMENT' RAPS BOARD

Skule Sells Girls, Seat At Auction

Three girls, the UC chair, and several panties were sold at the Skule Auction at noon yesterday. The proceeds from the auction were for the Red Feather.

Auctioneer Yodar Critch from "Jarvis and Queen," as he said, first auctioned the Vic Bob pole, and then dropped the POT pot before he could sell it. The Skule cannon came out to finish off the pot.

The Lady Godiva Memorial band played their repertoire of "Lady Godiva" and "Goodnight Irene." Critch and several spectators were showered with water from a window in the Skule House, and Marylin Boots Hines tried to run away.

The Vic cheerleaders arrived to sell tickets to the Vic Informal, but they never got a chance. They were greeted by the engineers with cries of "Take it off," (they did, their coats). Two of them, Shirley Bennett II Vic, and Barb Douglas I Vic, were auctioned off with two tickets to Skule Nite each.

Shirley, Barb and Boots realized $18 between them. Altogether $75 were collected.

Somewhat bedraggled and thoroughly out of place at the Skule auction was the speaker's chair from the UC Parliament, seen above as the display case for the goods offered at the Skule auction. It was finally bought by a group of Skulemen as firewood-minus the decorations, which sold separately. But to The Varsity it seemed a shame that with the office short on furniture it should be burned (see below).

University Governors Called Big Financiers

"Make a million and join the Board of Governors seems to be motto of the University of Toronto." This statement appeared in a mimeographed paper called "Comment" that appears every two weeks on the campus.

The paper charged that the University was controlled by Canadian capitalists. "There isn't one author, one painter, or one man of scholarship in the entire group of 21 men," said the article.

Of the 21 members, at least 13, including the Chairman, may be classed as large-scale capitalists and financiers. These 13 hold directorships, 3 vice-presidencies, and 2 presidencies in Canadian insurance and trust companies, controlling about 16 percent of our total assets. There are 8 bank directors, from the 4 largest banks in Canada.

"Comment" is published by a five-man editorial board, and is designed to express student opinion on the campus.

The article charged that "power in industry is also a means of being appointed to the Board of Governors." The 13 Big Men hold no less than 6 Presidencies and 31 directorships in industry. These include General Electric, Abitibi, A V Roe, Massey Harris, Canadair, Bell Telephone, Noranda Mines, and International Nickel."

"It is this board which demonstrates decisively how one small group of powerful men representing reactionary finance and capital can wrest control of our University from the people of Ontario, who were given final authority through an Act of the Provincial Parliament," added the article.

"What have these men contributed to our nation? They have made fortunes, but does this qualify them for positions of authority in our University?" asked the publication. "Contribution to society should be the only criterion for those of authority in our university. Wealth alone is certainly no indication of this contribution, for labor certainly gives as much to society as the coupon-clippers of Bayview Heights," it said.

UBC Necks

Vancouver, 6 Nov. —(CUP)— Shmooching and "indoor intimacy" have been livening up the atmosphere in the students lounge at UBC. It has gone so far that the Proctor of the hall has suggested that one or two "dependable men" be placed on duty "whenever students are present."

According to the University of British Columbia campus newspaper, "there are limits to promiscuity, one of them being the impressions of Brock lounge by visiting dignitaries . . ."

Masthead

The regular meeting of The Varsity masthead will be held at 5:00 p.m. today in the Editorial Office. All members are requested to attend.

Staff Special

Furniture Not Faggots

The Varsity has repossessed the Speaker's Chair from the UC Lit. "The person in charge of the paper each night will sit in it from now on," said Associate Editor of The Varsity, Orie Loucks. He declined to disclose details of the claim.

The chair, originally stolen by a group of engineers after a UC debate, was in danger of being burnt yesterday after the Engineers' auction, where it was sold.

Staff members of The Varsity, who were at the auction bid for the chair, but were overbid by engineers, who paid for it with money collected on the spot.

The four Varsity staffers, three of whom were engineers, were mistaken for UC students when they raised the prevailing bid from fifty cents to two dollars.

After the chair was declared 'gone' by the auctioneer, it disappeared behind the front door of the Skule building within five seconds.

At least fifty engineers pursued the chair. They were held back at the door, while it was taken to the Engineering stores and locked up. Shouts of "Let's burn the darned thing" were heard.

The Engineering stores were locked and an ultimatium given to UC to pick up the chair within fifteen minutes, otherwise the executive would assume no responsibility for it.

UC did not turn up.

Seminar And Sports At Anglican Weekend

Members of the Canterbury Club of Toronto spent last week-end at Caledon Hills Farm. The Program included study and discussion, hiking, baseball, cave discovering, ditch digging, square dancing, listening to records, and a Communion Service.

The main discussion was embodied in two seminar study groups, one Saturday morning and one Saturday afternoon. The theme of this study was a relation of human motives and Christian ideals. The four classic wish goals of man—Security, Adventure, Response, and Recognition—were presented and explained. An indication was given of how these goals should not be repressed but be understood and controlled and centered around a "higher purpose".

A "thirst after righteousness" in Biblical terms or "justice" in Platonic terms or more vaguely "good" was presented as the "higher purpose" of Christianity. The discussion had many ramifications including remarks on Marxism.

European Union Speech By Professor Reynolds

"Why does Britain hesitate to join the European Defence Community?" will be the topic of Professor P. A. Reynolds when he speaks to the International Relations Club tonight. The meeting will be held at 8:00 p.m. at Falconer Hall.

In his talk Prof. Reynolds will also cover the question of a European Union. He will discuss whether British participation in such a union would lead to the dissolution of the Commonwealth.

Prof. Reynolds is Visiting Professor of International Relations at the Department of Political Economy for the first term of this academic year. A graduate of Oxford, he taught International History at the London School of Economics and Political Science.

His present position is Wilson Professor of International Politics at the University of Wales, Aberystwyth. He has held this post since 1950.

The Varsity has recently acquired, at unbelievable cost, a managing editor's chair in keeping with its dignity, and with the parliamentary traditions it strives so consistently to uphold. Tom Virany, in charge of last night's issue and Marg Kell, the night editor, relax in this archaic paragon of comfort.

Does Inco produce anything but Nickel?

"Oh yes, the Sudbury nickel ore contains as much copper as it does nickel! So Inco is not only the world's largest producer of nickel, but also Canada's largest producer of copper."

"The research people also found that the ore contained other rare metals. Step by step the scientists worked out ways of getting these metals out of the ore. So today Inco recovers quite a lot of gold, silver, platinum, palladium and other metals from the ore. In fact, Canada has become the world's largest producer of the platinum metals. The palladium obtained from the nickel ore is today very popular for fine jewelry."

"The Romance of Nickel" a 72 page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

Once again the University of Toronto has played host to visitors from Finland. This year the visitors were the male chorus from the University of Helsinfors, who visited this city on invitation from the University of Toronto, and last night presented a concert in Massey Hall in aid of the SHARE project. Above they are seen being escorted into Hart House by Warden McCuiley. The Finnish group later presented a statue of their greatest athlete to the Hart House Art Gallery, in memory of the late Warden Nicholas Ignatieff, who contributed greatly to the success of a former Finnish fund-raising musical tour.

Officials Welcome Chorus Of Finns

The University of Helsinki Male Chorus was officially welcomed to the University yesterday by the President, Dr. Sidney Smith, at Convocation Hall. The President mentioned the last time that Finland was represented by a chorus, was in 1950, when the Institute of Technology from Helsinki came to Canada.

These visits were first promoted by the late Warden Ignatieff, who spent a summer in Finland and thus became very interested in Finnish culture. "In his memory we of the University of Toronto are bound by bonds of affection to anyone coming from the University of Helsinki," said the President.

The gratitude of the choir for its warm reception in Toronto was expressed by Professor Saali. He said, "The chorus came to Canada to bring to you greetings of all the students of Helsinki University and the Universities in Finland and to bring a sample of Finland's musical culture. In this generation of students, freedom means something more than an empty word—Something very real—Only a few countries have freedom without a very high price."

In commemoration of the great work done by the late Warden Ignateiff in Finland, a statue of the greatest sportsman Finland ever had "Nurmi" will be placed in Hart House, a gift of the University of Helsinki to the University of Toronto.

Lords-Lady? Moot Quaere For Protocol

How does one address a Judge of the Supreme Court who is a woman? Miss Evelyn Knight who will sit as a Supreme Court Judge in the forthcoming Moot Trials at the School of Law has raised a nice question of protocol.

Does one address her as "My Lord" like other Supreme Court Judges? Or must she be called "My Lady"? Some have suggested it should be "My Ladyship". When one addresses the court does one say "My Lords", or "My Lords and My Lady", or is "My Ladyship and My Lords" correct? Throughout the whole history of British Common Law there is no precedent to help decide the question.

Students of the Second year at the School of Law who will act as Senior Counsels at the coming Moot Trials are sending a delegation to Miss Knight to ask for permission to call her "My Lord".

Philosophy

Professor of Philosophy in University College, Dr. E. L. Fackenheim will be the guest speaker at the second meeting of the University of Toronto Philosophical Society in the Croft Chapter House, on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m.

He will speak on Schelling's Philosophy of the Literary Arts.

Campus Coop

Well Cooped Up

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

Do you suffer from indigestion? Do you long for the happy hours you spent doing dishes for your mother? Do you seek the company of the fairer sex?

The remedy is life in the Campus Coop. This residence is providing for its members a home away from home, where they can enjoy home cooked meals, do dishes or scrub floors and enjoy the company of the tender gender, plus a host of other advantages.

The Coop has been a booming organization since 1937 when it was founded by a group of Emmanuel College Divinity Students to help them continue their education during the hard times of the depression. Since then it has grown to an organization of close to 100 members.

The Coop attempts to provide its members with cheap accommodation, good food, comfortable surroundings, and the companionship that always goes along with group living. However it differs in that it is entirely student owned and operated. This means that students have to devote a certain amount of time each week to insure the smooth operation of their residences.

It is not uncommon to see a skuleman doing dishes or scrubbing floors, or an industrious young Phys-Ot student sewing bed sheets. On the other hand there are the executive positions such as General Manager, President, Board of Directors, auditing committee, food purchaser, maintenance men, plus many other positions that provide invaluable experience to the members holding them.

At present the Coop owns three houses and rents one. Members all eat together in one house, one house is for the female members, and the other three provide accommodation for men. As a coop the members also receive each year a dividend on the business they do each year. This year all second year members will receive almost a whole month's room and board free.

The membership is chosen to provide a cosmopolitan group. Students from many different faculties, nations, and Canadian provinces are represented. This year the membership is about 35 percent international. There are students from the countries of Lebanon, Jamaica, Denmark, USA, Nigeria, Siam, Puerto Rico, Germany, Yugo-Slavia, Italy, Poland, Trinidad, and some others.

Coop members feel that their way of living provides them with a training in many aspects of life. As well as having to take a great deal of responsibility, they learn the art of compromise, leadership, and most important of all, cooperative living.

Trinity Stops SMC With Theologs Aid

A St. Mike's pep rally ended in a three-w-ay squabble last night it included St. Mike's, Trinity and Wycliffe.

After burning an effigy of Trinity, St. Mike's set out on a snake dance which, after visiting Wycliffe, ended up at Trinity. The boys from St. Mike's relieved Trinity of a man. In retaliation the gowned boys promptly abducted two of the fair young cheerleaders. One of them, Mary Ann Hudkey, an American import from Rochester N.Y. was quoted, as she disappeared behind the stone walls, as crying "Help". St. Mike's rallied to her cry and began a frontal attack, being repelled by copious supplies of water and several fire hoses. Wycliffe, seeing her neighbors in trouble, rallied to the support, healing the rift in the Anglican brotherhood temporarily at least.

They were mistakenly drenched by their brothers. After sufficient damage was done, which included several broken windows and many soaked suits, a truce was called.

A parley was held, and it was agreed to trade the Trinity man for the St. Mike's cheerleaders, and the crowd dispersed. There were several skirmishes, which included a Wycliffe—Trinity coalition taking some booty from St. Mike's including a 1909 Graduate picture.

McGill — Montreal Discuss Schools

McGill University Students will meet the Carabins this Saturday at the University of Montreal to discuss the merits and disadvantages of the French and English systems of education.

This is the first realisation in a project which Students of Montreal have made to promote better understanding between students of the two Canadian cultures.

"There are already some activities where English and French-speaking students meet each other such as the Varsity-Carabin weekend, wrote Francois Vachon in Le Quartier Latin, "but why is there no McGill-Montreal weekend, since these two Universities are so near?"

Nowlan To Address P.C.'s

President of the Dominion Progressive Conservative Association, George C. Nowlan, will be guest speaker at the Conservative Club rally tonight in the Music Room of Vic Union, at 8:00 p.m. His topic is "The Students' role in Politics". Mr. Nowlan has long been interested in student affairs and was speaker at the Students' Federation earlier this year.

The Club's election manifesto will be discussed and formally presented. Joe Slogan president of the Club said, "This promises to be the biggest political rally ever held on the campus and should give the students a good chance to judge our policies."

Seek Sites For Dance After Game

The Blue and White Society has not yet arranged a place for a dance this Saturday. "We want to hold a dance," said Paul Lorch, chairman of the Society, "but we can't find any accommodation."

The Blue and White has tried Trinity, Vic, OCE, UTS, War Amputation Society, Home Economics building, the Royal York and Hart House. None of these is available for Saturday.

"We are attempting to enlist the support of various colleges and faculties," said John McKellar of the Society. "We hope that several faculties will let us use their halls or auditoriums for a roam-around dance. St. Michael's has already donated Brennan Hall. If we are unable to hold a dance, it will be because we have had no co-operation from the other colleges," he said.

The Blue and White are holding a barn dance at the Drill Hall on Friday night, and the usual tea dance after the game on Saturday.

Recovering ?

Football weekends can be pretty tough. Apparently it isn't even enough to be as strong as a horse; witness the condition of Augustus, the School of Law horse, after his piecemeal return from the Western game. His attendants are doing their best to assure his reappearance at the playoff on Saturday.

Rumor has it, however, that the crisis has yet to come. Should he despite all his complications, manage to attend the playoffs, all students are reminded that while he normally is the first to approve of a little horseplay, Augustus is currently in a delicate condition and his weaknesses must be remembered.

art, music and drama

Garrard At Vic

In the intimate surroundings of the Vic Union music room Don Garrard sang a programme of suitably light selections.

Four folk-songs, mostly about love, to music by Brahms, opened the programme. The most entertaining of these was The Disappointed Serenader. His dramatic presentation of the virtuous maiden and the amorous young man plus a well-enunciated German made it intelligible even to the listener with a very limited knowledge of German. Without showing any nervousness he initiated with the same standard of technical competence which he maintained throughout. He has good pitch, relaxed production and clear words, except for a slight tendency to vocalise consonants.

There followed Rossini's La Calunia from the Barber of Seville. With only the piano as accompaniment it did not achieve the majestic build-up possible with orchestra, but gained in the story-telling from the visibility of facial expressions. Love's a Savoury Dish, by Geni Sedero the first piece on the last part of the short programme, was not as appetizing as the title promised. It seemed a little too high for him.

The limitations of Mr. Garrard's voice were most apparent in the 2nd movement of "Serenade" by Arthur Bliss. His loud tones are quite pleasing but his soft notes have no sweetness. One hears only the mechanics of tone: the vibration of the vocal chords. This also occurs on the lower notes which suggest that his range is somewhat limited.

It was a relief to hear English sung in the final selections. Because I were Shy was completely charming, as was Mary and two encores from Seven Silly Soupcons by Sterndale Bennett. I cannot resist quoting the words of Mary:

Mary had a little lamb
The butcher killed it dead
Now Mary takes the lamb to school
Between two bits of bread.

The accompaniment to these which was played well by John Coveart, had satiric humour. For example in the piano part of Sweet Mary Rose, there was a suggestion of the song "Sweetes' Little Feller, Mighty Lak a Rose".

It was probably due to the football weekend that there was such a small audience.

Finn Chorus

To a Massey Hall packed with people, many of Finnish origin, the Helsinki University Chorus sang last night. The program consisted mainly of Finnish folksongs or works by Finnish composers. I must admit that only three of the works were familiar to me: those of Palestrina, Handel and Jean Sibelius.

The Hallelujah Chorus from The Messiah of Handel was impressively strong with the sixty male voices, but I still missed the contrast provided by female voices especially as the top notes were too high to be comfortable for the tenors. Probably because it was also near the beginning the Sanctus from Palestrina's Mass in F was not satisfactory either. There was sliding from note to note and the tone was nearer to wailing than either religious devotion or exultation.

Once they were launched into the Finnish songs they seemed to have more confidence. The chorus generally has tone which is forceful yet not harsh and was only rarely guilty of losing pitch. The blend is excellent. The bass section was outstanding for depth and richness of tonality. To this sound basis it was evident that much work had been added. The crescendos and sforzandos had all been carefully planned and were all meticulously executed.

The Marble Tomb by Elino Linnala indicated the eerie atmosphere of a moonlit night in the chorus while Veikko Tyrvainen sang above them. Of the several solos, his was the most musical and his was the most pleasing. The romantic Song of the Sea of Suiho Ranta was followed by the Conjuration of Aksel Tornudd. This piece most of all exhibited the virtuosity of the chorus, in a wide range of alternate strength and softness.

The presentation of flowers ar intermission and the national character of the audience left one in doubt for a minute whether this was a patriotic or a musical event. Bouquets were received from five people, some in national costume. The final presentation was from the Estonia Men's Choir who on the basis of a racial relationship and a "common enemy" considered it their duty not only to offer flowers, but also to sing something themselves for their friends. They seemed to be quite good in their short but questionable appearance.

After intermission there were several songs in the same vein of which the most interesting were the Dance of the Northern Lights by Selim Palmgren which really did dance and the subdued moving Song of My Heart by Jean Sibelius.

They closed, nominally with the Finlandian Hymn by the same composer. The audience could hardly resist singing and stamping their feet.

25,000 American boys helped to force home to the people that communism really is dangerous.

Senator McCarthy has done a service to the American people by making them aware of the jeopardy to internal security caused by communist infiltration in government and other influential areas, by helping to bring to their attention and conscience the true picture of their enslaved brothers overseas, and by personally causing some communists to be removed from office and prosecuted for criminal acts . . . his greatest adversaries are the commies themselves.

I do not mind if he investigates me.

The Senator's own question to his opponents is, "What are you doing against the menace of communism?"

Laying Intramural Tarp

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

A wise old Egyptian mummy once said, "There is nothing sure in life but death." Nowhere is this more evident than in the Intramural Football League.

At the half-way point in the Intramural schedule this year we had everything all figured out and were ready to hand the Mulock Cup to those clean-cut laddies with the slide rules. The rest of the schedule was, to us, a formality that had to be carried through. We're prepared to eat crow on that.

In trying to figure out some predictions for the title we developed a sad case of prophet's palpitations (better known as the D.T's) and finally had to request audience with the grand old man of the bookie profession—One-Eyed Benny. Benjamin was highly honoured and jumped at the chance to work in the Intramural field. "What with 'the rotten mess in College Football' these days," quoth Benny, "I am glad of the opportunity to work in the country's only truly amateur league, where the players are doing so for the love of the game and where there are no such things as boatraces to upset my predictions."

Having thus quoth his quote, Benny settled with us to the task of sizing up the teams in the Intramural League. Recounted hereafter are his observations.

"Skule are a hard bunch. They tackle hard, they hit hard, they block hard, they run hard, and they play hard. They are hard boys. But do not mistake me, laddie, they are not the only hard bunch in the playoffs. There are other hard teams. Yes, there are St. Mike's, and they are tough. These lads are money players. That is not to say they are pros. No, they are good pure amateurs, but they play like pros when the chips are down. That is the kind of club I like to be on."

"Then there are these boys from Forestry who are ready to give their last annular ring for victory. These boys will be hard to beat. That Woodie line is worth its weight in mahogany. Any team that is dead with half the season gone and then comes back to figure in the playoffs is a team to contend with. Personally I would ask for them to have a spit test and I would check them for hatchets, buzz-saws or any other tools of their trade that they may have hidden in their uniforms. After you've been in this business as long as I have you learn never to trust anybody. Those Forestry boys got no knot-holes in their heads and they are a club to watch."

"Vic are a sneaky bunch. I wouldn't be surprised if they lost to Meds just to lull the opposition into a false confidence. The Engineers aren't going to win this Mulock Mug on their press clippings. Not against Vic anyway, because confidentially I hear that those Vic jokers can't read. Also, as defending champs, Vic has a sentimental attachment to the title and would be very unhappy if it should desert them for some new flame."

"But as you kids want to know who's going to take the works so I'll give you a hint. It could be Skule, St. Mike's, Forestry or Vic. They're all good, so take your pick. So long, fish."

—And thus quothing, Bennie bustled off, munching happily on my broken sliderule.

Mural Soccer

The Intramural Soccer season is rapidly drawing to a close and a complicated system of playoffs is knocking on the door. The three groups of the first division are pretty well settled. The Trinity A club, by virtue of a 0-0- draw with Senior Skule yesterday advanced into the division playoffs along with UC from group I. Senior Meds look good from the second group. Four teams will stay in the fight for the Arts Trophy from the second division, Knox, Forestry, Law and Emmanuel seem to be the almost chosen representatives. However it is almost certain that a four-way tie will result in the second division. This will necessitate a series of playoffs beginning on the 23rd of November. The winner of group I of the first division will meet the winner of group III, while the group II winner will play the second team from group I. The first division final will be held on Friday the 17th.

The A squad from Trinity seems to be a definite threat, yesterday's game being their third scoreless tie in as many games, and their fifth shutout. In the past the Buttery Boys have always been contenders, and this year is no exception.

Vic Slumps, Loses 6-0 Meds Play Spoilers Part Score On Long Pass

By JOHN WILSON

Playing possibly their worst game of football since the season's start, Victoria managed to lose a 6-0 contest to Meds on the back campus yesterday afternoon. While the Doctors were unable to accomplish much through the Vic line, they took advantage of several Vic errors, one of which resulted in their game-winning touchdown. The Scarlet and Gold's offence lacked any finesse whatsoever, and at times they appeared to be in a state of complete disorganization.

The first quarter was of little interest, being nothing but an exchange of kicks. In the dying minutes of the quarter, Meds recovered a Vic fumble deep in Vic territory. Two line plays brought them no results and Little let go with a high short kick. The Vic half fumbled as he was tackled running the kick back, and Meds recovered on the Scarlet and Gold's thirty-six. Now in the opening minutes of the second quarter, Morgan faded and threw a pass to Hutchison in the flat. One Vic defender got a hand on him, but Hutch eluded the would-be tackler and romped over the line standing up for the major. Fine converted to make the score 6-0 for Meds. Late in the half Vic started to move, racking up two successive first downs on some fine running by Bob Goudie. Scrimmaging from the Meds' thirty, Vic were thrown for two losses, then, on the last play of the half threw a pass to Cavers who was stopped dead. The third quarter featured several determined Victoria drives, all of which fizzled out short of pay-dirt. A Med's forward from their forty was intercepted by Red Dunlop who carried to the Meds' ten. Victoria's line let the defenders through, causing a fumble which Meds recovered on their fifteen. Meds quick-kicked on second down, catching the Vic backs off their toes and the ball ended up at the Vic forty. Dunlop fell on a bad third down center and Meds took over on the Vic thirty. Their kick was blocked and a mass of players chased it back to the Meds thirty where they repeated the down. From here on through the fourth quarter an even exchange of kicks told the story. Little squelched a Vic comeback late in the fourth quarter with a beautiful spiral kick from his own thirty-five which bounded behind the Vic goal-line. Vic got out to the one and in three plays the game was over.

The Meds machine certainly deserved to win this, their first victory of the season. It is too bad that they couldn't have displayed the defensive play and over-all spirit of yesterday earlier in the fall. As said before, the Vic squad lacked any colour at all, and should this sudden lapse in power continue, they will stand very little chance with even the second division teams.

Should UC beat Skule to-day, the Meds' victory will create a tie for second place between UC and Vic. In this event, there will be a play-off on Thursday at 3:30. Otherwise, Skule and Vic will enter the playoffs next week in first and second position respectively.

Game Scores In Intramural

In intramural sports yesterday we had a rare 0-0 tie between the Senior Skule and Trinity A soccer teams, as both squads put up a sturdy defense.

In the box lacrosse league, another low-scoring contest saw Martin's goal decide a 1-0 victory for First Year Meds over SPS III.

UC split a pair of volleyball games with UC III bowing to Skule IV 15-10, 15,11; while the UC 5 Wilcox club came back to edge Vic III 8-15, 15-10, 15-11 in a thriller. The only other volleyball game saw Pre Med IIB beating a hapless Vic IV 15-2, 15-6.

Woodsmen Win On Late Splurge

By LES PENDLETON

Forrestry continued its comeback drive today with a decisive 24-6 victory over a game Dents' team. Despite the lopsided score, the game was almost even with only five minutes left ot play; then a combination of luck and the Woodsmen's own aggressiveness produced three more touch-downs for the eventual winners.

Up to the final moments it looked like the under-dog Dents had come up with the formula for stopping the rugged Forresters, who led them up to that point by but a single point, 7-6. Then with the Green offense stalled at midfield, Lowman was forced to punt on third down. His kick bounded into the end zone, where the Dentists who had been taking chances all day and getting away with it, elected to try to run it out. The result was a fumble which tackle Bingo Crosbie pounced on for the deciding Major. Armstrong added the convert and from there on in it was Nelly-bar-the-door.

Dents received the subsequent kickoff and on their first play from scrimmage, the passer was smeared and Crosbie, scooping up the other fumble bolted 25-yards for his second major on as many plays. Armstrong missed the extra point.

Dents once more received and once more on their first play Forestry took over as Tom White intercepted a pass and ran it back to the 8-yard-line. White scored two plays later and Armstrong passed to Waddell for the extra point to complete the scoring. Forestry was kicking off for the third consecutive time as the game ended.

In the third quarter, the Foresters got their first touchdown when Ray Harrott picked off a McCaulley pass and Eddie Marcus carried the mail for thirty-five yards on an end sweep to make the score 6-0. Armstrong's kick was good for the extra point.

McCaulley hit Jim O'Brien with a 45-yard pass to set up the Dents' only score, which came on McCaulley's toss to Al Vaichulis. Nelson converted for the Dentists to bring them up to a 7-6 deficit.

Linebacker Burgar of Forestry and Dents' tackle Duggan were outstanding on defense and Armstrong, Gray, and Marcus all ran well for the winners.

The Victory gives the Woodmen temporary possession of second place in the second division, as they finish their regular season with a record of 3 wins, 2 losses and a tie.

Vic Femmes Top St. Hilda's Triumph 19-2 In Basketball

By ANN STARK

St. Hilda's Srs. suffered defeat at the hands of Vic Jr. Sr.'s last night in the Women's Interfaculty Basketball loop at O.C.E. Although they had a slight advantage in height, the Saints were otherwise outclassed by the snappy Vicsters.

Sandy McClung starred for Vic in the shooting field with six of the 19 points. Sally McRae and Eileen Rumball tallied eight between them to add to Vic's score.

In the first quarter, Penny Ketchum opened the scoring of the game with a free shot for St. Hilda's. It took them the rest of the quarter to settle down to steady shooting when Alison Tallied for Vic. Eileen Rumball and Sandy McClung came through with two more baskets before the half to make the score 6-2 for Vic at the end of the second quarter.

The second half of the game saw greater and better action as the Saints fought hard but unsuccessfully to keep the driving Vic squad away from their vulnerable basket. Olga Mracek scored twice with Eileen Rumball adding to Vic's glory with a lovely single-handed side shot to end the third quarter with a significant 11-1 lead.

St. Hilda's squeezed a second point on a free shot early in the last period of the game. Thus inspired, Vic's Sandy McClung and Sally McCrae tallied eight neat points to swamp St. Hilda's by a final 19-2 score.

In Support Of McCarthy, American

The Editor,
The Varsity:

This letter is to inform you that there is at least one supporter of "McCarthyism" on the campus.

Senator Joe McCarthy not only made Americans aware of the dangers confronting them and the rest of the world, but personally lessened that danger in the United States. Furthermore, he was actually so successful that what he placed before the American people has so much so that it is hardly an been accepted to a large extent, "issue" today.

We presume that communism is an evil and is recognized as such, first, because it advocates the overthrow by force and violence of the existing government, a policy which if allowed would be self-destructive to any government, secondly, because a government founded on the principle that freedom is guaranteed to men by "their Creator" (a personal God) cannot itself be a supporter of atheism. Presuming this, McCarthy is seen to have done a service to his fellow Americans.

He made them more aware of men in high political office who owed their allegiance to a foreign power and its systems. Even more important he made his country aware of a policy of the political Administration which placed such men in high office, and kept them there. McCarthy made Americans aware of communist infiltrations in fields other then politics. The schools were another choice area for communists and their activities—disseminating propaganda, swaying youth and thus the future, even stealing and betraying scientific information vital to defense—which McCarthy helped to expose.

Senator McCarthy, by an unprecedented 100 consecutive days of headlines across the United States, brought before the people the truth that their fellow men were enslaved in misery in the countries behind the ron Curtain (including Russia). Until this time the American press had been strangely silent about the communist persecutions and suppression of freedom.

McCarthy got results with his "bare-knuckles" tactics in Washington. The people were aware of the danger because of the publicity given McCarthy's charges against Alger Hiss, Fredrick Vanderbilt Field, William Remmington, and other individuals, whose names he was forced to publicity reveal in order to have action taken against them (some of them still held high governmental positions at the time of McCarthy's accusations) having been previously cleared by other investigations. The proof of the charges is that Hiss, Field, and others were tried and convicted on evidence taken from the investigation "hearings".

The senator from Wisconsin was so successful in his activities—McCarthyism—that what he set before the American people as a policy, is no longer a real issue in the States. McCarthyism was a political football due to the fact that the commies were allowed to entrench during a Democractic administration and were aided and protected by Democrats. Presumably, now that the Republicans are in, the policy has changed (though perhaps the the activity has diminished). Eisenhower and other leading heads of state support the Chairman of the rearmanent Senate Investigating Committee. In the election, McCarthy received such backing by his constituents that a strenuous campaign was not necessary. The people at large support what he stands for too. Witness the laws passed by State legislatures — California, Illinois, etc.—requiring University professors to take oaths that they are not members of subversive organizations and prohibiting communists from living in public housing projects.

Of course the life blood of

Enough Of Joe, Where's The Seduction

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It is with a mixed feeling of shame and disgust that I write this letter. Talk of McCarthyism and loss of democracy in the United States. Debate communist totalitarianism in Russia. Protest against fascism in Spain. None of these encroachments on individual liberty can compare with the incident of which I am about to speak, which happened right here on the sacred soil of Canada, on the sacred grounds of our university, and worst of all, in the sacred confines of Hart House library. Last week, I sat engrossed in a book of great intellectual stimulation (not Vengeance is Mine, sir) when I came upon a sight which shall rock the very foundations of this university.

The book I was reading was "From Here to Eternity" condemned by the police chief of Jersey City as unfit for man or beast. At the risk of being permanently banned from Jersey City, I went ahead and read it anyway. The book was just getting interesting (if you know what I mean), when I breathlessly turned the page and there! . . . . . the seduction scene was gone, brutally ripped and mutilated by some fiend. Tears came to my eyes. Where am I now to learn about sex in the ROTC? To whom am I to turn? I cry out to The Varsity and trust that these defenders of the rights of all shall soon raise their pen against this book butcher in our midst. Raise a cry for justice. Seek him out and we shall have another burning on our campus ere long.

Setting Him Straight

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Sickening and juvenile.

Could it be that Mr. Wipprecht is describing himself when he gives his letter this title? It would appear that Mr. Wipprecht is justifiably bitter regarding the recent juvenile antics of certain groups on the campus. But why should he allow this bitterness to extend to religion and politics, especially to religion?

Mr. Wipprecht would do well to remember that "articles coming from a certain corner of this campus" are merely personal opinions of students who feel as strongly as he does on issues, and wish to make known the fact. Furthermore, I see no reason for his venomous attitude towards the apparently comfortable financial position of students there. I myself come from that corner of the campus, and am by no means wealthy.

The main purpose, however, of my writing this letter is to try and set Mr. Wipprecht, and others like him, straight on one point. He is undoubtedly right when he says that RC leaders dominate the thinking of Catholic masses. This is a truth of which I am too well aware. But I have no evidence of the Church's proclaiming, in this age at any rate, that "every man has not the right to exercise the religion of his choice."

Now, I will admit that there have been, and there still are several extremely narrow-minded Catholics (Clergy and Laity alike) in this world, and on this campus. But is it right to judge the many by the few? The doctrine of the Catholic Church is one of charity and tolerance, as taught by Christ Himself. Because some weak members of the Church fail to live up to this, should all Catholics be branded as "wicked, totalitarian, and intolerant"?

In conclusion, I may state that I am not setting myself up as a champion of either side, but I do become annoyed when a badly mis-informed person makes a sweeping accusation of an organization of which he has probably never been a member, and of which he apparently knows little. Furthermore, it would seem that Mr. Wipprecht does not criticize constructively, or intelligently, with a view to eventually attaining the truth, but rather that he rants and storms as would a small school boy, with no other purpose than to create controversy. We could all scratch, snarl, and fight with one another, you know, but unfortunately, only a human being is capable of weighing the facts, and arriving at a sensible conclusion.

Open Letter About Money

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Prices have gone up again in Hart House; only ten percent of the members eat in the Great Hall; more students than ever are now bringing lunches and wedging themselves into the Tuck Shop and Cafeteria rather than eating in the Great Hall. They even seem to shun the Great Hall.

We don't pretend to have the answers to the question implied by these facts, but as members we maintain the right to voice our opinions on the subject.

In all fairness we feel that it is only just to praise Hart House for its present performance. Everyone with whom we discussed the matter was enthusiastic in their approval of its program and no one voiced any but minor criticisms of its activities. In the main Hart House is very satisfactory and all the undergraduates know that the Warden is an especially capable man performing a difficult job. Still we feel that it might be possible to do something about the prices in the Great Hall.

We do not feel that raising the prices in Hart House is the answer to the increased operating costs. We do feel that if some of the suggested difficulties were removed, this could materially aid the solution, however.

Hart House is a club. But if this is so, than there are only two classes to members: executive and non-executive. Everyone can recognize that the members want to honour their executive and have them sit apart at the raised table. But why are there three dining rooms? If the graduates and the faculty are members, are they too lofty to eat with the undergraduates? Would we not profit from getting to know them—or they from getting to know us? If a graduate swims in Hart House does he use a separate pool? If it were put to vote of all the membership of Hart House how many would vote to pay slightly more of their hard-earned cash for their meals so that the graduates and the faculty might be waited on in private dining halls? Perhaps the intention is to avoid the "swallowing up" of these smaller groups within the masses of undergraduates, but does not this segregation smack of class distinction? We are, all of us, members of Hart House, after all.

Your letter to the members set many of us thinking. In particular, you mentioned that only ten percent of the members ate in the Great Hall and indicated that many more ate in the Cafeteria or the Tuck Shop. Most of the members know that for the same price a meal in the Great Hall is much superior to the food that can be bought for the same price in the Cafeteria. The reasons members gave us for preferring to eat in the Cafeteria or Tuck Shop seldom mentioned prices. One fellow said that he would rather eat in a restaurant than eat in the Great Hall. A second year student said that he was irritated by the formality. He complained that he could not relax there while eating; there was too much rush. Another compared the Great Hall to an English boarding school. He protested that members should determine the necessary dining attire, for example. He felt that the straight lines of heavy tables and the straight-backed chairs and the "traffic director" comprised an autocratic pattern that made it impossible to relax. We eat regularly in the Great Hall and as regularly suffer from indigestion: but at least we know we are getting GOOD food.

It would seem that what the members want primarily is a comfortable place to eat food of the quality now served in the Great Hall. It seems that the tables and chairs and their arrangements are such that they militate against comfort. how often is it that one sees students leaning back in their chairs (a dangerous practice) laughing and talking, relaxed and enjoying their meals in the Great Hall? Rather, on entering the Great Hall one sees the faces of hunted men rushing to eat their GOOD food and depart in haste. We hazard the guess that if the members could relax in the Great Hall and enjoy their food, you would have a different problem, Warden. Your problem would be how to deal with all the members wanting to eat there. But why not ask the members what they want?

Going Once . . .

Educational Padlock

The great emphasis put on Quebec's provincial rights by Premier Duplessis is partly understandable. But why he has stubbornly insisted on creating a financial crisis among Quebec universities, in the name of provincial rights, is, to say the least, confusing.

By the British North America Act the provinces are granted control of education. Premier Duplessis has, however, taken an extraordinary stand on this right. He has declared that Quebec universities must not accept dominion educational grants which—with no strings attached—are available to all provinces.

Last year Quebec universities shared in the grants. But this year Duplessis has said "No," and to disregard these orders would be to forfeit any provincial assistance.

This has now developed into a serious problem. The University of Montreal will be short this year about $800,000, McGill about $615,000, Laval about $500,000 and smaller institutions will be in the red by smaller amounts. Having established their finances on the basis of continuing grants, the Quebec universities face deficits which they are trying to make up in various ways, including increased fees.

Yesterday, Duplessis is reported to have said that provincial aid to the universities is restrained only by limited provincial taxation. St. Laurent claimed there could be no major changes. But regardless of what agreement is reached, if any, between the federal Government and Quebec, the fact still remains that at present Quebec universities find themselves between the devil and the deep blue sea.

Every university president has asked for more aid. How can we expect the universities to carry out their mission in education if they, in the first instance, cannot even operate with their heads above water?

It's about time we start paying a little more attention to the well-being of our universities. Between 1938 and 1950 the university population had increased by four times. But university expenditure per student had decreased from $853 to $545. In that time fees increased by 33 per cent.

In 1950 revenues of Canadian universities totalled $40,458,000, and, at the same time, Canadians spent $651,000,000 on alcohol, $84,000,000 on motion pictures, $422,000,000 on tobacco, $197,000,000 on cosmetics.

Only three per cent of those of university age were attending university in 1952.

If Canadian prosperity is to continue, leaders of the Canadian economy must be educated. Enough of this parsimony. Young Canadians must be given an adequate opportunity to develop their abilities and skills. And if the universities are going to do what they are supposed to do, they will need money—and plenty of it.

Monsieur Duplessis' attitude to the whole question is unfortunate. He has adopted a dictatorial position—one of constitutional isolation—which is definitely stinting educational expansion in Quebec. This position has long ago been abandoned by the other provinces; its continuance is doing irreparable damage to "the universities of Duplessis".

The IPA Should Fold Its Tent

The Editor,
The Varsity:

After the malicious slander of the IPA, which they have neither enumerated nor proved, I think certain facts should be brought to light.

I will leave the defense of the policies of the Model Parliament Committee to the members who formed them. As chairman of the committee, I preside at the meetings but vote only in the case of a tie. I do not form the policy; I apply it in procedural matters. The IPA insinuate that I dominate the committee. There are no Conservatives on the Political Economy Club executive, it is made up of Liberals and CCFers.

I have never even attended a meeting of the Political Economy Club except when I was persuaded to accept the chairmanship of the Model Parliament Committee. The Conservatives have only one representative on that committee, I think it is quite ridiculous that I could dictate to it even if I wanted to.

The fact is that the IPA is trying to dictate to all political clubs on the campus. They refused to accept a 6-2 decision to bar the IPA off the ballot. They wrote an obnoxious letter to the speaker of the provincial House trying to sabotage the Model Parliament. They acknowledged that even after electing independent members, as we provided them with an opportunity to do, they would still run their platform in The Varsity, and try to sabotage the general elections.

It is a pity that whereas all the parties are working in a spirit of co-operation, the independents cannot.

It may be pertinent also that only seven members of the IPA showed up at the meeting. I asked them whether they objected to my chairing the meeting. They said they did not. No party members were allowed to stand for nomination.

No one ballot was cast for them in the voting. Surely this does not indicate a body that commands student support.

Had they acted in a mature manner they would have won most or all of the seats allotted independents. The political parties had already recognized IPA and said they would include them on panels and political activities and encourage them to take more interest in campus political affairs. IPA have never done this. By their childish behaviour they have sabotaged their own cause for now no political organization on the campus will want to touch IPA with a ten foot pole.

It is evident now that IPA are neither a group of independents nor a political party. They are merely a group of immature undergraduates seeking sensationalism. They are nothing but juvenile demagogues strutting across the pages of The Varsity dressed in political rompers and, in their wrath and frustration, leaving a trail of paranoid delusions and political slander.

I have played the game at a higher level and with better men than they, but not one of us ever descended to the despicable level of playing personalities.

I trust these crusaders of nonconformism, these fighters for campus opinion, etc., will be men enough to withdraw their unfounded remarks from The Varsity where they made them, for they did not have the courage or common decency to say these things to my face. If they do not I suggest they "fold their tents like the Arabs" and as silently steal away.

Joe Slogan,
Chairman,
Model Parliament Committee.

Challenge

The Editor,
The Varsity:

By now all students are well aware of the issues at stake in the Model Parliament election. The IPA has conformed to every rule laid down by the Political Economy Club and the Model Parliament Committee. At the disgraceful meeting last Friday, recognised rules of procedure were violated for the sole purpose of preventing our party from gaining the seats that we feel sure the student body wishes us to have.

Here is a challenge! We dare the Model Parliament Committee to publish the results of the write-in votes at the coming election. We request that one of our members be present at the counting of the ballots. Here is the chance for every student to prove that he will not be dictated to by any group of individuals. On Nov. 19, vote IPA.

Foolish

The Editor,
The Varsity:

ATTENTION BECAUSE OF ACHTUNG!

Concerning the aggressive assertions in the issue of Tues., Nov. 3, and the immature answer in the issue of Mon., Nov. 9, as well, I like to direct the attention of both parties on the words of an old wise:

"Si tacuisti philosophus mansuisti."

Keep you wisdom for yourself, Mr. Wipprecht, for if you write it in such a foolish way, you received the foolish answer you have earned.

Thanks God that both meanings cannot be supposed to be an example of what is a good Canadian or a good German.

Sob, My Heroes Go

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Oh, what has happened to my heroes. It has reached the point where I may have to destroy my entire library at home—and then what will I read.

Oh, (sob, sob), Robin Hood is being banned in Indiana on the ground that it contains Communist doctrine and draws insidious Communist ideology and propaganda. Thank Heaven this has been made known to me. Grrr, it makes me so mad to think of the subtle way in which Communist propaganda has been introduced in seemingly innocent works.

An editorial in yesterday's Telegram makes other revelations.

Little Miss Muffet is really a peace-loving comrade of the people's democracies and is the victim of germ warfare (the spider) waged by the capitalists represented by the dairy interests (she was eating curds and whey).

Cinderella is plainly a victim of monopolists who enrich themselves by slave labor and who have never heard of overtime. Later, however, bourgeois desires corrupt her and she becomes a deviationist.

The Old Woman Who Lived In A Shoe is, of course, a denunciation of the housing shortage created by greedy landlords who have successfully evaded rent control.

In Jack and the Beanstalk, the ogre clearly represents the North Atlantic Treaty Organization warmongering against the people's democracies represented by Jack.

Humpty Dumpty, believe it or not, represents the decay and eventual destruction of the capitalist system, private enterprise and the western economic system.

These are but a few examples and I will go through my library to find more. But, alas, it is a futile effort, for it seems evident that I must destroy my books—or I shall be damned with the principles in their morals.

I'm beginning to wonder if the Bible isn't next.

Oh, sob, sob.

Yes Comment Of Disapproval

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I have been driven to comment on your article "No Comment", by the fact that I form part of the third minority happily not attacked by this Pro-American gentlemen. He cites "Kikes" or "kommunists" as being authors of our "immolation". I say "immolation" because this is a sacrifice of our morality. "A normal, healthy, patriotic Canadian boy would never have engaged in such an outrage, an effrontery to a magnificent, fiercely pro-American gentleman", or at least the only vehicle by which we might show our active disapproval of his policy in our own little way. By saying that no normal, healthy, Canadian boy would engage, is he ascribing inertia and lack of morality to those who were restrained by any prohibition whatever? When he talks about "return to Ghettos and inferiority complexes," he himself returns to the squalor of his own insular prejudices and shows more than anything the mentality of the typical American. Of course, it might be the desire of your adherents to include me in the "Kommunists types." I would not claim exemption. If we were to commend virtue, and omit to disparge what we do not like, we would sooner make the world a better place to live in.

Forgotten

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your headline "Today We Remember" of Nov. 11, would be more accurate on Nov. 13 as "Today We Forget". As I passed the Memorial Tower at noon on Nov. 13, I saw the combination of motorcycles and wreaths that has shocked visitors and citizens for many years. The same offenders would hesitate to park a motorcycle dripping oil in the chancel of a church, and the tower is no less consecrated ground. Londoners, to this day, raise their hats as they pass the Cenotaph, whether on foot or on buses, and we once observed that custom here. It will hardly be revived while the cloisters and tower are put to their present use.

Third Force Impossible In World, Lewes States

The possibility of a third force economically and militarily strong yet independent of the USA and the USSR is impossible; however a force of independent nations allied to the USA should be able to exert an influence on US policies," said David Lewis at Hillel House last night.

Lewis speaking on "the possibility of an effective Third force in World Affairs" stressed the worsening world situation and attributed it to the conflict between the USA and Russia. He said a middle force is needed to counterbalance the two great opposed forces. There are very few countries not in either camp, India being one of the few exceptions. With this situaton the possiblility of war is very great, he said.

Russia hoped that the US would go isolationist after the last war but this has not come to pass, instead the US has set up bases all over the world to provide defence for her interests, said Lewis, this has however lead to bad relations between Europe and the US as Americans have consistently ignored the social and economic implications. The establishment of bases in Spain, the re-arming of Japan and Germany have created a great deal of hard feeling among the Western Bloc against the US.

The prestige of the US has hit an all time low, said Lewis, amongst the Western powers, to many people McCarthyism is the embodiment of American democracy.

Lewis said "he did not think a third force was possible, if it was to be Asia and Africa. These countries are gradually losing their faith of the West because of lack of international moral virtues." "These countries are not an effective force sufficient to deter anything Russia may want to do.

"The countries of West Europe cannot possibly form a cohesive force," he said, "because of the great devastation of the last war, however nations like Canada that are in a strong state economically an militarily could initiate a more independent policy." "Just as the rest of the world needs the US, so the US needs the rest of the world," he said. "Therefore it is impossible that any nation can "go it alone" but we do not need to follow US policy slavishly." Lewis called for a much more independent stand by countries in the Western Block to influence some of the childish American policy, and thereby make the West a much more consolidated bloc.

Classes Now Not Realistic

The present classroom situation, in which only one person speaks, is unreal said Professor H. McLuhan during an address on "Communication" last night. Dr. McLuhan added that this does not mean a rejection of authoritarianism but merely a preference for a new way of learning.

This new method of leaning, as illustrated by the round-table discussion group, needs the feedback of an interchange of ideas, according to Professor McLuhan.

"Our mechanized media of communication have made people aware of the power of opinion and creates a modest, insecure person, anxious for approval," said Dr. McLuhan.

Dr. Mcluhan, professor of English at St. Michael's College, and author of "The Mechanical Bride", addressed the Psychology Club on "Communication", last evening at Cartwright Hall.

Young People Facing Problems In Canadian Politics — Nolan

In a round-table discussion last night, Mr. George Nolan Q.C., MP, head of the Young Progressive Conservative Association, spoke on some of the problems that face young people today. He related some of his own university experiences when he and Sidney Smith were at school together.

"One of the big problems facing us today is the calibre of our representatives in parliament. The present low pay is encouraging two types of men — those who see parliament just as a job, and men with other outside incomes who can afford to attend. The small businessman, especially from the extremities of the dominion, could not afford to keep a residence both at home and in Ottawa." Nolan went on to emphasize the lack of interest in politics in Canada—only 65 percent of the electorate voted in the last election, in contrast with nearly 90 percent in Italy and Germany, which were recently totalitarian.

Special problems of the opposition party were also examined. Nolan pointed out that the government has a civil service, using some of the best brains in Canada supplying information to the government — in contrast to the two paid men the Conservatives could afford to employ. He suggested that government information should be available to all parties.

TIGHTEN NFCUS BUDGET PRESIDENT KEEPS SEAT TORONTO REFUSAL FELT

By SALLY HOGG

Ottawa, Nov. 16 — (Special) — Tony Enriquez, full-time president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, said his position would not be altered as a result of Toronto's decision not to pay the increased per capita fee to the Federation.

He explained that while the national student organization was faced with a $1,000 deficit, there was hope this could be made up by grants from private organizations. He made it clear that the Toronto action does not mean the end of the national full-time presidency.

At the last SAC meeting, Toronto, on the advice of its NFCUS delegates, Scott Symons and Jennifer Rickard, repudiated their former stand on the thirty cent per capita fee raise adopted at the Montreal Conference last month. Toronto could not pay the increase, the SAC decided, because the fees for this year had already been collected and the budget drawn up.

Symons said Toronto's rfusal to pay the increase would cost the Federation $2,500. It was felt, at that time, that this loss would mean the end of the office of a national president who would give up a year of his schooling to travel across Canada publicising NFCUS locally.

At the NFCUS national offices here Enriquez said the Toronto decision was a great blow. But despite what Toronto has done, he stated that the presidency would not be abandoned.

Although Toronto's move would mean a $2,500 loss to the Federation, the actual loss would amount to only $1,000 since the University of Montreal would be paying $1,500. Montreal joined the Federation this year after the budget had been made up. The only hope now, Enriquez said, is to make up the thousand dollars by private donations.

If no other universities follow Toronto's lead there is every hope that the budget can be balanced, Enriquez stated. The NFCUS contribution to the Istanbul Conference of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat (CoSec) would have to be raised from private sources, he added. If this is successful and various other expenses are cut then the budget may be balanced.

Enriquez said it was "too bad" that Toronto broke faith after its delegates had committed themselves to the fee raise. The Toronto delegates did say that this University would be able to pay the extra thirty cents at their Montreal meet, but were forced to turn this down when they returned.

The NFCUS president charged that Toronto had started the move for higher fees by appealing to all universities for a one dollar fee. Last spring a campus-wide referendum at Toronto overwhelmingly approved a dollar fee if that's what was needed to get NFCUS "to do something".

The SAC regretted their decision and said they would continue to be active in the Federation and would pay the fee increase next year.

Enriquez, whose post still remains intact, will leave for the western universities this week. He will visit Toronto on his return trip.

European Union Speech Delivered By Reynolds

"Britain and the Western Union" was the topic of the speech of Professor P. A. Reynolds at the International Relations Club last night in Falconer Hall.

Professor Reynolds considered the foundations of British Policy and modifications since 1945, and its conflict with the impetus towards European Union in Western Europe. "Europe does not exist as a cultural, economic, and military unit" he said.

British policy has largely showed uncertainty since 1945, partly because the tradtional basis of policy has been destroyed, and England is no longer leading the world technically; also air power has compromised Britain's position as a great island power relying on the sea for her navy for protection. This and many other factors explain the new position of Britain since 1945, he said.

Also he mentioned the Commonwealth as an impediment to Britain's joinging the European society. The commonwealth does not always follow the line held by the European countries.

Britain's role in the European community is also difficult to ascertain, he said. This is caused because the Europeans are competitive amongst each other rather than complementary. Also many Europeans feel that Britain's connections with the commonwealth would hinder the European union rather than help it, and also that most European countries are ready for union, emotionally as well as intellectually, whereas Britain is not, said Reynolds.

If Britain joined the Union the commonwealth would eventually come to an end as the sovereignty of Britain would switch from the whole of the Commonwealth to Europe alone. The balance of power has switched Britain to the US, and European Union would not be successful without Britain, said Reynolds.

What's Coming Up

'Toad' Show Coming Soon To St. Mike's

The St. Mike's Music and Drama Society is attempting to Drama Society is attempting to inaugurate a study group of exchange plays with the other drama groups on the campus.

Pat McDonough, the director of the St. Mike's drama group said "No professional standard will be required from this organization, but the play must be good enough to be presented four nights or more if needed. Without the pressure of box-office appeal and large theatre problems, the group can strive for more artistic freedom in Drama at low budget costs. This is the first attempt to raise the level of the half-baked, half-hearted minor plays which are thrown together in a week."

The first play to be presented by the St. Mike's Drama Society is "Toad of Toad Hall" by A. Milne. It is directed by Pat McDonough. The first presentation will be in Brennan Hall, Nov. 22, from there it will move to University College on November 25.

Hart House Song Festival Cornell, Ithaca, Mac Here

Three university choirs will combine Saturday night to present the third annual Hart House Glee Club Festival.

Cornell University's A Capella Chorus, Ithaca, N.Y., and McMaster University's Chorus will join the Hart House Glee Club in the concert. Great Hall has been booked for the occasion.

The commbined 175-voice Inter-University concert is the third to be held in Hart House. Hart House Glee Club has made two successful journeys to both Rochester and Cornell with great success, strengthening ties between universities.

Each choir will sing individually, and will close the program by combining to sing four numbers. Last year's concert was one of the highlights of the Toronto fall musical season.

The program includes early liturgical, folk songs, contemporary, light and humorous tunes.

Tickets are on sale to all in the SAC office (Observatory Bldg.) and the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House. Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, last night suggested that tickets be picked up at an early date as last year's concert was sold out before the night of the concert.

This concert does not constitute a full evening's entertainment, McDowell emphasized last night. "The event will be out in lots of time for the audience to enjoy the other Saturday night activities on the campus and elsewhere," he said. "It's part of a grand evening's entertainment."

Model Parliament Election Voting Starts Tomorrow

Beginning, Thursday tomorrow, November 19 at 10 a.m. and continuing through to 2:00 p.m., ballotting will be held for the election of the Model Parliament.

In competition for seats in the Parliament will be the four major campus parties—Progressive Conservatives, Liberals, CCF and the LPP. All students of the University are holders of the franchise in this election and may vote at booths in any of the four Arts Colleges, as Victoria, UC, St. Michael's and Trinity will have ballot boxes in their main entrances. To every student there will be given one vote and to get it he (or she) will be required to produce his ATL card.

Ballotting will follow standard procedure, with any ballots marked or defaced, other than being marked with an X beside the party designated, being disallowed.

Official Election returns will be announced the same afternoon at 4 o'clock in the JCR by Committee chairman Joe Slogan.

Following the announcement of results there will be a panel discussion open to all students. Mr. Arthur J. Brown, chairman of the Board of Education in this city and candidate for the Mayoralty this year, will address the discussion on the topic 'The Problems of Civic Government'.

School Of Nursing Officially Opened

More Than Adequate

Fine, Modern Home Adequate Equipment For Campus Nurses

In his speech opening the modern School of Nursing on St. George St., Dr. Mackinnon Phillips, Minister of Health for Ontario declared there was no higher profession than nursing. Nursing assistants, registered nurses, Bachelors of Science, all are extremely important. He also paid tribute to the Board of Governors, saying "We need more men like them—they have built a great school." He went on to honor the university staff, the leaders of the younger generation.

"Education," said Dr. Phillips, "is the greatest thing a man carries; it teaches a person the power to think." He ended with a plea for practical phychology in medicine: the treatment of the patient as an individual.

Dr. Fidler, Director of the School of Nursing, spoke of Dr. Russell, former director, her dreams and accomplishments. She told of Dr. Russell's belief that nurses must be educated, professionally and in the broader sense, and of her work for 33 years as director of the school. Dr. Fidler said that in the beginning the school had had ideals and ideas, but meagre physical facilities. Now it had a new administration and teaching staff. "Year by year," said Dr. Fidler, "progress will be made."

After welcoming especially Mrs. F. K. Morrow and Mrs. Cody, Pres. Sidney Smith explained that the auditorium was to be called Cody Hall, out of recognition of the late Canon Cody's vision and his efforts for the new school.

The new School of Nursing contains everything the nurses could want. Classrooms, seminar rooms, common rooms and lounges, all are done in the most modern style. The library, remarkably complete

Cornell Weekend

Crazy Mixed-Up Campus

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

"By Jove! what a campus! (well that's what we British colonists say isn't it?), and aren't Canadians wonderful?" were the typical comments after the annual Cornell Canadian Exchange Week-End (That's right, 120 Canadians drove hundreds of miles from Bishop's, Carleton College, Sir George William's, McGill, University of Ottawa, Western and McMaster as well as Toronto, under the mistaken impression they were about to meet Americans. At least we saw our fellow Canadians in different surroundings.

It is quite a shock to the system to get down to the US. of A, and to find everything Pogo says about it is absolutely true. This unfortunately, was the general impression received by the delegates. Due to poor organization, very few of the Cornellians even knew we were Canadians (the nasty old immigration department wouldn't let us bring our pet beavers across), and for that reason we saw Cornell under normal conditions. From what we could gather, the average Cornellian thinks of parties, marks, and parties. That's all very fine, but in a nation which is supposedly leading the free world in a fight for freedom, a little knowledge and interest in current affairs and history would be a help. It required great strength of character to resist the temptation to speak with a heavy French accent all week-end.

The official programme included arrival at Ithaca, (this is almost a necessity), lectures, a tea, a speech by Senator Irving Ives, and a reception Friday night, conducted tours of the campus, a frosh football game and the festivities of Ag-Hec Day (the agricultural and household economics schools) such as Coed Roping, Greased Pig Chasing and Pie Eating Contests. The Week end was concluded by a banquet for all the Canadians, a fraternity party, and on Sunday morning a service at Sage Chapel, an inter-denominational church on campus. This was all very nice, except that the Cornellians, under the impression no doubt that Canadians are so used to tracking in the dense forests of Ontario and Quebec, failed to provide guides to any of the activities. If you had a compass you were all set, otherwise, instead of attending class on the English novelists, you heard a fascinating lecture on Russian Literature in translation. You didn't know that Nikolai Gogal was a "lovely repitle", did you?

The emphasis at Cornell seems to be on engineering and the technical courses. There are excellent science buildings everywhere you turn, but the English, Classics and History Departments are all in the Goldwin Smith Hall, whih has seen better days. The pride and joy of Cornell is the Statler Club, which is a beautiful hotel run by the students in the course, who act as waiters, chambermaids and bellboys.

There is an old tradition at Cornell that the girls in their senior years can always be distinguished by the powerful muscles in their legs, gained from climbing the hills on the campus. Although the steep hills must be a problem, the magnificence of the scenery more than compensates for that over-ninety feeling we feeble Canadians had after wandering around campus. Most of the Canadians were staying in fraternity row, which is across Fall Creek. Imagine walking across a suspension bridge (with many interesting traditions) high above the ground, between towering bluffs to classes, instead of plodding across Hoskin. (It's a more romantic way to die, too.) The majority of the fraternities and residences are spacious buildings set high on the hills over-looking the lights of Ithaca, and Beebe Lake. Loud sobs came from the Toronto co-eds at the sight of Willard Straight Hall, just one of the many completely equipped co-ed student union buildings.

Under the leadership of Dr. Lynch, the Toronto faculty advisor, the delegation held a bull-session Saturday afternoon with one member of Cornell, and discussed exchange week-ends and their purpose. Most of the Canadians agreed that they were disappointed in not having any discussions with Americans, and not being able to get to the right lectures. It was felt that specific themes were necessary for the week-end as well as purely personal aims, in order to create better understanding between two ideas and ideals.

At the banquet, Professor Olafson of the history department spoke on the differences between American and British Democracy and Education. He said, "Because of the peculiar social structure of the United States, it was necessary to have mass education to assimilate the many national and ethnic groups." "To some extent," he said, "this becomes mob education; the swiftest are forced to keep pace with the mediocre and education becomes a means to a well-paying job. For this reason the liberal arts are being over-balanced, and students are taught to build bridges instead of appreciating Shakespeare."

He said, "Great Britain had a structured society, with superior people who can direct the rest at the top. The education is strictly for leadership there, and although it is on a much higher level, only one-out-of-twenty go to college, instead of one out of four hundred." He said, "the British believe Lincoln was wrong; education is of, and for, but not by the people. Both systems present real difficulties," he said, "because not enough education for leadership is given in America, whereas not enough general education is given in Great Britain, so that the British penny press, 'the lowest of the low' is still in existence."

"The typical Saturday evening Cornell party", seemed quite normal, but apparently I missed the one where they were pouring beer in the professor's hair. I guess he needed a shampoo.

Cornell has several fascinating traditions, chief of which seems to be bird-dogging, that is stealing someone else's date, and ditching your own. This can get complicated. Another strange sight is seeing the dogs lounging lazily around buildings all over the campus. When Ezra Cornell first founded the University in 1886 as a college for agriculture and mechanical arts as well as the humanities, all the farmers brought their dogs to classes, and it was incorporated in the constitution that dogs are allowed in all lectures and buildings.

Cornell has been called America's all-round university, and has a student body of 9,500, with members from 70 foreign countries. Despite such a cosmopolitan atmosphere, the majority of the students we talked to, seemed to know little of their own history, and even less of Canada's. One obviously intelligent girl, at Cornell on a state scholarship, remarked gaily that all she knew about Canadian history was that we had the longest undefended frontier in the world. A McMaster student from North Bay was asked if he participated in many logrolling contests!

Not one of us would have missed the week-end for the world, but I think almost all the delegates came home feeling that Canada isn't such a bad place after all.

God save the Queen!, and pass me my Maple-Leaf.

Generalizations Don't Stand

Editor,
The Varsity:

The composition of the University of Toronto's Board of Governors has been questioned by Campus Comment, an anonymous publication, supposedly, which is actually put out by the campus CCF party. Perhaps they are ashamed to admit acknowledgement.

The yellow journal charged that Varsity was controlled by Canadian capitalists. "There isn't one author, one painter, or one man of scholarship in the entire group of 2L" it revealed. May I refer John R. Lee, Comment editor, to Governor General Vincent Massey, who has spent his whole life in the pursuit of beauty and truth, the chairman of the Royal Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences, the author of several books and 1947-1953 U of T chancellor; to Edward Johnston, who literally made the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York what it is today . . . known worldwide for its artists and performances; to Mr. Justice Hope, who spent five years of his life heading the Hope Commission on Education, an accomplished authority on the education subject; to Dr. Sidney Smith, who took over a corrupt administration at the U of Manitoba years ago and who has devoted his entire life at Varstiy to securing the best (and only the best) men and women for the University; to Dr. Samuel Beatty, dean emeritus of Arts; to Mr. Henry Borden, president of Brazilian Traction and admittedly a wealthy man, who spent four years at McGill University, three at Dalhouse Law School and two at Oxford University; to Dr. Sigmund Samuel, who has built up a Canadiana collection at the Archives which has no equal in this country.

Now, practically speaking, there is a need also for the businessman on the Board of Governors. In an oeganization which spends $14,000,000 annually, has 3,000 employees and a current $22,000,000 building program underway, the experience of finance and business organization is needed to direct such an outfit.

Comment also revealed that the faculty are cowed by fear of being dismissed "if they don't conform." Firstly, the Board of Governors has nothing to say as to what the faculty says, does, thinks, either while on the campus or off-campus. Authority of the teaching staff is invested entirely in the Senate which is composed almost entirely of the teaching faculty, plus only a few graduate members who are elected by the Alumni. And that body has never been known to take any action to dismiss any faculty member. Even Dr. Infeld, Varsity professor who went to Poland, was not dismissed in any way from the University of Toronto. Dr. Smith's comment at the time was "Show me some concrete evidence." None was produced, nothing happened to Dr. Infeld.

May I strongly suggest to readers of Comment that Mr. Lee's comments are an insult to both faculty and governors, that his charges are untrue, and that Mr. lee should obtain a copy of the list of governors, enquire into their academic background, and then one by one list his charges. Generalizations here do not stand up.

Heresy

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The unprovoked attack by the students of Wycliffe College on the peace-loving students of Trinity College has definitely not been in the spirit of the Ecumenical movement. It is a well-known fact that Wycliffe College does not agree with much that is taught at Trinity, and therefore the students of Wycliffe have tried to close the doors of Trinity. Such suppression of education reminds one of the tactics of Soviet Russia.

The Wycliffe action in bricking the doors of Trinity must, I think, be considered as a glaring act of heresy. The only solution in a case of heresy is that an immediate session of the General Synod should be called. While I would not like to dictate to the Synod, I would suggest that it should ex-communicate all the students of Wycliffe before any more acts of aggression take place.

be done." When we have called for reduction of taxes and elimination of waste and extravagance they say it can't be done. When the government was approached for scholarships and exemption from the unemployment insurance for students they said it couldn't be done.

The Liberals say "It can't be done—but re-elect us; we are indispensable." It can't be done was not in the vocubulary of those that built Canada nor is it in the vocabulary of the Progressive Conservative Party.

In the past the students have consistently returned the Conservatives with a plurality. This year we hope that the interests of making a really effective model parliament you will give us the majority.

Typical ?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I am utterly disgusted with A. D. M. Audairn's bland statement that the author of that inane bit of prejudicial opinion reported under "No Comment" last week "shows more than anything the mentality of the typical American."

Admittedly, we will most of us agree with Mr. Audairn's censure of this "Pro-American" gentleman's attitude. But to say this gentleman typifies the American mentality, is narrow-minded, idiotic, and fantastic. Mr. Audairn ought to be more careful in throwing about such slanderous statements which I doubt very much he could ever prove in a hundred years. That he should consider himself a competent judge of the "mentality of the typical American" is laughable, to say the least, and may, perhaps, lead some to cast aspersions on his own mentality.

UC Soccerites Move Into First With 4-0 Win

The high-flying UC soccer team stepped into first place in Division One of intramural soccer yesterday, when they swamped the struggling Vic squad 4-0.

A strong UC attack, backed up by a solid rearguard, kept the Vicsters bottled up in their own end for most of the game with Jim Treliving and Gord Rintoul leading the way. Rintoul turned the hat trick by firing three goals while Treliving sniped the other.

Other interfaculty soccer action yesterday saw Dentistry whip Trinity "B" 5-1 to force a group playoff. Lechicky notched a pair of counters for the winners with singletons going to Fast, Mroz and Harper.

St. Michael's teams split two decisions yesterday in interfaculty volleyball. In the main event of the day, St. Mike's "A" succumbed to SPS "B" in two straight games. The scores were 15-10 and 15-11. In the later game, St. Mike's "D" saved face for the Irish by romping over SPS V 15-10 and 15-7.

A QUAGMIRE

Duet For Two Hands

The actor's wallowed within the quagmire of a metaphysical melodrama and did a surprisingly fine job. The play, Duet For Two Hands, is concerned with a poet who has been engrafted with two new hands, two new hands which still have the imprint of their former owner, two hands which did not want to die, which are seeking an answer to their owner's death. Also involved is the surgeon who grafted these hands onto the poet, a man hiding something. He has a daughter, half girl, half woman, a mixed up little Orkney girl who grows rare roses. There is also the surgeon's sister, a sweet rational quietness among the metaphysical and primitive passions burning among these Orkney hills, close to the old sea, where the sound of the sea birds can be heard calling, calling.

It is all romantic, mysterious, beautiful, in a kind of turn of the century literary way that is as impossible to play today in the same way that Barrie's plays are impossible. That it had a long run in England indicates clearly the English are at heart romantic and that they have fine actors who can coagulate something of interest from the softest taffy.

This is a play of great pretension. Such metaphysical questions as Life, Love, and surgery are discussed at length. "What is life? What is life?" Doctor Sarclet, the great surgeon asks the great poet, Stephen Cass, known to his fans as the "sworn companion of the winds." After a certain amount of justifiable hesitation Stephen Cass gives an answer worthy of being frizzled for evermore upon the fires of Hell for its sheer mediocrity. "Life," he says deeply, "Life is a cycle of events." With that the great surgeon Sarclet relaxes—he has his answer, he has learned the great fundamental truth that has evaded the greatest minds of the centuries. He can confess his crime, happy in his unique knowledge.

Abigail Sarclet, the daughter, has some lines so blatantly, impossibly romantic to the modern ear, that the mind cringes from recalling them. Mary Laura Wood deserves the highest praise for some brilliant ——field running. That she didn't quite escape all the tacklers indicates only too well the fine defensive squad that Mary Hayley Bell has mustered.

Incidentally Miss Bell wrote this play for her husband John Mills. I don't know what their marital relationship is now but I doubt whether even John Mills who can underplay a tit mouse could have sneaked through this play unscathed.

Guy Verney who played Stephen Cass and directed the play did a fine job. As the actor he was relaxed even when sitting in the midst of some of Miss Bell's juiciest bits of rosy prose. However, like Mary Laura Wood, his offense was not always equal to the spirited defense of the writing especially in the final scene when the absurdity of it all became in fact absurd. However, he has directed this play exceedingly well. The mood, the blocking in a small space, the many uncomfortable parts of the play, the insistent sound effects of birds, are all handled with imagination and a polite tactfulness that wants to avoid as much pain as possible.

Peter Mews as Dr. Sarclet has the only decent part in the play. He did a competent job but lacked stature. The final scene fell badly because there was not enough strength in his character to make his final action probable.

Rosamund Merivale did well in a passive sweet role that passes through the play like a dim shadow.

In summary this is a play which strives for mood, suspense, romance and profundity. The good acting created the mood and the romance. The writing ensured a lack of suspence and a lack of profundity that inverted the mood into boredom and the romance into melodrama. The New Play Society has now struck bottom twice in its choice of plays. I hope it finds the air soon.

Ricky Arnold.

CLOCKWISE

Contemporary Art

It has been a good season for the Hart House Gallery. For the second or third time since the term began, the House is exhibiting a first-rate collection of work. The present offering, of Canadian Drawings, is contemporary national art in digest form. After one viewing you won't have to read the book, but you'll want to.

All the trends, and most of the leading practitioners, are fairly represented. Each of the drawings is an individuality, and the decent thing would be to give each one its own review, but this will have to do.

The earliest drawings (clockwise) are two views of the market place in Quebec, made in 1788 and 1827. After these, the styles become increasingly tree and personalized, with a great emphasis on making each line do a hard day's work. The purest examples of this emphasis are the flourished figure studies of Jack Nichols and Louis Muhlstock, with the stark, stingy sketches of the Canadian French expressionists: Alfred Pellan, Pierre Bondreau, Jacques De Tonnancour, Henri Masson and Albert Du Monchel.

Non-representation is present, in a black and white pattern by Marion Scott. There is whimsical abstraction in the syncopated "Clarinet" by Oscar Cahen, known to MacLean's readers for his spidery, stylized illustrations. David Milne and Roloff Beny give contrasting interpretations of architectural impressionism.

The Canada-painters are out in force. Emily Carr's primitive power comes through well in black and white, without the lurid colours which usually detract from it. Lawren Harris, A. Y. Jackson and Arthur Lismer turn in their bare, smooth rocks, slabby, blown trees, and black shadowed water, respectively. A fourth group-member, Fred Varley, shows his versatility in a large-eyed portrait of a young girl. Also in evidence: the Mc-J. Hughes, the most northerly Donalds, J. E. H. and Thoreau. But the most unusual treatment of Canadian landscape is by E. Mexican of them all.

art, music, drama

Our own Charles Comfort has a solid, but none too comfortable nude. Carl Schaefer, much portrayed mentor of the Hart House Art Class, contributes a stump. Grant McDonald, a McDonald who concentrates on bottle - shaped people with germ-free expressions, has done so in his "Figure Study".

This is only a sampling. The show includes historical drawings, metaphysical drawings (nude, angular bodies, striving for something through cubistic sunlight), pretty, comfortable drawings, harsh, social drawings, realistic, imaginative, fantastic drawings, having only their nationality to label them. If they demonstrate anything, it is that the neglected black and white medium, and the undervalued Canadian Creative talent, are not things to be sneered at.

THE PRINT ROOM

There is more. The little Print Room is occupied by some lacerating editorial comments, the work of Fred Hagan, instructor at the Ontario College of Art. Hagan, a competent realist, is also a spiritual cartoonist, whose vicious sympathy for the race is expressed in such self-explanatory critiques as "Admit One", "All Day Suckers" and "Two Nuns". The feeling, and lack of it, in the faces of his caricatures make them delightful exercises in mature disillusionment.

Redmen Roll In Lacrosse

University College lacrosse Firsts had their toughest test yesterday at Hart House but had enough power to shade Medicine Firsts 5-4 to complete an undefeated season. Next step for the Redmen is the playoffs which start next week. The UC squad gets a bye into the semi-finals and will be hunting for its second consecutive Dafoe Cup championship.

It was Bob "Nobber" Watson who provided the spark as usual. Nobber has paced the champs with his scoring feats all season, and last Thursday broke Axe Haliburton's one-game scoring record of nine goals. Watson rattled in 12 goals, adding this mark to the playoff record of eight goals in one game which he set last year. In yesterday's match, Watson was held to one goal but Al Eagleson came through with a pair while Jack Rogers and Don Carroll got one each.

This was the sixth straight triumph for the Redmen and leaves them well ahead of the pack in first place. They wound up with a total of 65 goals and only 21 against goalie Al King, who played for Skule last season.

In a minor group thriller, Dave Kerr fired a goal with only four seconds remaining to give Second Year PreMeds a 1-0 win over Victoria Seconds.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

PLAYING DEAD

So McGill Redmen beat Western Mustangs last Saturday, 16-13. So what? So not much. It's a win for the Redmen, a win that will look good in the record books. But it won't mean much as far as this Saturday's game is concerned. Records rarely do mean much in a sudden-death playoff. And that's particularly true of the Mustangs.

Something the records won't show is the fact that four of the best that John Q. Metras can dress sat the game out for various reasons such as injuries and more likely a good rest. Jack Thompson, their able guard and captain was one of the men that sat out the game. The others were last year's all star fullback, Jacques Belec, Murray Henderson, one of the fastest halfbacks in the intercollegiate, and Ralph Simmons who got a bad leg for the trouble of playing a good game in the Snow Bowl a couple of weeks ago.

AGAIN, SO WHAT?

What would the Blues look like if they played a game without Phil Muntz, Bob Pinkney, Pete Maik and Bruce Johnson? You're right. Not so hot. They probably would put up a good game but it would be too much like giving the game away. In effect that's what the Mustangs did at Western Saturday.

DON'T MINIMIZE

Make no mistake, the Redmen deserved to win. Even Metras will admit that much. As he said in a telephone interview the other night, "McGill were really up." And according to the game reports, they deserved to win.

WHAT ABOUT SATURDAY

But when the Mustangs prance out on the field Saturday, don't expect to see Jacques Belec missing from the lineup because of a dinky knee. The dinky knee will have vanished. Jack Thompson will be back in the lineup as will Murray Henderson. Metras said that John Girvin, understudy to Don Getty, and Doug Drew, an all star centre if you ever saw one, will be playing good games in spite of the flu bug that took them to the doctor this week. Ralph Simmons won't be around though; he's through for the season.

PREDICTIONS?

No, Metras won't make any predictions which leaves it pretty well up to our friend, One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, since Coach Masterson won't make a prediction either. Metras would say that it will be a "real tough ball game." But that's taken for granted since the Mustangs will be playing.

The Mustangs are always tough to beat. So tough to beat in fact, that there is an old adage known to the close followers of the Intercollegiate which goes like this: "The Mustangs are tougher to play away from home than they are at home when the game is a playoff." Don't forget, the Mustangs moved into Toronto one year ago facing a game that they had to win or else drop the Yates to the Blues for the second straight year. What did the Mustangs do? They won.

END NOTES:

The game Saturday starts at 1.30 rather than the usual time of 2. That's to allow time for overtime if the teams end the first sixty minutes tied. Look for a near sell out. Barring the Grey Cup game Saturday could draw the largest crowd to see an athletic event in Canada this year. While the pro clubs will be scouting Gino Fracas and Bill McFarlane on Saturday, Fracas won't be eligible for the draft. He has another year of college coming up.

Varsity Has Often Won Yates By Beating Western Mustangs Will We Come Through Again?

On Saturday afternoon, the University of Toronto will play host to the University of Western Ontario Mustangs in the first Senior Intercollegiate regularly scheduled playoff. The winner of the sudden-death playoff will get the Yates Cup to keep for the next year. The last time the Blues won the emblem of the Senior Intercollegiate title was back in the fall of 1951. Last year the Mustangs walked right into Varsity Stadium to subdue the Blues 8-1 and take the trophy back to London. This year the Blues will attempt to bring the Yates back to Toronto.

The Mustangs went through the regular season with a record of four wins and two losses. Actually their record reads four wins and three losses since the Blues walked over a fumbling Western team in a pre-season game to take a handy 12-1 win. The Mustangs' won and lost record placed them second in the intercollegiate final standings, two points ahead of Queen's Golden Gaels who finished third and two points behind Varsity who finished first. The Blues had a record of five wins and one loss plus the pre-season win over the Mustangs.

At the beginning of the year, some intercollegiate fans sold the Mustangs down the river after listening to John Metras, the Western coach cry over the loss of Doug McNichol and Ray Truant, two Intercollegiate all-stars. McNichol placed on the Big Four all star team of '53 with a great defensive season with the Montreal Alouettes. Truant also starred defensively with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Big Four.

In spite of the loss of McNichol and Truant a fine nucleus of veterans returned to Western. Don Getty, last year's all star quarterback, returned to star again for the purple and white. On the half line, Gino Fracas, Jacques Belec and Murray Henderson all returned as well as Don Prowse and Jock Thompson. On the line such veterans as Doug Drew, last year's captain Jack Wyatt, Jack Fowler, Dick Martin, Ted Roman, Don Killinger and Jack Thompson returned to give the Mustangs one of the most powerful lines in the league.

Most intercollegiate observers wondered if the Mustangs were as strong as their starting lineup appeared when they visited the Blues in Varsity Stadium in a pre-season game. The Mustangs fumbled and bumbled the ball and the Blues took good advantage of every break to power to a 12-1 win. The next week the regular season got under way and Western won four straight games.

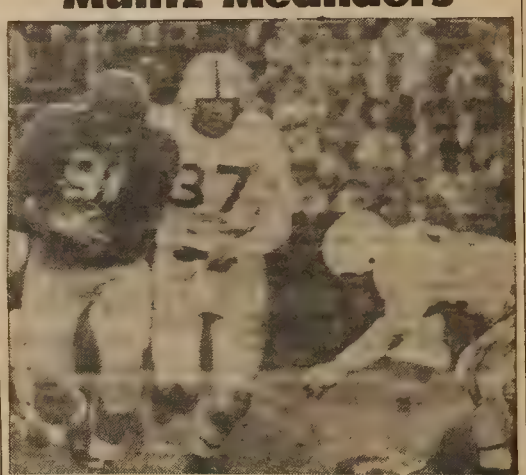
The first of their four straight wins was a 40-13 trouncing of the McMaster Marauders who played their first season of intercollegiate regularly-scheduled games. Gino Fracas was the big gun in the game, scoring 15 points on two touchdowns and five converts to take an early lead in the intercollegiate scoring race. Later in the season Steve Oneschuk of the Blues and Ron Stewart of Queen's managed to take a short-lived lead before Fracas came from behind with two TD's and a convert in his final game with McGill to take the scoring title.

A week after the McMaster game, Toronto Varsity Blues moved into the Little Memorial Stadium in London and took a half time lead of 10-0 over the Mustangs. However, in the third quarter; the Mustangs were sparked again by Fracas who scored two majors and converted both himself while Jacques Belec kicked a single and the Mustangs rolled to their second straight win by the score of 13-10. In the first half the Blues had completely outplayed the Mustangs only to have a case of overconfidence and poor linebacking help Fracas and Western to win.

The following week, Western kept right on rolling with a 25-8 win over the weak McGill Redmen in Montreal. Fracas scored three converts in a winning cause while Murray Henderson, Garnet Mason, Orest Tokarsky and Jack Wyatt were scoring majors for the Mustangs. Jock Thompson kicked two singles.

One week later, the Mustangs completed their win skein with a one-sided 19-7 win over the Queen's Golden Gaels in London. Henderson was the star of this Western win scoring two TD's and Garnet Mason scored the other Western major. Gino Fracas continued his sure-footed kicking by hoofing three converts. Jacques Belec kicked asingle to complete the Western scoring.

The Blues ended the winning streak of the University of Western Ontario two weeks later by blanking the Western Mustangs 12-0, on a snow-covered Varsity gridiron. Good line-backing kept Gino Fracas, Murray Henderson and Garnet Mason from sweeping the ends like they had in London a few weeks earlier.



Last Saturday the McGill Redmen scored the upset of the intercollegiate season by edging the Mustangs in their home town of London, 16-13. Fracas was the big gun for Western again scoring two touchdowns and a convert for eleven points to win the intercollegiate scoring race. Jacques Belec, Garnet Mason, Jak Thompson, Murray Henderson and Ralph Simmons were rested while McGill came up with their best effort of the year.

The secret in beating the Mustangs seems to lie in a good pass defense against the throwing arm of Don Getty, the all star Western quarterback, and good linebacking against the running of Gino Fracas, Jacques Belec, Murray Henderson and Garnet Mason.

If the Blues can stop these men they could win but it is a pretty big "if". An off day on the part of the Blues would be all that Western would need to romp to their second straight Yates Cup and their sixth cup since the war.

Muntz Meanders

Phil Muntz, one of the Varsity Blues' many consistent runners, is on his way here in what has become rather a historical picture. It shows a bit of action from the Blues-Mustangs pre-season game played in September with the Blues winning 11-1. Muntz is eluding Mike Newediuk, a Western guard.

Fullback Muntz has gained more than 100 yards from scrimmage in each of his last three games—all of which Varsity has won. Varsity fans are hoping that he will be able to maintain his average this Saturday at Varsity Stadium when the Blues and Mustangs square off with the Yates Cup hanging in the balance.

Freshies Win Again

The Physical Education freshies were extended somewhat last night at the OCE gym but they managed to come up with their fourth consecutive victory of the women's basketball season. The "A" team of Victoria College freshies was the victim this time and the score was 19-18.

It was a close, hard-checking contest with the Vicsters leading the way for most of the game before wilting before a last-period drive by the PHE gals.

Sylvia Kerr opened the scoring for PHE and Marilyn Charters added another basket to give the Phys-Edders an early lead, but Vic came back to gain the lead until they were edged out in the late stages of the game.

Marilyn Charters hooped nine points to pace the winners, with Sylvia Kerr adding eight. Mary Foster and Phyllis Ostry netted seven each for Vic.

Skule, St. Mike's Roll To One-Sided Wins

Double Blues Over Trinity By 22 Points

By JOHN WILSON

Featuring their powerful offence once again, the Double Blues from St. Mike's shoved the Trinity machine right out of the play-off picture in the second division yesterday on the back campus. The score was 23-1. Some hard and long running by haives Dick Kastersky and Fusca gave St. Mike's a large wedge in ground offence. The Trinity attack lacked punch although the defensive line was holding its own against St. Mike's fast backfield.

Trinity kicked off to open the game and St. Mike's returned to their own fifty and they marched for a touchdown. Three first downs carried them to the Trinity fifteen. Kastersky went around the right end to the five and Burns plunged over for the major on the next play. Connelly converted and the score read 6-0 for St. Mike's. Barwick ran the kick back to the Trinity thirty and led by Dave Smith and Wally Kostiw, the Red and Black squad moved to the St. Mike's thirty-five. Fletcher squelched the Trinity drive on the next play, intercepting Whyte's pass and running back to the forty. St. Mike's drove to the Trinity forty-five where they kicked after two unsuccessful tries at the line. Barwick fumbled but recovered on the two. On third down Gordon's kick was taken at the Trinity twenty-five. From here Priestner caught a pass on the three, and Wood carried over on the next play. Connelly again converted to make the score 12-0 at half-time.

Trinity's kick-off was returned to the St. Mike's forty and two plays later Fusca broke loose off tackle to run fifty-five yards to the Trinity five. Fusca then went over the line standing up and Connelly picked up his third point to make it 18-0. Kostiw ran the kick back to the Trinity forty-five and after an exchange of kicks it was Trinity's third down on their own twenty-five. Smith was onside and took Gordon's kick at the forty for a first down. An interference ruling gave Trinity another first down on the St. Mike's fifty. On third down, Pete Gordon hoisted a beautiful spiral kick which bounced over the deadline for Trinity's lone point.

Opening the fourth quarter, with two losses St. Mike's kicked to little Dave Smith at the thirty. The Double Blues took possession on an interference penalty to Trinity and on third down Kastersky elected to run and made a first down to the forty-two. After several smashes at the line and an exchange of kicks, Russell carried deep into Trinity territory to the ten. At this the Red and Black machine exhibited its strongest defence, but Fletcher scored on third down leaving the score at 23-1 The convert attempt was blocked, ending the game.

The St. Mike's win leaves Trinity one point off the pace in third position, and Forestry and St. Mike's in the play-offs for the Mulock Cup. The Double Blue team showed strength in all departments in yesterday's game and should definitely be reckoned with in the play-offs. Shoemaker, Saunderson and MacLeod were effective in a losing cause along the Trinity line, while the two Dave Smiths ran well out of the backfield. Bill Priestner and Al Cosgrove worked well along with Fusca and Kastersky for St. Mike's.

Just Like Pros

In this bit of action from yesterday's U.C.-S.P.S. interfaculty football game, two number 61's are seen making some progress for U.C. against Skule. The one on the left has tossed a Skuleman out of the way of the ballcarrier (number 61 on the right). It was one of the few occasions U.C. got anywhere as S.P.S. dropped the Redmen 42-1.

Engineers Score Often To Eliminate UC Tigers

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The power-packed Combine squad from the School of Science finished its interfaculty football season with a flourish on the back campus yesterday as they scored almost at will in smothering University College 42-1.

Now that the mighty Skulemen have cleaned up Group One with six straight wins, their next step is the Mulock Cup semi-finals next Monday at Varsity Stadium, when they will meet the second-place team from Group Two, Forestry, in the first game of a double-header. St. Mike's tackle Victoria in the other segment of the twin bill in preparation for Wednesday's Mulock clash.

Before the game, the UC Tigers had a meagre mathematical chance of squeezing past Vic into the playdowns but it didn't take the Skulemen long to shatter these hopes. With quarterback Don Hart heaving long and often behind an almost impenetrable wing-line, the Skule machine gathered momentum as it went along, leading 8-1 at the half and then cutting loose in the second half.

Cal Weaver scored two touchdowns to lead the S.P.S onslaught. Gord Crandall, George Kelly, Ron Lyons, Jim Moulton and Don Hart got the others. Hart and Bruce Day kicked singles and Earl Ford converted five of the touchdowns.

The Redmen actually started the game quite auspiciously. After they received the kickoff at their own 35, their speedy quarterback, Jerry Hugo sneaked 20 yards. Skule nailed him for a 10-yard loss on the next play and then UC's Thompson quick-kicked a single. Shortly after the scond quarter began, Hart completed a 50-yard passing play to George Lewsis with play ending up on the U C 25 where Skule kicked a single to tie the score. Soon afterwards, Hart passed 20 yards to Weaver who went another 20 to score and the contest was as good as over.

The Empty And Blind

Many of you have accused us of being idealists. Those of you who favour imperialism and thought-control have called us empty and blind. Perhaps we are. But this blindness is better far, we believe, than the retrogression and bondage you offer.

We know it is dynamite now to dream. We know it is a time of hot and cold and moderate wars. If there is war, we shall go to it, and fight, as many of us have done in the last one, and our fathers did before us. Nor shall we mind too much the shedding of our blood nor heed the slogans, made meaningless by you, the so-called realists. But for ourselves, and not for others, we will want to know the reasons for the bloodshed and the dying. And that is why we are idealists.

We shall always believe that war is neither a means nor an end. Because we do not expect to solve in one fierce slaughter of men the problems that trouble mankind, we shall never come back and whine that we have failed. We have always had war, and will probably have it again and again. But ultimate progress, we believe, and the solution to the troubles of today lie deeper and hidden in the hearts and the conscience of free men. We know it takes centuries, but we can wait. After all, ideas and ideals are immortal. And that is why we are idealists.

Our present task is clear: to counteract the trends that flow in modern life, and dull that conscience and that heart, and cheapen the general character of man. These trends, working on each of us, slowly breed hate, and war, and decadence: The substitution of the concept of prosperity for that of freedom; of dependence for self-reliance: of show for solidity; of luxury for simplicity; of success for integrity; of holding impression above thought, fact above idea; mediocrity or "normality" above excellence. These trends are not easy to detect. Some even seem desirable. But they are a danger to ourselves and a menace to mankind, and we must guard against them personally. And that is why we are idealists.

The cancer of totalitarianism is spreading on both sides of out divided world. Ideas of slavery can be fought only with ideas of freedom. In the present struggle for the minds of free people, mankind can use no guns, no bombs — only ideals and ideas. And that is why we are idealists.

And also, because it is our deepest conviction that a man cannot far go wrong in doing his personal best, small or great, toward the general good.

One expects to hear the board of Governors labeled as a band of financiers. One expects to see them held up as leaders in letters and arts, as indicated in a letter today. The Varsity only hopes that they cannot be accused of being involved in politics.

Party Planks

A Round-Table

In order to present the facts behind each of the political parties to appear on the ballot in tomorrow's election, The Varsity has here printed the party platforms.

Liberal

A few of the major policies that have enabled Canada under a Liberal government to stand out unique in the world:

FOREIGN POLICY—The Liberal Party supports

(1) The United Nations and all its related organizations.
(2) The N.A.T.O. alliance, all military and economic obligations.
(3) Increased aid in the Colombo plan for the economic development of Democratic Asia.
(4) Reduction and removal of trade barriers wherever possible.
(5) The shipment of surplus wheat to the Far-Eastern Countries.
(6) Recriprocal trade agreements with Commonwealth countries and U.S.

DOMESTIC POLICY:

(1) The Liberal party has inaugerated Old Age Pensions, Family Allowances, Blind and Disabled Pensions, Unemployment Insurance, etc.
(2) The Liberal party supports a Universal Contributory Health scheme to be administered by all provinces. Until provincial-wide agreement is achieved, we will continue to support provincial health grants.
(3) The Liberals support an extensive policy of planned immigration with regard to the Displaced Persons problem and the future development of Canada.
(4) The Liberals will continue to reduce taxes in proportion to increase in national income.
(5) The government will continue to plan and subsidize national housing developments.
(6) The government will build the St. Lawrence Seaway, Trans-Canada Highway, and further the development of improving transportation.

NEW LIBERAL POLICY as outlined in the "Speech from the Throne"

(1) Revision of the Criminal Code.
(2) Revision of the Canada Bank Act to make more money available for home building and other economic developments.
(3) Increase in benefits for the Blind and Disabled, and Veterans.
(4) Committee to work with the provinces for a method of amending the B.N.A. Act.
(5) Committee to study possible Senate reform.

We are in opposition to: the irresponsible, sectional platforms of the Conservative and Isolationistic elements within Canada; the extreme irrationalities of the pseudo-socialists whose idealistic platforms are so far removed from reality as to be impossible.

In our country where the pull of geography and of social differences is toward division, the Liberal party stands for UNITY.

In a world where security for men and women is rare and precious, the Liberal party stands for SECURITY.

At a time when freedom continues to be menaced by tendencies towards dictatorship and totalitarianism, the Liberal party continues to stand for FREEDOM.

Prog Conservative

In the past, Conservative administrations have rendered great services to Canada in the cause of unity and progress. The first government of Canada was Conservative, the government of Confederation. Conservative administration brought the C.P.R., the C.N.R., the Canadian Wheat Board and the Civil Service Commission into being. They were the first to recognize trade unions, and the first to send diplomatic representation abroad. It was under a Conservative government that universale male suffrage and votes for women were introduced.

It is in the spirit that we present our platform to you and solicit your vote.

1. Senate: Reform of the Senate into a functioning body that will play a useful part in modern government.

2. Taxes: Elimination of hidden taxes, reduction of taxes by eliminating waste and extravagance exempting students working during the summer months from paying income tax.

3. Reducing the voting age to eighteen to encourage young Canadians to take a more active part in Canadian politics.

4. Massey Report: We will impliment the recommendations in the Massey Report, especially those referring to scholarships.

5. Unemployment Insurance: We will exempt students from paying unemployment insurance.

6. Flag: Adoption of a distinctive Canadian flag.

7. Supremacy of Parliament: We will restore supremacy of Parliament by repealing the Emergency Powers Act and putting an end to government by secret order-in-council.

8. Trade: We will shift our emphasis on foreign trade from the unpredictable markets of the United States to the more stable markets of Britain and the Commonwealth.

9. International Relations: We fully support N.A.T.O., the Colombo Plan, the United Nations and its subordinate organizations set up for the preservation of peace and the improvement of social and economic conditions throughout the world.

When we have suggested needed improvements and demanded action, the Liberals have it "It can't

Labor Progressive

What is the decisive issue facing Canada today? It is whether the Canadian people will win back the independence of their country which has been almost completely lost to United States imperialism. Canadian monopoly capital, for a quick profit, has been selling control of our basic industries to the American trusts. The Labor Progressive Party feels that it is around the question of Canadian independence that the future political battles of Canada will be fought; that this question will pervade the whole development of Canadian history up to the establishment of socialism.

THE EFFECTS OF THIS POLICY of sellout can be seen quite plainly in the economic, political and cultural life of Canada. The American trusts own vast quantities of our raw materials and send these to be processed in the United States.

Politically, all of Canada's recent development has been in the direction of curtailment of parliamentary democracy. The supremacy of Parliament has been lost, for now the Liberals run Canada through Orders-in-Council under the Emergency Powers Act. The Canadian people, including the students, have already raised their voices strongly against the anti-democratic Bill 93 and against importation of McCarthyism into Canada.

AMERICAN PENETRATION IS STUNTING the growth of our Canadian culture. Television is being flooded by American programs. American magazines, crimes and sex comics fill our newsstands. The Canadian people have not meekly accepted this, but have and are fighting back as is shown by the demand for an all-Canadian grandstand show at the C.N.E.

But there is another side to this picture. This side is one of an independent and peaceful Canada without dominance of the United States. If we would embark on policies of expanding our industries, trading with the whole world—then our science and culture would florish as never before. This could be the land envisaged by MacKenzie, Papineau, Riel and all those who in the past struggled to make Canada free.

The Labour Progressive Party feels that all Canadians will join in this struggle. Under the slogan "PUT CANADA FIRST" the L.P.P. entered the last Federal election as the beginning of a movement that will soon involve millions of Canadians. The L.P.P. calls for a New National Policy to end subservience to the United States.

BUT TO END THIS SUBSERVIENCE the people must win a majority in Parliament. They must establish a people's coalition of workers, farmers and small business men, led by the working class, united under the slogans National Independence, Peace and Democracy.

The student of today can not sit idly by while events of importance to his future are taking place. If an independent Canada is not won, then he can only face the future with uncertainty. All students, therefore, should and must join in the struggle with all Canadians for the freedom and independence of our country.

CCF

A CCF vote in tomorrow's model parliament elections will be a vote for increased economic aid to underdeveloped countries, for a more equitable distribution of Canada's wealth through an improved system of social security, and, most of all, for a new social order based on the ideal of human brotherhood.

THE CCF IS PRESENTING to model parliament electors a program for Canadian leadership in international affairs which recognizes the need for military defence and collective security, but emphasizes that the real problems of the world today are political and economic. The peoples of Asia and Africa will no longer tolerate either political or economic subservience. Canada is in a position to give leadership to Western nations in aiding the rise of free, prosperous, non-Communist nations in these continents.

In particular, the CCF believes that a vast program of economic aid to underdeveloped areas of the world—of both technical and capital assistance—is needed. Such schemes must be undertaken now, despite the burden of rearmament already carried by Western nations.

BUT WHAT IS TAKING place in the underdeveloped areas is a political as well as an economic revolution. If this revolution is to inherit some of the values of the West and achieve its own ends, if it is not to be corrupted and diverted from its purpose by Soviet Communism, western nations including Canada must recognize it and support it.

Support for the position of India in world affairs, recognition of Red China and the settlement of disputes with colonial peoples on terms that look towards immediate political freedom are instances of what should be done. Canada, as a non-colonial power is free to take a lead. Such steps have more to offer in the long run than dependence on resurrected German, Japanese and Spanish armed force as a protection against Communism. Arms alone are not enough; and only the CCF is advocating Canadian leadership in other fields of international action.

AT HOME, CANADIANS FACE the real threat of a recession this winter. The CCF believes that national planning of the flow of in-

CAMPUS VOTES TODAY

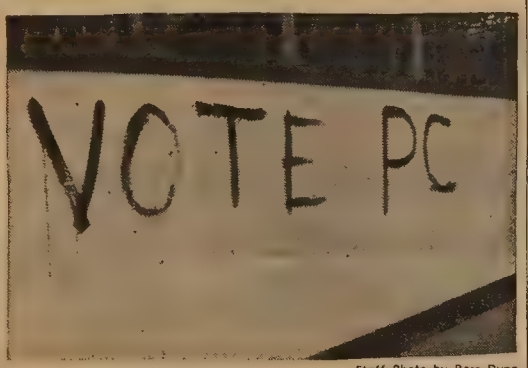
Four Parties Contest Majority Control Of Parliament At Stake

University of Toronto students will exercise their voting privileges today, when they choose the party which will form the government in the Model Parliament.

There will be four parties seeking the students' votes; they are Progressive Conservatives, Liberals, CCF and LPP. The Model Parliament was first established in 1950; it was then called the Mock Parliament. The Parliament is based on a 90-seat legislature, the parties receiving seats in proportion to the student vote they receive.

The parliament is held in Queen's Park, and all the rules of parliamentary procedure are used. The winning party's leader becomes the Prime Minister and a Cabinet is chosen of the party's best speakers who usually sit at the fromt of the house. The Party coming second is the official opposition, and their leader the Leader of the Opposition.

The Parliament will meet for three nights to discuss the platform of the Government, and vote on it. In the past on several occasions the Government has been defeated, creating some very interesting situations.



Campaigning has been going on all week at the mock parliament committee meetings, at which each party has been presenting its platform.

The polling booths will be open from 10-2:00 today. Ballot boxes will be placed in the four Arts colleges, St. Mike's, UC, Trinity, and Victoria, plus the Faculty of Medicine, the Economics Building, the Dental Building, and Skule House; the polling booths will be in the main entrances of all these buildings.

All students of the University are eligible to vote on presentation of their ATL cards. Joe Slogan, chairman of the Model Parliament Committee said, "Any ballots that are marked or defaced in any way shall be discounted, and that only an X beside the party designated will be accepted."

Results of the election will be announced at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room of University College. Afterwards Mr. Arthur J. Brown, chairman of the Board of Education and candidate for the mayorality of Toronto will speak in a panel discussion of the "Problems of Civic Government".

Political parties, even those on the campus, are liable to appropriate a platform at the drop of a hat. These pictures show what happened yesterday when certain campus parties found some platforms lying on their sides to hide excavations.

H H Cannon Blasted Off With Timer

The University campus was peaceful and quiet last night when a reverberating explosion shook doors and rattled windows. At ten-thirty an ingenious timing device set off the cannon to the south of the flagpole in front of Hart House.

As the report echoed out over Queen's Park. The glowing embers of the papers and magazines used to wad the charge could be seen for fifty feet in front of the muzzle. No one could be seen near the cannon after the explosion and the cannoneers remain anonymous.

The timing device consisted of batteries totalling twelve volts which supplied the necessary current to set off the charge. Contact was made by a beer can of acid, dripping into another can until it reached the points between two contact wires.

The cannon was last set off in March of 1951 and once before in 1939. The wooden plug was bored out to make room for the charge.

The cannons are rusty relics of a ship sunk at Louisburg in 1758, during the war between Britain and France for possession of Canada. The ship was a French warship named La Prudente.

In 1901 the cannons were raised from the bottom of the harbour and brought to Toronto. They were donated to the university by one of the graduating class of 1901.

When the cannon was exploded last, there was no damage done many of the windows in the immediate vicinity. The deafening explosion was heard then, as now, all over the campus. There was no damage to property this time though the ground in front of the cannon site was covered with burning bits of paper.

The smell of burnt gunpowder filled the air around the scene of the explosion and soon could be detected in the back of Hart House Theatre, where a performance of Skule Night was in progress.

Nose For News?

Metropolitan Paper Cries News But No Newshounds

How would you like to be a news reporter? Did you know that right under your very noses there was a paper with a visible circulation of close to ten thousand on which you could work?

Well, you can be a reporter and the paper being referred to is The Varsity. We need anyone who wants to write, wants to meet interesting people, and learn more about this university.

Experience is not necessary. The Varsity office, in the Observatory basement, has settled down after the rush of early-term organizing. More experienced members of the staff are now able to devote time to helping the writers with articles.

The leads are supplied and in following them up you will be surprised how many people you will meet and how interested you will find yourself in campus affairs. You'll also find that school work won't suffer because of our news system.

Workshops are held in The Varsity offices on Fridays at noon every week. These sessions are informal and highly informative and everyone benefits from them. The principles of newswriting, make-up and journalism in general are discussed and applied to the issues of the past week. Those who have lectures at 12:00 and 2:00 generally bring their lunches and eat them during the Workshop.

This is your paper and you'll find it a valuable and interesting experience working on it.

If you wish to take advantage of this opportunity drop in to the office and see either Grif Cunningham or Aubrey Golden.

Conference Called Off

The Toronto International Conference scheduled for this week-end has been cancelled. "Poor response from the Toronto Students, the rugby playoffs and the lateness of the Americans in replying have forced us to do this," said Harriet Thomson, IV UC, Week-end Chairman.

The week-end was to have included discussions on "The Concept of World Leadership" and "US Foreign Policy and World Leadership", a banquet in Hart House, tours, and parties.

"We hope to sponsor a similar week-end in late January perhaps at the Caledon Farms. At present all plans are tentative," said Miss Thomson.

See Stickers And Pickers Big Mystery

White gummed stickers with "Beat Western" on them in royal blue appeared on campus yesterday. They were stuck to doors, windows and car windshields.

The Blue and Write Society did not make them up or distribute them. Who did? The donor to the cause of school spirit has remained anonymous.

Chairman of the Blue and White, Paul Lorch commented, "It follows along the general pattern of the week-end 'Beat Western'. I think its a novel idea and good as long as it doesn't inconvenience anyone."

The Blue and White is busy winding up preparations for the coming weekend. There will be a roam-a-round dance on campus on Saturday night. The dances will be held in Brennan Hall, the Vic Union and the JCR at UC.

Plans for the rest of the time include the regular tea-dance at the Drill Hall following the game and a half-time demonstration.

Top Critic To Speak About Job

Women's Editor of Saturday Night, Margaret Ness will speak on "Theatre is News" today at 1:00 p.m. in Room 8, UC, in the second of a series of lectures on newspaper writing sponsored by The Varsity.

A graduate of University College in English and History she taught high school, did fashion advertising, and was a free-lance writer for American and English periodicals before switching to drama reviewing.

Miss Ness has been on the staff of Saturday Night for the past five years as drama reviewer before taking over as Women's Editor last January. Prior to this for one season she did theatre reviews for the Globe and Mail and has also written sketches for the New Play Society's annual "Spring Thaw".

During the time she taught high school she wrote a book on practical play suggestions intended primarily as an aid to secondary school drama teachers.

Part of a Varsity campaign to acquaint students with all fields of journalism, the lectures will also include talks on sportswriting and feature writing which will be given later in the series.

Walter Prystawski

It was a case of standing room only in the music room in Hart House yesterday where Walter Prystawski accompanied by Dr. George Brough gave the third in a series of Wednesday afternoon recitals. It was well worth it however, for the 20-year-old violinist gave a performance of such brilliance as to be worthy of far better known artists, and at the risk of being redundant and tremendous as well.

Mr. Prystawski opened the programme with Sonata in G Minor by Tartini, a work literally overflowing with beautiful melodies and "meaty" passages. He took full advantage of the possibilities of the music, playing with a sincerity and understanding that was a joy to behold. The last movement was especially note-worthy for its clean phrasing, deep regard for dynamics and dramatic significance. In short Prystawski possesses a rare faculty, that of a secure bow-arm perfected well beyond his years.

That he was not infallible was proven in the second selection when we saw the limitations of an artist come of age technically but not artistically. I realize that the Sonata No. 3 in D Minor is a very demanding work both technically and artistically, and I am sure that both the artist and Brahms realized it too—which leads me to comment "nice try". Undoubtedly in a few years critics will be screaming—"bravo!"

Prystawski concluded the performance with the grand-daddy of all showpieces, the Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso by Saint Saens. He was most astonishing in the last few bars which he took at a tempo faster than I have ever heard Heifitz play it. I can only add —wow.

UBC Texts 100% Higher

Vancouver, Nov. 3 — (CUP) — An editorial in the UBC campus newspaper has said that text books at UBC cost "up to 100 per cent more than they do at the University of Washington, not many miles away. The Canadian tariff accounts for a part of the increase, but this is not the major cause."

The editorial blames the Canadian agents of American publishing firms, who "mark up the price of the books about 20 per cent."

The editor terms this policy a "shameful situation," and calls on NFCUS to "exert pressure on the American firms . . . who would be prevailed upon to revise their contracts with the Canadian agents."

It remains only to say a word of the accompanist. I think that word might be—satisfying, for as I left the hall I felt just that—satisfied.

Fence Painting Disclaimed PC's Condemn Childishness

The Progressive Conservative Club yesterday disclaimed all responsibility for the "Vote P.C." slogans painted on construction fences around campus. "Those sort of tactics are pretty lowly," said president of PC Club Joe Slogan, adding, "We don't have to paint fences or destroy property."

The paintings took place sometime Tuesday night. The words "Vote PC" are painted in red and black on the construction fences erected in front of the new library wing and the new Trinity chapel.

The executive of the organization which is competing in to-day's election has released the following statement.

"The executive of the Conservative Club denies that any person affiliated with our organization had any part in the idiotic plastering with paint of the construction fence around the library. It further feels that whoever did paint the fence with a Conservative slogan intended to discredit the club in the eyes of the students. We have our official posters; our campaign does not involve the destruction of property."

Complaints of "willful destruction", "defacing property" and "childish trash" were heard around the campus as students viewed the painted fences.

Some students reported seeing a group of persons wandering around the campus last night but none

The fence around the construction of the new library wing was already painted over once to eliminate the Skule Night advertising covering it. The Trinity chapel fence did not have any paint on it at all previous to that applied Tuesday night.

The campaign for the Mock Parliament reached its highest point yesterday as posters were put up for the various parties running. There was a sound truck travelling along Hoskin and Bloor yesterday.

The Model Parliament Committee is running the Mock Parliament as a branch of the Political Economy club.

BC Students Heckle LPP Then Leave

Vancouver, Oct. 27—(CUP)—Several hecklers were "asked to leave" a meeting of the University of British Columbia LPP club. The heckling students had interrupted the speaker until "The crowd itself showed distaste for their actions."

As the hecklers were leaving the crowd threw lunches and jeers at them.

The meeting was held to outline the policies of the LPP Club. The students council of UBC had already "turned down" the constitution of the club, asking them to amend it and present it to the council at its next meeting.

U of T Club Studies UN In Operation

The United Nations was visited last week-end by 12 members of the university UN Club who went to see the work of the organization first hand.

The group was welcomed by the Canadian Deputy Minister of Welfare, Dr. Davidson. The students found their time filled with activities, ranging from observing meetings and taking tours to sight-seeing around New York.

On Friday morning they saw the Political Committee discuss disarmament and international control of atomic and destructive weapons. In the afternoon they observed the Third Committee of the General Assembly studying specific aspects of human rights.

"It is impossible to remain unimpressed by the contributions made by various countries to create this building and for Canadians not to be proud of the share contributed by Canada" said Sybil Logier, a member of the group.

Mr. Agar, of the Department of Public Information for the UN, answered the questions of the students about the world organization. Other men, both in the Canadian delegation and from other departments freely offered information and aid.

No time was wasted and the members of the group felt that they had made the most of their short stay in New York and that it was worthwhile.

Hart House archers were hosts to the OAC Archery Club on Tuesday, November 17th. This is the first in a Home-and-Home series. The return match will be held at Guelph on January 15. The local archers were triumphant, shooitng an average score of 299 against 261 for OAC. High scores for the match were posted by Gord. May 496 (HH), Alf Kalns 408 (HH) and Nels King 30 (OAC).

World Labor Group Is Worthwhile – Ives

The International Labor Organization, despite certain faults, such as cutting across a nation's rights, has great possibilities for good, said Senator Irving Ives, president of last year's conference at Geneva, to the Canadian students visiting Cornell last weekend.

In 1919 the ILO was founded as an affiliate with the League of Nations to fill a vacuum to raise the standard of living and to better industrial and religious relations, said the Republican Senator from New York, to a group of Cornellians and Canadian weekend exchange students at Cornell University, last weekend. There are 66 nations in the organization who sed four delegates each to the annual convention. Two of the members represent the government, one the workers, and one the employers. There is a governing body and a permanent secretariat composed of eight government representatives, and eight employee representatives. Each delegation sends several advisers who are vital for conferences.

"The ILO is not a super-government," said the Senator. "It's jurisdiction is limited by the powers granted by the member nations." Its basic purpose is to raise wages, improve hours and working conditions, said Ives, but he added that the American standards were as high or higher than any of the measures supported by the ILO.

He admitted that the U.S. had been delinquent in joining (they joined in 1934), and should have ratified the treaty of Versailles. Russia was a member, but dropped out. "She is trying to rejoin, but is demanding a veto which would destroy the effectiveness of the organization," said Ives. Unless there is a two-thirds vote in favour of letting Russia in on these terms, which is very unlikely, she will not get in.

He praised the high calibre of the delegations which included leading industrialists. "We must speak with independence and authority if we are to exercise the influence due to our position in the world," he said. "When the representatives are sent abroad," he added, "they should not have to call Washington for what to do. If the government has no confidence in their representatives they should not be appointed." He stressed the need for a permanent delegation, with a minister or ambassador in Geneva. "We Americans should play the part we are entitled to by our tradition and our achievements in the world," he said.

He said that he felt the foreign attitude with the exception of the Poles and the Czechs had been sincerely friendly. He said that these nations did not seem to be calculating, but wanted to do everything possible for themselves. "They only want aid and guidance in problems beyond their present abilities," he said.

He said the other nations are striving to reach American levels and will never be satisfied until they do, and for this reason the ILO is a great sounding board.

"As long as we can keep the little nations free to vote as they like, the world will be all right," he said.

Senator Ives is a trustee of Cornell, and was one of the founders, and first dean of the International Relations school in 1945. He has served in the Senate since 1947, and for seventeen years before that, he served in the New York State Assembly.

Arthur Brown To Talk On Municipal Problems

Arthur J. Brown will be the speaker at the Political Economy club, in a panel discussion of "Problems of Civic Government". The meeting will be held in the Junior Common Room at 4:00 today. The other members of the panel will be Norm Chambers II law, and Ann Cooling, I Law.

Brown will be a candidate for mayor in the forthcoming Toronto civic elections. He has served on the Toronto Board of Education for the last six years and this year he was chairman of the Board of Education until he resigned to compete in the mayorality race.

McMaster Asks Okay For Grant

Hamilton, November 6—(CUP)—On December 2, Hamilton ratepayers will be asked to approve a grant of $250,000 for a branch of McMaster University.

The grant will be used for a building fund for Hamilton College, the science college of the University.

The Hamilton College was started in 1948 and has since "dwarfed the older University College in size and capital investment."

The college includes Physics, Chemistry, Mathematics, Biology, Geology and Reasearch projects.

Why Wait?

Music And Charm

Just go upstairs, don't be afraid of the noise. It's only music. The kind you hear at football games, only distilled. It's a change, anyway.

The first thing you will notice (you can't help it) is the wooden ceiling. The architects of HH were apparently crazy about wooden ceilings, or perhaps they were just cra . . . ving for an atmosphere of age and austerity. They made sure you would also see their pretty little carved stone corbells of Elizabethan composers and instruments. When HH was built, those architects were up with the times.

The music committee is responsible.

The Elizabethan instruments, etc., are subected every second Wednesday afternoon to musical "activities" (ie. concerts). A few other people are also subjected, since several musicians have already performed to "standing room only." That is a special kind of room in which everyone is sitting except a few who are standing. Dorothy Johnson, pianist, and Jan Simons, baritone, (she sitting, and he standing) were among those artists. Net is Walter Prystawski who will appear and perform on Nov. 18 at 5 p.m., and on Dec. 5 a group of musicians from the Royal Conservatory of Music will spin some hot chamber music in the music chamber.

The selection of selections is made by the musicians themselves, a privilege they deserve. Something called Canadian talent is presented whenever possible. It is possible in the Music Room, as you have seen above. This Canadian talent, of course, does not include the Elizabethan composers and what not, probably because of union rules.

In case you want to be further endarkened, it might fill you with glee to the gills to discover that the HH Glee Club descends upon the room in a body from time to musical time, and promptly bursts into song, rehearsing a rehearsal.

Students with advanced knowledge of piano — whatever that is — can apply to the Undergraduate office for permission to practice on the Steinway instrument. The Steinway is strictly a prestige deal, since it takes up to nine months to buld one, and they sell (not just to anyone) for prices hovering dangerously near seven grand for a grand. So uneducated fingers are kindly asked to lay off and wreck their own grands.

At the end of every week, dances are held on the floor of the Music Room, which, strangely enough, is also made of wood, just like the ceiling. "I love that ceiling more, since it is a dancing floor," as the saying is among musicians and drunks. Maybe that's where it originated. You never know. The lights are dimmed during the dances in order not to let the Elizabethan composers see what is going on. They might be shocked.

On the walls hang parts of the largest collection of Canadian paintings in captivity, wth the exception of the National Gallery at Ottawa. It's a good place for them. Any Canadian artist is glad to hang, especially in Hart House, where he might be appreciated.

All students (women, of course, excepted) are welcome at all events, and urged to put forward suggestions for improvement. Only don't put them in the middle of an event ("standing room" or otherwise) no matter how great the temptation, because you won't be so welcome — at any events. And, what is worse, you might lose your seat.

Faculty Reps At UN Lack Mental Powers

Winnipeg, Nov. 3 — (CUP) — An editorial in the Manitoban has stated that the U of M students council has "Reached the point of near-autocracy." The student newspaper said that the Manitoba Students Union meetings are "Run by a small group of students . . . with the members of the faculty of law . . . doing well over 75 percent of the debating."

The editorial states that the solution to the problem does not lie in the disciplining of the law members, but rather in the awakening of interest by the other members of the Students Union. It said that said nothing all year, in meetings.

The members are described by the phrase "The simple procedure of asking a question has escaped the mental powers of a long list of faculty reps."

"It may safely be asserted that the Reserve System has been a powerful force toward business stability and toward the stability of employment." 1—W. Randolph Burgess, SURVEY GRAPHIC, April, 1929.

"It has not been sufficiently recognized that capital use requires special safeguards to keep cyclical tendencies within reasonable limits . . . guarantees of property rights must be tinged with concern for the maintenance of full productivity." — Norman J. Silberling, THE DYNAMICS OF BUSINESS, 1943.

"Unfortunately the 'art of central banking' which appears to have been but rule of thumb has been supplanted by an art of political money management, also rule of thumb and equally detached from the real issues of credit." — Sidney G. Murray, *MONEY AND BANKING: THE CANADIAN EXPERIENCE, November, 1952.

2. Business Cycles and Private Property: Bankruptcy of Economics.

The presidential address of the American Economic Association, 1951, averred "It — J. M. Keynes, THE GENERAL THEORY OF EMPLOYMENT, INTEREST AND MONEY, New York, 1936 — is a recast version of the quantity theory of money." As former presidents of the Association occupy advisory positions with the central bank and with the executive branch of government, and as action speaks louder than words it is appropriate to ask whether there is evidence in the last nine months of fundamental change from the quantity ideas of their predecessors.

Since 1946 (end of World War II) federal debt (United States government) has decreased slightly. But corporation debt (all corporations subject to tax) has doubled from $85.3 billion to $164.4 billion. Noncorporation and non-farm private debt expanded two and a half times in these six years. For instance automobile loans rose from $900 million to $6.7 billion between the ends of 1946 and 1952 and loans on major household appliances and furnishings rose from $3.2 billion during the same period. These two classifications account for almost two-thirds of consumer credit. (Department of Commerce, SURVEY OF CURRENT BUSINESS, September, 1953. The New York Times, October 4, 1953.

What has happened? A major war has been fought in Korea without expansion of the federal government debt. By the device of additional amortization write-offs under certificates of necessity for defence facilities, the government clamor for expansion in basic capacity pushed a major part of the cost of the Korean war upon private organizations which, unlike the federal government, cannot write their own cheque. The consequence is business, large and small, has gotten into an illiquid position in relation to current and accrued liabilities. While the process began several years ago, it was given a great impetus by this method of financing the Korean war; an impetus which has continued almost up to the present. Throughout this period economic leadership has been entirely lacking in government, in the central bank and in "the brain trust".

In this situation Economics has only two things to offer: the theory of Karl Marx with the end of private property under the seduction of people's democracy, or the theory of Maynard Keynes with periodic great depressions, as in 1929 and 1953, followed by a hair of the dog that bit us.

1—Unfortunately governments and central banks do not have it in their power to prevent a major depression at this time, or even to check the flood of immediate liquidation—except temporarily, say, during the summer of 1954 — impending in all important markets, not security markets only.

POGO

Cowbird Watchers—

POGO by Walt Kelly, Simon and Schuster, $1.00.

It is a rare author who is able to capture the slavish adoration of virtually millions of readers, by the sheer personality of his works. The possibility becomes even more remote for a cartoonist to do this. And yet the apparently inconceivable has come to pass; have you ever heard of Walt Kelly? Have you ever heard of "Pogo"?

For some people "Popo" is the paragon of the comic strip, yet with others their reaction is unfortunately negative. Fans of "Pogo" call Kelly the greatest satirist since Swift and his latest book, The Pogo Papers amply bears this out.

Kelly's genius lies in his ability to combine the art of a skilled commentator on society. With Pogo comes the first real attempt to use the comic strip for a purpose other than entertainment. Satire of Americana literature through these means he has struck gold.

Although this element of satire exists throughout, chuckles are a dime a dozen. Kelly has made full use of his ability to satirize humans with animal forms. these means he has struck gold.

To say that Kelly's characters are "just animals" approaches the realm of the indecent. They are people—warm, vibrant, living personalities. You meet Albert every day; Porky may be your bosom friend or your severest critic; Mamzel Hepzibah is the flirtatious little co-ed with the baby blue eyes. And who is Churchy la Femme but that pliable, completely irrational type who inevitably says the wrong thing at the wrong time. Any resemblance between Simple Joe Malarkey and the gentleman from Wisconsin is purely intentional. And Pogo—?

Pogo is the kind-hearted, unspoiled, even-tempered little chap that you wish you were.

The dialogue in Pogo, while not exactly the King's English, is nevertheless not completely comic strip style. Kelly's skillful use of always too meaningful, is always five dollar words, althought not good for a laugh.

Kelly's poetry verges on T. S. Eliot, except it is even more obscure. Yet even it could have a hidden meaning.

Printing a comic strip in book form, other than the comic book is a new venture, that no other cartoonist has ever dared to venture before. "The Pogo Papers" being fourth of the series proves the popularity of the Pogo series. Perhaps Pogo could be considered a new trend in American Literature; an attempt to present serious thoughts in an easily assimilated manner, while at the same time providing a great deal of entertainment. It is an idea that certainly has possibilities. Perhaps in the not too distant future our children will be studying Pogo in their English courses at the University of Toronto.

Is it possible that you are among the uninitiated? Or can it be that you are so depraved as to lightly dismiss this classic as being merely "A comic strip"? If by some process of reasoning you are one of these infidels, you owe it to your conscience to invest a buck in the latest and greatest of the four Pogo collections.

Are you interested in communists? Meet the Cowbirds. Are you concerned about MacCarthyism? Meet the bird watcher himself. Like baseball? Have a grandstand seat at the "Whirled Series." And so on, ad infinitum.

Robert Cunningham.

Emily Carr Collection Of Animal Sketches

THE HEART OF A PEACOCK,

To those who know Emily Carr only as an artist this book will come as somewhat of a surprise. Writing, however, had always interested her as seen by the numerous sketch books and journals found, after her death, in a large trunk. Collected in "The Heart of a Peacock" are several of these sketches. Birds and animals are the chief actors in her stories. Her experiences taming wild creatures, from her early childhood throughout her life are related with keen perception and a whimsical sense of humor. Certainly they were a weird colection of "beasties". Everything from a baby vulture and a playful baboon to a white rat named Suzie were welcomed into the warmth of her heart.

In a few words at the beginning of "Woo's Life", the story of the Javanese monkey, she explains her purpose: "I have not tried to write a book of funny monkey stories . . . . I have tried to show the apparent reaction of my particular monkey to domestic life and to humans and the reaction of humans and domestic creatures to Woo . . . . who lived under close, loving observation in my home for thirteen of the fifteen years of her life." Thus we see her interest in natural observation. Mingled with this scientific spirit is the artist's appreciation of beauty. In her sketches describing the eagles of Mt. Vestovius and the Skenna River this blend of feelings is especially apparent.

Like Albert Schweitzer, "reverence for life" was her creed. Repeated again and again in her writing is this pervading sentiment. In the passage describing the parson who rented the studio in her absence, a glimmer of this feeling is seen. "In my absence a parson occupied the studio and wrote sermons there. He closed the wall-cracks with newspaper to keep out the singing wind, and caught the mice in traps."

The bulk of Miss Carr's work is autobiographical, and in this book are sensitive sketches of her childhood as Small, and brief mentions of her days as the landlady of a boarding-house, so amusingly related in "The House of All Sorts".

Included, too, in this collection are a few stories of human situations and problems, and amongst these are two tales of West Coast Indian life. She is much more at home in these, recounting Indian superstition and misery, than in the story of an ordiary family written in the modern idiom, which falls flat at the end. Breathing through her Indian stories is the spirit of British Columbia, that which also lives in her paintings of totem poles. Klee Wyck as Emily Carr is known understands the Indian temperament, their passions and their fears. The dialogue is convincing and effective in establishing the atmosphere of primitive life. In various sketches she bewails the effect that tourists and commerical interests have had on the Indian. Her awareness of the sociological implications of this contact with the white man makes such sections of the book significant.

Emily Carr's style throughout is homespun and conversational. To the reader she establishes herself immediately, as a live, vital person, who sits at the other side of a tea table, perhaps, and reminisces about the incidents which made her happy or heart-broken as Small. We see her sisters Elder and Bigger, and her father who did not always understand, through a child's eyes, and are cheered with Miss Carr by her memories. "The Heart of a Peacock" is quiet Sunday afternoon reading, which will give the reader satisfaction and pleasure.

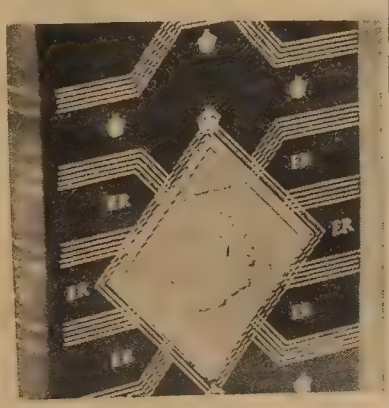
WITH WOODCUTS

Coming Down The Seine

COMING DOWN THE SEINE, by Robert Gibbings, Dents, 3.50.

Robert Gibbings' latest offering to his public is a pleasantly light little book entitled Coming Down the Seine. It records his trip, largely by rowboat, down the length of that river from its source in a valley of the Cote d'Or to the Havre. The book is not a travel story in the usual way but a rambling record of the author's thoughts while travelling.

Mingled with descriptions of the beauty of the countryside along the Seine are miscellaneous bits of information about its history, country legends, anecdotes about the people he meets which lead to further anecdotes about people he met somewhere else. He indulges in occasional philosophic digressions and much conversation about art and artists; he is himself one of their company — the book is illustrated with the charming woodcuts which are his favourite medium.



Mr. Gibbings has an Irish fondness for telling tales (he is an Irishman and a patriotic one) and h edoes it remarkably well. His stories are often not particularly relevant but they are always well-told — sometimes amusing, sometimes gently pathetic. It is a chatty and personal style which Mr. Gibbings has adopted and his stories are personal as well, in all sorts of moods as varying as the weather.

Through the book runs an agreeable strain of quiet humour, of points well-taken and oddities blandly pointed out. The author is interested and diverted by everything he meets, wherefore tiny details assume a colourful importance and give his work a vivid liveliness.

The rambling thoughts of a rambling author seems to sum up the book's impression—thoughts which play with everything he meets and bring it into focus as something very human, seen by a man of wise penetration.

There is the possible objection that Mr. Gibbings is a bit of an egotist—but in a book with so personal an approach it would be strange if the author's personality did not obtrude. We are being shown the Seine through his eyes and his prejudices are important to him — and to us, for they colour our view of what we see. It is a pleasant colouring, I feel, and adds much to make a pleasant book.

MAUROIS WRITES AGAIN

Lelia, The Life Of George Sand

By ANDRE MAUROIS

LELIA, THE LIFE OF GEORGE SAND, Translated from the French by Gerard Hopkins, Harper Brothers, $5.50.

"She was ever a woman of extremes — imprudent, ardent, violent, with lucid intervals of simple human charity and a basically simple common sense." Thus Maurois sums up the character of George Sand.

The last book which Maurois wrote was about the much-disputed French author, Marcel Proust. Through Proust's admiration of Sand's writing he was incited to examine the much-discussed life of George Sand. Again, he has succeeded in writing a work that is not only extremely readable, but extensive horizontally and vertically.

He has written with the understanding that comes of affection.

"From the very first moment Aurelien de Seze fell in love with her. Who would not have done? he says. But his sympathy with her has not blinded him either to her personal or literary faults. He is at once friend, biographer and critic.

Evident of the modern trend in biographies is the psychological approach to the understanding of the motivation behind the bare facts of her life. He traces her ancestry back to establish her heritage and show its part in influencing her actions. He follows her early show of talent and the milieu of ideas in which she lived at home and in the convent of the English Augustinians.

Never does he make a statement without backing it up with evidence from primary sources. He has pursued knowledge of her wherever he might find it: in her own writings in previous biographies, in the archives, in magazines and in letters. Although his writing is scholarly it does not become tedious or dry, such is the warmth of his interest in another human being.

In following her many loves he maintains an admirable impartiality without passing any personal judgment on her behavior except by implication and without taking sides in the many quarrels that have arisen blaming either her conduct or that of her lover. He just presents the facts, honestly but not luridly.

Much of the interest of this biography is due to the fact that Maurois makes of it more than a particular case history. He lifts it into the realm of the universal by his inferences about the whole of human nature, and the nature of creative writing. Still, as a woman, I cannot help resenting some of the sweeping insults which he throws at the feminine sex, and which are of his own personal judgment. However, in the case of this woman, so masculine in mental outlook, perhaps the man's point of view is quite suitable.

The title is significant as a work of George Sands, in which she deals with the problems of the senses. The heroine of Lelia, who is usually identified with Aurore Dupin alias George Sands, suffers from a maternal yet passionate desire to love absolutely, but is continually frustrated in this desire as lover after lover fails to awaken her from her physical impotence.

With the richness of diversity Maurois treats each individual phase of her life: her childhood with her grandmother, her education at the convent and desire to become a nun, her unhappy marriage, the long list of lovers too numerous to name, her literary development, maturity and peace of old age as a grandmother. Everything is viewed from so many different angles that, although he establishes a general pattern for her life, he does not fall into the sophistry of over-simplification.

The language of the book is rich with literary cross-references and imagery from the fertility of the author's mind. The translation reads very easily with no trace of awkwardness or hint of French construction. But in his efforts to make it thoroughly English in idiom, Mr. Hopkins has used the occasional slang expression which jars in a work of this nature.

In my opinion Andre Maurois has accomplished what he purports to do in the preface: to write the best-yet life of this fascinating woman.

BRING THE YATES BACK

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

OVERCONFIDENCE

There's nothing like overconfidence to kill a team. The Blues can tell you. They can remember a comfortable 10-point lead that they blew in London this year to lose 13-10 through overconfidence. Poor linebacking was also a factor in that loss but the Blues' overconfidence probably played the biggest part in the Western win.

Last year, the Blues lost the Yates and some people will tell you that overconfidence killed Varsity. The final game of the season for the Blues was against Western at Varsity Stadium. A win by the Mustangs would mean the Yates while a Toronto tie or win would end things for Western as far as the intercollegiate championship was concerned. Western came onto the field rated as the underdogs while Varsity were the overconfident strong favourites. After it was all over, the Mustangs enjoyed a victory celebration in their dressing room with a proud John Metras looking on.

WORD TO THE WISE

A word to the wise is usually sufficient. The Blues are a good defensive football team on the record of the season. The points-against column reads 21 points scored by the opposition in six games for an average of 3.5 points per game. In the last four games, the Blues allowed only one point, a single by the Gaels' Frank Geard in Kingston last Saturday. Until then Varsity had gone 235 minutes without a point scored against them.

Offensively, Toronto need not take a back seat to anyone. In their six games the Blues whipped up points-for total of 102 or an average of 17 per game. That's a fair batting average in anyman's league. All the more reason for Varsity to get overconfident, if they're not so smart.

MORE REASONS

You don't have to go too far for more good reasons for the Blues to get overconfident and think that Western will be a push over.

The Blues have won two of three games against their bitter rivals over the season. On was a pre-season game. The fact that the Blues looked good in 2¼ of those games is yet another possible reason for cockiness.

Add to this the fact that Varsity has probably the best backfield in the league and you have worked up a good case for the Blues to waltz the Yates back to Hart House.

METRAS WOULD LIKE

Somehow the McGill upset by the Mustangs doesn't smell as good as it would seem. It would be just like Metras to hope that the Blues would think Western had slipped after McGill won on Saturday. A bit of psychological warfare would be just what Metras might like. After all it couldn't possibly hurt the Mustangs if the Blues were helped along to think Western had suddenly become the weak sister of the league.

WHAT BENNY THINKS

One-eyed Benny is the only one that will come up with a prediction for the game. As Benny would put it, "If the Blues get in at the start and play a ball game instead of getting overconfident, the smart money will be with them. If the Blues do get overconfident and think Western a pushover, then the smart people will be celebrating with the Mustangs in the Western dressing room after the game."

Title Would Be Third For Blues Since War

Western Mustangs will invade Varsity Stadium on Saturday to do battle with the University of Toronto Blues with the Yates Trophy, emblem of Senior Intercollegiate champions going to the winner . A win for Varsity will give the men of coach Bob Masterson their third championship in eight tries since the last war.

The Blues started at their training camp on the edge of Lake Couchiching near Orillia. When the call to training camp went out, Joe Harris, and Hank Tamowski of last year's team were practising with Ottawa of the Big Four. Before the inter-collegiate season was two games old Harris had decided to go to OCE and threw in his efforts with the Blues. Bill Bewley left to play with the Calgary Stampeders of the Western Inter-provincial but returned to OCE, ineligible for Intercollegiate play and with a broken jaw sustained playing in the wild and woolly west. Dunc Ellis had turned out with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats and Gerry Sutherland had graduated from OCE and Ray Yakasovich was unable to play thanks to illness during the previous spring.

On the credit side of the ledger, Oli Mandryk returned from Balmy Beach along with ends Gene Chorestecki and Fred Smale after a year's absence. Ed Skrzypek moved up from the Intermediates to strengthen the quarterback slot. Veterans Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney, Bill McFarlane, Al Haig, Bob Kimoff returned to the backfield while Bruce Johnson, Bill Horton, and Don Smith were the veteran ends that returned. Frank Palermo, Baz Mackie, Alex Macklin and Roy McMurtry helped fill the holes that were in the line as the result of the departure of Harris, Sutherland and the like.

A game bunch of Intermediates showed up for the first practice including Bob Waugh, Joe Scime, Phil. Muntz and Pete Maik.

In their first game of the season, the Blues lost a thriller to Balmy Beach of the ORFU by the score of 23-16. Bob Kimoff was injured in the Beach game leaving a big gap at the fullback slot. Kimoff was lost for the rest of the season. As it turned out, Phil Muntz, who was up from the intermediates of the previous season filled in adequately for Kimoff over the season. Muntz quickly became the best offensive back in college ball.

In their second pre-season game the Blues romped to an 11-1 win over the Western Mustangs. Steve Oneschuk scored a field goal and a single, Al Haig kicked two singles and Bobby Dale scored the only touchdown of the game.

In their first regular season game, the Blues came from behind a 6-0 half time Queen's lead to win 16-7. The win established Toronto as a scoring power as Olie Mandryk tossed touchdown passes to Steve Oneschuk and Bob Pinkney.. Bill McFarlane scored the other Toronto major while Oneschuk converted Pinkney's TD.

The following week, the Little Memorial Stadium jinx continued to reign over Varsity as Gino Fracas led the Western Mustangs from behind to a 13-10 win. Again Olie Mandryk tossed a touchdown pass to Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz picked up a Western fumble on Al Haig's kick to go over for a major.

From this point the Blues started a string of wins that stretched to four games and saw the opposition score only one point in 240 minutes of ball. In Toronto the Blues scored a 24-0 shutout over the McMaster Marauders and then moved into Montreal to claim a one-sided 34-0 win off the Redmen of Vic Obeck. Oneschuk was the star of the game with the Redmen, scoring three touchdowns and converting all five of the Blues' TD's.

The following week, London moved to Toronto for the Western-Blues game which was played on a snow-c-overed field before about ten thousdan fans who braved the wintry weather. The Blues shut out the Mustangs 12–0 to tie for first place in the league standings. Ted Kennedy and Phil Muntz scored the two Toronto majors and Steve Oneschuk converted both.

Last Saturday, of course, Toronto edged a plucky Queen's University squad while Western was losing to McGill thus ending the season in first place. In Kingston, Bill McFarlane played probably his best game for the Blues while scoring the winning touchdown. Steve Oneschuk converted.

The final standings read Toronto, Western, Queen's, McGill and McMaster. Thus the playoff between Western and Toronto is to be played at Varsity Stadium this Saturday. Actually, after the Western game in Toronto, a coin was tossed to decide the location of the play-off in the event that there was a final tie for first place in the standings between Toronto and Western. The game on Saturday starts at 1:30 sharp.

UC Jr-Sr, Saints Win B-Ball Meets

The women's basketball schedule has been speeded up as late with four games slated nightly in the UTS and OCE gyms. Last night the first two battles took place between Vic and Saint Hilda's frosh and UC jr.-sr. against Saint Hilda's seniors.

The senior match was highlighted by some fast scoring and excellent guarding on the part of UC who won by a 39-4 margin. Peg. Stoddart who tallied 11 for the winning team opened the scoring and at the end of the first half, they were ahead 11-3. Penny Ketchum tallied the sole basket for the losers. Mary Graw was high scorer for the meet gaining 12 for UC. UC looked a bit sloppy on covering during the first quarter by managed to outwit their opponents well enough, in fact to beat them by such a large difference.

While these two colleges were battling it out in the OCE gym, Vic and Saint Hilda's frosh were at each other's throats over in the UTS gym. The final score was not so startling or decisive as the Saints downed Vic by a score of 16-8.

Pat Arther was high scorer with a tally of five to her credit. Vic failed to tally till the third quarter when Di Wingate netted a single. At the end of the first half, the score read 7-0. Jean Allen of Vic and Jean Walroth from Saint Hilda's tallied four for their respective teams.

As it stands now, this Vic squad has lost all matches to date. The Saintly frosh have tied one and won two. The UC squad which did so well last night had previously tied one and lost two. Their opponents, Saint Hilda's Seniors have lost all matches so far.

UC Redmen Face Trinity In Exhibition

Although it has no official status, the Toilet Bowl game will be played this afternoon on the back campus. Trinity Black Panthers and University College Tigers, both eliminated from the Mulock Cup hunt, will tangle in a consolation game at 3:30.

Panther coach John Gray said yesterday that a suitable trophy had been obtained for this clash between the arts colleges.

Both teams were contenders in the championship race until losses on the last day of the season left them in third place in their respective leagues, Thinity in Group Two and UC in Group One.

St. Mike's B Top Premeds In Lacrosse

Intramural lacrosse action yesterday saw St. Mike's B drop a 4-1 decision to Pre-Meds first year in a game called after the third period due to a lack of lights. Sorokofft scored twice for the Doctors, Robertson and Grose adding one each. Shephard counted the lone tally for St. Mike's. Vic I took a 7-2 shellacking from the Skule firsts in the other boxla fixture. Burns was a threat for SPS potting three goals, while Wier settled for two and Sinclair and Rosbaugh one apiece. Tweddle and Wood put the Scarlet and Gold crew on the score sheet, with two goals in the first half.

Two soccer games found Senior Meds edge St. Mike's 1-0, while Wycliffe came out of a 2-1 contest with Architecture victorious. McCulloch kicked the Medsmen's only goal in their game. Linklater led the Wycliffe lads with both boals coming off his foot. Richardson booted the Architecture goal.

Anti-McCarthyism Destroys West Unity

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Boldly assuming that the One Week's Hate which resulted from the disappointment of some young men from Victoria College on the Hallowe'en is over and that more recompensating weekend has calmed the storm of rosy "liberalism," one may hope in escaping being liberally burnt in persona when writing in defense of moderation and in opposition to misdirection.

The frustration of some young Victorians led them to popularize themselves by cracking some of the same old jokes at which no audience in Canada would fail to laugh. The baiting of a big neighbor always tickles people's hearts. Impetuousness in (or rather in the front of) some quarters will surely be forgiven because of some greater impetuousness. What is more, fashion will certainly excuse passion. Even sheer Machiavellian considerations played their part; would not a great liberal orgy universalize liberality — or at least extend it to the women's residences — and thus in the best Marxist-Stalinist way liquidate any McCarthyistic frustration?

Vague recollections from the past made illiberal McCarthyism seem a greater danger than illiberal femininity. In the present there is sex, but the past is too sexless. Only some invasions of Canada from the South and some talk of Manifest Destiny are remembered. In the present we, indeed, know Joe McCarthy, for did not he marry an attractive redhead, but who would think of the insignificant Malenkov, the sexless Cominform, and the merely military acts of communist aggression?

May the young men from Victoria College look at the enemies of liberalism outside Victoria College and outside their limited Victorian vision. Instead of looking with a magnifying glass at the petty infractions of human rights by one man which have led to the death or imprisonment of none, let them open their eyes before the deaths and torture of millions under the Communist regime which they seem tacitly ot condone, and whose cries they subdue by their own comfortably moral clamour against those who try —although not by the best of means — to prevent the spread of Communism. "But," those who presume to know something beside sex will say, "McCarthyism is right here on the American Continent, while Communism is still far away." These well-informed minds do not realize the weakness of McCarthyism and the omnipresent danger of Communism as an aggressive force. Those who suffer the pangs of remorse on account of their participation in the recent panty-raids will object: "Let us see to it that our own hands are clean before doing or saying anything about Communism." Absolute purity exists only in heaven; earthly political morality (even if not the panty-raids) deals only with different shades of grey. If we want to bleach some of these drab colours, let us start with the darkest. The incredulous will object that few of us have reliable reports about the workings of the communist system while we all know about McCarthy's persecution. But do we not close our ears to what the Communist leaders are saying about the aims of their movement while credulously accepting the spectres which the enemies of our way of life are conjuring up about McCarthyism, and straining our imaginations very hard in making them look even worse? It is claimed that McCarthyism is an expression of mass hysteria which creates distrust of the U.S.A. among her allies. Perhaps these "intellectuals" who maintain it are right. But do not these idealists outside the USA who hysterically magnify the dangers of McCarthyism and identify it with the US Government, more than anybody foster this distrust, weaken the prestige of the US as the leader of the anti-communist front and thus burn their own stand of moderation by compelling the US "to go it alone." On the other hand, may not too fervent a crusade against the more extreme fighters of Communism be a struggle for communism in so far as it leads to the disruption of Western unity and relaxes the Western preparedness for defense?

Wycliffe 'Apologia'

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Concerning the charge of 'Heresy' levelled against Wycliffe in the issue of November 18th we feel that in all fairness to readers of your paper we should present an answer. That Mr. S. D. Abraham should regard the action of Wycliffe, that is to say the 'bricking' of the doors of Trinity College, as heretical is only a further symptom of a lack of understanding of the sacramental principle inherent in their system. The fact that the bricks were laid unmortared is symbolic of the tenuous grounds upon which Trinity's Doctrin is based. In removing the bricks, a fact not mentioned in the letter, Wycliffe, as in former days, aided the passage of light into darkness and opened to view celestial vistas. Their Assumption (and it must always be remembered that Assumptions are but a device of Man) is completely lacking in Justification.

Heresy itself ex-communicates; therefore the appeal of Mr. Abraham to General Synod reveals their lack of inner security (the Part representing the Whole). Again, as the Angelic Doctor says, 'Morality depends upon intention' (III Contra Gentes); therefore where is the greater Charity to be found—in the intention of Wycliffe to bring Light into Darkness? or in the intention to appeal to General Synod for ex-communication?

We respectfully submit the question to your readers.

As We Were Saying

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

The Truman Probe

Senator Joseph McCarthy has won himself a top-level opponent in the name of ex-President Harry Truman.

If Truman's answer to charges that he knowingly supported a serious security risk—in the name of Harry White—did nothing else, it showed that the ex-President is going to meet McCarthyism head-on. It revealed, in no uncertain terms, the absurd limits to which American fear hysteria has gone.

The attacks of Attorney-General Brownell have brought two unfortunate results: the reputation of the United States abroad has been greatly damaged; the faith and belief of the American people in their leaders has been shaken.

Truman, in his replies, has made several contradictory remarks that have not helped his case against Brownelll. In his TV broadcast, Truman at times called the Attorney-General a liar and at other times admitted to some of the charges. What Truman needed to do was to review his position a little more closely before he let his emotions run wild.

But whatever the final outcome of the Washington political fiasco, its effects will be widely felt. Not only in American politics but in international affairs, too.

To charge any president with assisting subversive forces in the Government is grave. But to mix it up with dirty politics is to make it stupid. As each day passes it is becoming more and more evident that the Truman probe is really a political football.

We are not suggesting that American presidents may not be inefficient, weak or corrupt at times. But, then, nothing is really perfect. To contend that Truman was unpatriotic and worked against the interests of his own country is the height of absurdity.

He has a long record of supporting the doctrines of the containment of communism and was a leader in the Korean War. To carry on a campaign of character-assassination a year after his defeat, and on a minor issue, is to bring American politics to a post-war low.

The encouraging aspect of the whole incident is Truman's fighting reaction to McCarthyism. He called it "the corruption of truth, the abandonment of our hysterical devotion to fair play." He said it was "the use of the big lie and the unfounded accusation against any citizen in the name of Americanism or security; the rise to power of the demagogue who lives on untruth; the spread of fear and the destruction of faith in every level of our society."

Like it or not, we must admit that the only weapons with which free peoples can fight tyranny are the weapons of freedom. It has been said before a good many times, but it will do no harm to say it a good many times more.

Why are we, as Canadians, interested in what is going on in Washington? Because we are part of that section of the world that is being led by the United States. The Truman incident may—and we hope not—convince millions that American democracy is phony. To this we express concern as the editorial in yesterday's Globe and Mail did.

More to the point, we cannot help but be affected by the Truman probe, since it has drawn into its confusing swirl Canada's Lester B. Pearson.

Policy Statements

Reminding students that any votes written in for the Independents will be lost, The Varsity presents the Model Parliament Committee's stand on the Independent Progressive Association, as well as the Independents' stand with regard to the student body.

Independent Progressive

THE INDEPENDENT PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION
A STATEMENT OF POLICY

It has now become obvious that the Model Parliament Committee intends to persist in its unfair and erroneous decision to bar the Independent Progressive Association from the coming elections. This high-handed attitude calls for but one solution — a vigorous write-in campaign. Only by an overwhelming write-in vote for the I.P.A. can the student body show that it will not tolerate the monopolistic and 'snobocratic' behaviour of this group that has consolidated itself in power.

THE INDEPENDENT PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION was formed two years ago in the belief —

(1) that a very large percentage of the students of this University are independent in their political outlook,
(2) that any parliament that seeks to determine its composition by appealing to an electorate, should be representative of the views of that electorate,
(3) that if these things are true, independents have, and of right ought to have, a claim to representation in the Model Parliament, and
(4) that if this representation is to be achieved in a parliament so constituted, independents must of necessity come together in an association to further their common ends.

The 7% write-in vote that we received last year with practically no publicity campaign convinces us that we were right in our belief.

WE ARE NOT A PARTY in the normal sense of the word — we are an association of independents. We were not created with the idea of forming a government at all, but simply to gain for independent political thought its rightful expression in the Model Parliament. However, we did realize that support for independents might be such that independents would form the largest bloc in the legislature after the election. Should this occur, we would doubtless be asked to form a government and would naturally feel it our duty to do so.

BRIEFLY, THEN, our policy is this —

(1) It is the duty of any campus government to concern itself primarily with matters of interest to students. The I.P.A. would feel obligated, if elected, to introduce measures calling for
(a) more federal aid to universities,
(b) fulfilment of the recommendations called for in the report of the Massey Commission,
(c) abolition of unemployment insurance for part-time employees.
(2) We support the strict enforcement of the labour laws to prevent illegal strikes.
(3) We are in favour of a nationally-sponsored system of compulsory automobile insurance.
(4) We support a plan for the reciprocal lowering of tariffs in accordance with the Geneva Agreement on Trades and Tariffs.
(5) We support Canada's contribution to the United Nations and NATO.
(6) We support the rearmament of Germany, the European Defence Community and the eventual admission of Germany into NATO.
(7) We support the principle of aid to underprivileged countries as it is embodied in Canada's contribution to the Colombo Plan and the program of the United Nations.

WE FEEL THAT IN being barred from the Model Parliament we are being done a grave in-

Model Parliament Committee

The Model Parliament Committee views with disgust the sordid and irrational attacks of the IPA on the chairman of the committee, Joe Slogan, and his actions on behalf of the committee.

The IPA has consistently shown its determination to wreck the Model Parliament. They have even gone to the extent of writing a letter to the Speaker of the Provincial Legislature asking him to use his influence on behalf of the IPA, presumably to prevent the committee from getting the use of the House. The letter, signed by Ron Price, admits that the IPA is not a party and does not have a platform.

The actions of the chairman at the meeting on Friday were constitutional and had the full support of the committee members present.

The IPA began the meeting by accusing the committee of changing the time of the meeting. The IPA need take no more trouble than to check with the officials at the Economy Building and UC to learn that the arrangements to hold the meeting were made only with the Economy Building on Thursday. A correction of a statement in The Varsity was made. The committee could do nothing more.

THE RE-OPENING OF NOMINATIONS at the meeting was agreed to by John Roberts if the necessary motion was passed by a two-thirds majority. The IPA participated in the vote to re-open nominations. But when the vote went against them they walked out, refusing to recognize the will of the majority. The reason is obvious. The IPA had up to that point controlled the meeting. It had attempted to prevent nomination of any other candidates than their own. They hoped to get all five seats, and having failed they now call on students to approve their actions by wrecking the elections. It is significant to note that the independents present who were not members of the IPA did not cast a single vote for the IPA candidates, so disgusted were they at IPA tactics.

...The IPA may bring up

THE IPA MAY BRING UP the fact that the fifth independent was elected by a show of hands. This is the only criticism of the meeting that could have any validity whatever, and the case of the IPA is no more valid than that of the committee. The committee had romised to allow election of five persons at that meeting to sit as independents in the Parliament. But, by what was an astounding whim of chance, votes were cast for only four of the candidates, though it was obvious that more than these had considerable support. But, each person present cast only one vote, since it would have been quite unfair to give them more than one, when voters on Thursday will only have one.

THE DILEMMA WAS SOLVED by the democratic method — it was put to a vote. The vote was in favour of electing a fifth person, so this was done. If the IPA criticizes this action, it is criticism born of hypocrsy, for in refusing to participate in the meeting they gave up all right to cast reflections on the constitutionality of decisions of the persons who DID participate in good faith. The IPA could have stayed at the meeting and taken some of the five seats, but some was not enough. They wanted all or none, so now they must do with none, for the committee fully supports the action of its chairman and has no intention of reversing any past decisions. We hope the students will carefully consider the many facts pertinent to our actions, for if they do they cannot fail to condemn the IPA for its deliberate attempts to wreck the Model Parliament.

Student Ticket Sales

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Attention Sidney Smith.

The Athletic Office is running a "racket" in this University with regard to the sale of football tickets for the final game.

Why are not students' tickets available right up to game time? There was no notice in The Varsity that tickets were on sale for one day only, as they now claim in the Athletic Office. Why should this office want to make extra money on the Season Ticket Holders of the University. Student prices should be maintained until Saturday so that all ticket-holders who were unable to make the so-called date last Tuesday can get tickets.

If a student was absent on that "sale date" should he miss the game? Does this mean that any self-righteous, pep-rallying supporter of our great U. of T. Football Team who has attended every football game this year, should be deprived of the privilege of seeing our team win on Saturday, "No, of course not."

We realize that this ticket sale for one day is just an over-sight, and the Athletic Office does want to see its season's supporters attend this game. We hope immediate action will be taken to rectify this situation.

Imposters Tag Autos At Wycliffe

Students parking in the area be side Wycliffe College recently have found an oversize parking ticket pasted to their windshield which clearly points out that their cars are parked illegally. The stickers which are yellow bear the words, "An illegal parking offender in double parking ignoring police no-parking sign".

In disclaiming responsibility for the act, Wycliffe Dean W. Prior stated, "Someone has thought up this bright idea and is trying to help us out," adding "Parking must be stopped there."

The University Police issue blue tags to parking offenders which ask the drivers to report to the University Police Office, Room 14 in Simcoe Hall between 1:00 and 2:00 p.m. The originator of these "parking stickers" is not known and is not the University Police.

One irate driver who had remnants of a previous sticker still on his windshield and who was in position to receive another, posted a warning under his wiper. Hastily scrawled, it read "Don't get smart with your stickers to-day". As his windshield showed, the stickers are thoroughly well-gummed and quite difficult to get off.

There were ten cars parked on the wrong side of the roadway yesterday afternoon but only the three next to Wycliffe College were sporting the unwanted decorations on their windshields. Whoever put them there was considerate enough to place them in front of the passenger seat, to the right and not in front of the driver's position.

"The cars parked there prohibit access to the driveway and prevent garbage from being picked up" said Dean Prior. He also mentioned the fact that cars in the driveway which leads into the back of Wycliffe College were sometimes unable to get out due to the lane entrance being blocked.

Parking in the Hart House roadway is restricted to holders of SAC permits which are issued yearly to those who live outside the limits of TTC service and who commute daily.

Old, Old Story

Varsity Blues To Play Western With Yates Cup In Balance

Have Monopolized Title Every Year Since War

By JIM PROUDFOOT

An old, old story will be given another reading tomorrow afternoon on the Varsity Stadium gridiron. The University of Toronto Blues and the University of Western Ontario Mustangs meet at 1:30 p.m. in a sudden-death playoff for the Yates Cup and the intercollegiate football championship.

The Blues and Mustangs have held the Yates every year since the war, Western in 1946, 1947, 1949, 1950 and 1952 and Varsity in 1948 and 1951. In 1948, these two teams met in a post-season playoff game and then last season, their final game of the season decided the crown. And so, although this is the first season there has been a compulsory playoff, the Blues and Mustangs have played "chips down" games before.

A few preparations have been made on the campus for the game. Stickers reading "Beat Western" have been circulating about the campus all week. A combination pep rally and square dance is scheduled for the Drill Hall tonight.

Half-time festivities are being expanded considerably, "This time cheerleaders from the various colleges and faculties will be at the game," Blue and White publicity director John McKellar said yesterday. "They'll help our cheerleaders and provide special half-time entertainment," he added.

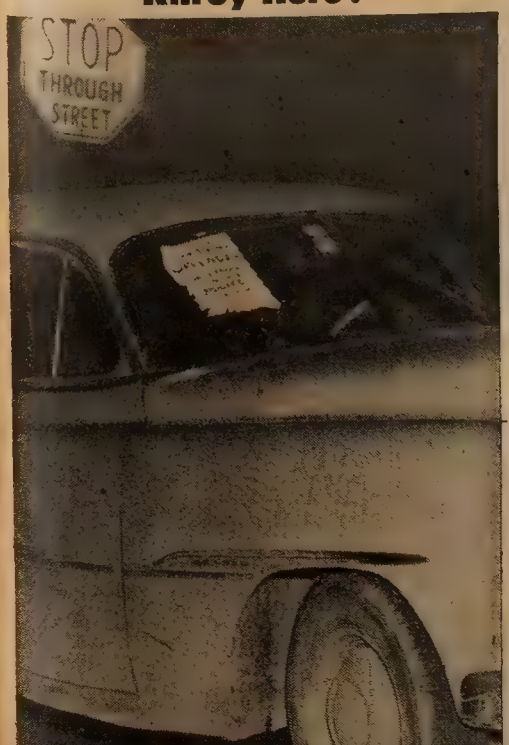
The society has hopefully carded a victory dance at the Drill Hall after the game and then Saturday evening will see a four-part roam-around dance. One orchestra each will be playing from nine o'clock on at Alumni Hall at Victoria College, upstairs and downstairs in Brennan Hall and in the UC Junior Common Room. The bands playing will be those of Ellis McLintock, Jack Evans, Jim MacDonald and Bob Cringan.

"They're as ready as they can be," Varsity football coach Bob Masterson said of his team last night, "I just hope there's no mental letdown. That's what beat us last year," he said.

The Blues are in good shape for the game. They will use substantially the same lineup that finished the season with three consecutive shutouts, allowing only one point in those four starts. "We may make one or two changes but I'm not sure yet," Masterson stated.

Western is not in as optimistic a position. The Mustangs have lost their last two games in a row and have a few men on the sick list. Centre Doug Drew and quarterback John Girvin are battling with influenza right now but will likely be ready to play tomorrow. Fullback Ralph Simmons is sidelined and Jacques Belec, although he missed last Saturday's game with a leg injury, is likely to be in action. Otherwise, their lineup will be intact.

The teams are certain of a good field, regardless of the rain which the weatherman has predicted. The Canadian Rugby Union tarpaulin was put down yesterday at the stadium and will be taken up before the game.



Blue Belles

Tomorrow at 1:30 these cheerleaders won't be in an empty stadium. In fact, over 20,000 fans will be cheering the 11-6 (Benny phoned) victory of the Varsity Blues. With these girls, how could we help but win!

Parked illegally beside Wycliffe College, this car sports a well-gummed sticker for which neither the University Police nor Dean Prior of Wycliffe claim responsibility, although Wycliffe endorses the action.

Debaters Weak On Form UTDU Holding New Trials

No debaters were picked to represent this university in the coming debating tours at the trials held yesterday, announced UTDU chairman Earl Berger. "This does not mean that these people do not have the ability but that for various reasons they did not show this ability to its best advantage to-day," said Berger.

One of three judges, Prof. W. J. Wevers explained that the unanimous decision was "Not a judgment on university debaters as such; it's just that the calibre wasn't that expected of University debaters." He felt that there wasn't a fair representation of the university because there were only four contestants from UC and one each from Victoria College, Trinity, Dents, Meds and SPS.

Berger announced that further trials would be held both for men and women next week.

Anyone interested in reporting for The Varsity is invited to a Workshop in the editorial office, SAC basement, at 1:00 p.m. today. All those who wish to begin, as well as all those who have contributed articles during the past week, will find it of great value.

Flowers For The Cop

Crime Busters

By GORDON FULLER

Every morning they are there. You sneak in the back way, and there they are. Someone in the back seat says he knows where to get in. So you slink around corners (if a car can be said to slink), and pass 'private keep out' signs only to see another one standing at a barricade waving you back.

Our police are everywhere, in uniform or, as our current pulp literature prefers, in civvies. They are at our dances, our rallies, our rugby dances and just as often, at places we never are, always watching and protecting.

The University of Toronto police called the 'University Protective System'. "The job of the police is not to convict," said Mr. Russell, the building superintendent, "but to protect the students themselves and the students' interests from the actions of a very few irresponsible types."

Our police have the same status as the city police in every respect — which we do not always show them.

Skirmishes between the students and police are not new. A pep rally (they are always in the news) way back in '50, gave the police occasion to disperse a snake dance which was obstructing traffic as all snake dances are supposed to do. It also gave certain students opportunity to wax eloquent (or should it be wane?) with this little effort to editor, "the police acted with the arrogant stupidity of fascist storm troopers." Well!

The editorial that morning was a masterpiece of vagueness and middle-road-ness. A typically excellent Varsity editorial.

It should be mentioned that the above writer was not at the rally but got his information from the downtown dailies, enough said. They love us downtown.

It is amazing though, how all news involving police work on the campus is always flowered. The roses go to the 'victims' and the petunias to the police. The above effort at poetic prose is meant to mean that no matter what happens, at games or else where, the police get the raw end of it, usually from people not concerned in the episode and get their versions second-hand.

Quite often our police are blamed for neglected duty as the result of these 'irresponsible types'. The latest pep rally was being properly supervised but some people felt that something should happen (and they were not all engineers). It did. Toronto had its first panty (I'm blushing) raid. The police, it is reported, were neglecting their duty. Oh well some people are like that.

The police are necessary in any form of government. Their job is not to convict or punish but to protect. They are only enforcing the laws that we made.

Shelter Skelter

By PETER GRANT

You're sitting in the garden and it begins to rain. You can (a) stay and get wet, (b) go in the house (if you haven't got a house, what are you doing with a garden?) or (c) hire an architect to build you a garden shelter.

The lower drafting room, behind Convocation Hall, is full of the things. There you will find models to suit every taste, every garden, every pocket book that suffers from too much money.

Garden Shelters are not to shelter gardens, or to shelter people from gardens. But the term is not nearly so bewildering as the shelters themselves. And the gardens, as represented by the imaginative second year Architects, make the Babylonians, former landscaping champs, look sick.

You can make your selection from roofs of sandpaper (for rough weather), blue suede, taffeta, balsa wood, and polystyrene. They are round, rectangular, or palette or peanut shaped, with or without holes for the accommodation of sunlight and passing tress. The trees are signified by wire spirals or C.I.L. sponges, or, in extreme cases, by trees.

Each of the models includes a goldfish pond, bushes, flowers, and an arrow pointing north, for the convenience of Canada Geese. Here

M. J. COLDWELL

CCF Group Hears Talk By Coldwell

Mr. M. J. Coldwell, National leader of the CCF Party will be speaking on the campus on Friday at one o'clock. The meeting sponsored by the U of T CCF Club will be held in West Hall UC. Coldwell is the first federal parliamentary leader of any political party to appear on the campus in some years. In the twenties, Coldwell was a Saskatchewan school teacher, and at that time was a close associate of J. S. Woodsworth, the founder of the CCF Party.

Coldwell will talk on the general political situation since last June's general election. He will outline the stand to be taken by the CCF on the various issues which will be coming up before the newly-elected House of Commons. The criminal code amendments, health insurance, social security, and the CCF's foreign policy will probably be among the articles which Mr. Coldwell will talk about.

LIBERALS GAIN CLOSE WIN

Approximately one - fifth of those eligible voted in yesterday's closely contested election which saw the Liberals win by a one-seat majority. The elections decided the fate of 90 seats which will make up the Model Parliament on Dec. 3, 8 and 10.

The Liberals gained 34 seats with 748 votes polled in their favour. They are only one seat ahead of the Progressive Conservatives who received 726 votes. The CCF gained 14 seats with 300 votes and the LPP Club will occupy 4 seats gained by their 76 votes.

Five independent members were elected as well in yesterday's voting. They are Nore Flynn, Sam Murphy, Lloyd Moote, Doug Ross and B. Davis.

The Progressive Conservatives won the elections for the Model Parliament in 1951 and again in 1952. The Liberals won by a slim margin this year after placing second for the two previous years of the life of the Model Parliament. In 1951 the PC's polled 809 votes to the 513 of the Liberals. Last year the Tories got 471 votes and the Liberals came second again with 395.

The Liberals have been steadily gaining on the PC's for the three year duration of the Mock Parliament. The remaining parties represented have never changed relative positions as the CCF remains third with the LPP in fourth place.

The total number of votes polled in the annual elections have dropped and then risen again. In 1951 there were 2027 votes polled; in last year's elections there were only 1194 and this year's balloting showed 1956 votes cast. At no time in the three-year life of the event has any more than one-fifth of the student body voted.

The Independent Progressives Association, object this year of much controversy, polled 77 votes which were write-ins and declared spoiled by the Model Parliament Committee. There were 24 other ballots which were spoiled due to faulty marking.

The committee had previously decided not to allow the association to run in the elections because they were not a political party. Another reason given was that if they were allowed in the parliament would not reflect that of Ottawa. "We felt," said Model Parliament chairman earlier this year, "that the method adopted for their representation is most equitable, in respect to carrying out a Model Parliament that would mirror the Canadian Federal situation."

The IPA was formed, after the first elections, two years ago and at that time failed in their attempt to get Caput recognition. Last year, however, they succeeded in getting recognition but failed to get the necessary Model Parliament Committee recognition. They were unsuccessful this year also.

The actual Mock Parliaments will be held this year as usual in the provincial legislature at Queen's Park. The debates are usually lively and full of interest, both to spectator and participant. It is quite common for the government to be defeated in the course of the many controversies which are debated on the floor.

One of the main purposes of the sessions is to familiarize those taking part with the parliamentary procedures necessary to introduce bills and perform the other functions of the government. Those taking part in past years have found them highly enjoyable and very educational.

Mock Parliament Results

The results of yesterday's Model Parliament Elections are as follows:

		UC	Denta.	St. Mike's	Vic.	SPS.	Trinity	Meds.	H.E.	Ex.	Tot.	Seats

Hart House Glee Club

This is the Hart House Glee Club which will be taking part in the concert Saturday night. Three college choirs, one from Cornell, one from McMaster, and one from Toronto, will be singing in the third annual choral festival; McMaster's choir is taking the place of last year's Glee Club from Rochester. The concert is part of the evening's post-game entertainment. Warden McAdam has directed the Hart House Glee Club since 1950.

Honesty Of Reviewer Stressed At Lecture

The good drama reviewer must be honest both with himself, and with the public, and not be swayed by personal feeling, said Miss Margaret Ness, women's editor of Saturday Night, at the second of a series of journalism lectures sponsored by The Varsity.

Miss Ness said that too many reviewers, in trying to be smart at the expense of the production, are unfair. She said that it is easy to make a slight change in the title of an unsuccessful story, for an amusing introduction, but it is dishonest. She also remarked that she had found the Toronto reviewers completely honest and readable. "Humour is delightful when the occasion warrants it," she said.

Miss Ness said that the review should depend on the production. Generalities are not enough, but the readers should learn whether to see the play or not. If the production is professional, the production should be given the full review treatment, said Miss Ness. If the play is amateur the readers should be told if they will enjoy it or not. If it is medium-poor, it is possible to counterbalance the de-

Three Choirs Combine 175 Voices Participate In Hart House Festival

On Saturday night in the Great Hall of Hart House there will be a joint concert given by three university choirs; the Cornell A Cappella Chorus, the McMaster University Chorus, and the Hart House Glee Club. There will be 175 massed voices in the joint numbers. This is the third annual festival of choral music at Hart House.

"The inter-university concert is only part of the total evening's post-game entertainment," said Garth McDowell, the Assistant to the Warden. "The lull that precedes party activities may be readily absorbed by this first-class entertainment," he added.

Two of the songs that will be sung by the massed choirs are Agnus Dei, arranged by Healey Willan, and Echo Song by Orlandus Lassus.

The Hart House Glee Club will sing Drinking Song, by Gustav Holst; Little Lamb, a spiritual; Ave Maria an early liturgical song; Broken Melody by Sibelius, and some others. Some of the Cornell A Cappella Chorus's numbers are Bevecy Venir Du Printemps, by Claude Le Jeone, an old French song, Boatman's Dance by Copland and Fine; and The Strong Men by Wray Lundquist.

Last fall there was a similar three- choir concert at Hart House, with the Rochester University's Men's Glee Club instead of the McMaster choir. The tickets for this were sold out the night before the concert.

The Hart House Glee Club has been under the direction of Ward McAdam since 1950. For many years it has given the final Sunday evening concert at Hart House. They also usually give a program of Christmas carols over the CBC networks.

Tickets for this concert are $1.25. They will be on sale up until concert time at the Hall porter's desk, and up until noon at the SAC office.

Russ Revolt Called Proof Of Socialism

"The Russian Revolution has proven to the world that an alternative to Capitalism is possible, that the socialist state is not merely a utopian abstraction but can be made a reality," Virginia Ritchie II Vic said at a UC CCF meeting on the Russian Revolution yesterday. She said that the rise of the bureaucracy and the police state was directly due to foreign intervention and the failure of the German revolution.

The Bolshevik Revolution rose as a historic necessity, due to the inability of the old Czarist and the Provisional governments, to cope with the problems besetting the country. She said, "The slogan of 'Peace, Land, and Bread' won the Russian masses to the Bolshevik Party, and enabled the overthrow of the Kerenskyite government." Miss Ritchie said that the Provisional government was not carrying out the programme of the February Revolution, due to its connections with liberal capitalist elements.

Must Fit Peg In Right Hole

"The job of the Personnel department is to fit the right man in the right place," said Mr. I. D. Cook of the Bell Telephone in the final Vic Alumni Employment lecture.

Cook discussed the various fields in personnel work, and told how a university graduate could break into the field.

The various departments of personnel work as outlined by Cook are: selection and placement, job evaluation, organization planning and grouping, training, labour relations, collective bargaining, employee services and benefits, health, safety, and research.

He said when looking for a job the prospective employee should try to sell himself. "You must attract attention, know the firm, point out your abilities, and try to display a keen interest in the job for which you are applying."

SKULE NITE

Bloo Moider

"Bloo Moider", this year's version of Skule Nite, is, on the whole, a very enjoyable show. Except for the sets, which are really outstanding, there is nothing very striking or original about it. There ar etimes when the action becomes pretty slow, but the interest always manages to survive the low points.

The title, "Bloo Moider", seems to refer to the story which involves two gangster-like characters from Western, who come to murder those Blues who also happen to be engineers. Their plan involves a secret bomb just invented by a Toronto professor, but they blow up the JCR instead of the KCR by mistake. The hero of the occasion is Stacey, an unhappy misfit among engineers.

The best part of the show really hasn't much to do with this story. It is the "show within a show", a vaudeville Skule nite that takes up scene two. None of the acts in themselves are exceptionally good, but that doesn't really matter because they are well rehearsed and move along quickly.

After this "Bloo Moider" peters out for a while, until it perks up again in the lecture room scene. Strangely enough this scene, which is entirely slapstick, goes over very well. When you look back at it, you can't remember much about it except yelling, scuffling, and flying paper darts.

When it comes to the music, Skule Nite ought to be complimented on the only student orchestra we have seen in a campus show this year. Their playing was very good, although they did not have especially good material to work with. Most of the songs were trite, with a Gilbert and Sullivanish flavor to them. However, maybe the composer was wise; at any rate it is better than completely boring originallity. There were no singers that could be called anything more than almost adequate, and the choruses were mostly weak.

The outstanding people in the show are Bob Hill as Stacey, the hero; and Cyril Bamford and Jim Vasoff as Al and Lou, the villains. Al's best moment was undoubtedly his sinister cigarette smoking entrance at the beginning. Bob Hill was very funny in his appearance, his actions, and his lines; there is a hint of something of the Charlie Chaplin style about him. His singing was definitely not so good.

These opinions may not count for much, coming from one of the hundreds of blind eyes on the two faced-monster, but I thought it was a good show.

Szigeti And The TSO

Although Tuesday is the opening night of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the more fashionable night to attend, it seems that the people who go on Wednesday have been treated recently to the better of the two performances.

This arrangement of a double performance is felicitous in that it gives the guest artist a chance to redeem himself the second night, if by some mischance the first concert was unsatisfactory. Such also was in some degree the case last Wednesday evening.

For Szigeti gave a more even and controlled interpretation of Beethoven's Concerto in D major, Op. 61 for Violin and Orchestra on this occasion than the previous night. His tone emerged most effectively in the passage of the slow movement where the violin has a sustained melody to pizzicato accompaniment by the string section. Here the audience sat motionless in appreciation of the beauty of tone they had expected of him. But in the Allegro and Finale he appeared mainly as an artist empassioned but relatively impotent. Notes were missed or out of tune and the tone was too often scratchy and harsh. In his efforts to keep up to the technical exigencies he missed the lilting quality of the Rondo.

I have rarely heard the orchestra play with such sensitivity to and interest in the music. Sir Ernest also bettered his usual standard. He conducted with careful attention to details without any of those extravagant gestures which only too often indicate a loss of control.

The Overture Le Corsare by Berlioz was in its strange contrast of moods at times meditatively fluent and at other times boisterously gay. The final symphony of Haydn, No. 104 in D Major was full of finesse. The trumpets recovered in this from their slump this season. Delicately light, humorously phrased and intensely rhythmical it made it very hard to maintain the proper composure for a concert.

Wendy Michener.

Albert Pratz To Perform This Sunday

Albert Pratz, violinist and Gordon Kushner, pianist, will be featured artists at this Sunday's concert in the Great Hall of Hart House. They will play a program of three sonatas for violin and piano.

The program will include the sonata in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2 by Beethoven, the Sonata Op. 21 by Dohnanyi and finally the Sonata Op. 63 by Gibb.

Albert Pratz is a Canadian who has returned after many years of concert and orchestral work in the United States. He has been head on the CBC networks both as soloist and as member of chamber groups. He has also been guest conductor of the CBC Symphony..

Gordon Kushner is a Winnipegger and received his early education in the city of his birth. After service in the navy, he studied with Lubka Kolessa and Boris Roubakine at the Royal Conservatory of Music. He has since appeared as soloist and accompanist in South and Central America as well as in Canada.

Tickets for the concert are available free of charge on presentation of a Hart House membership card at the Hall Porter's desk. Ladies will be admitted as guests of members. The concert starts at 9:00 p.m.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

THE GODS

"It's in the hands of the gods." At least that's the way that coach Bob Masterson predicted tomorrow afternoon's gridiron classic at Varsity Stadium. In other words, there's nothing more that can be done in the way of more practice. If the Blues don't let down, they should win. If they let down? Well—it's Western they are playing and you all know the Mustangs.

One thing is for sure, if nothing else. It will be the best game of this Intercollegiate season. Western-Toronto games are always good. That it is a playoff will just add to the fun and game.

THE CHANCES

The Toronto chances will probably be settled by that young man who will likely wear number 72 for Western. That's Gino Fracas of course. If the Blues can stop him, their chances are pretty good since their offense can usually take care of itself. If they can't stop Fracas, an offensive may not be of much use.

Don Getty will probably be passing more than a few and Getty is one quarterback who can pass as well as handle the ball well. While watching for Fracas, the Blues could get out of position for a pass from Getty. If they do, things will get dark in a hurry. Fortunately, with Bill McFarlane around the Blues have one of the best, if not the best defensive halfback in college football.

That in a few words could be the story. But football being what it is, anything could happen. That's why there will be a good 20,000 fans sitting in Saturday afternoon to see the show.

THE TEAM

If Toronto does win, it couldn't happen to a better team. The Blues have put on a good show all year for those interested enough to follow the team. The record speaks for itself, you know. In first place the five wins and a loss is something to write home about. And of course not enough can be said about that fine defensive record of four games less five minutes without a point being scored against them.

Offensively they have thrown that ball around more this year than last and passing always seems to be what the fans like to see. Nobody would say that it wasn't pretty to watch Phil Muntz, Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney and McFarlane carry the ball, unless it was a laddy dressed in purple and white.

ENJOY YOURSELF

So enjoy yourself before it's later than you think. Benny figures you will. He predicts that the Yates will be back in Toronto tomorrow night after the Blues win 11-6. Benny has been right about 80 per cent of the time this year, so it looks like good betting.

END NOTES:

The tarp is down as protection for the worst. The Blue and White has really demonstrated that they aren't on top of the campus. With two weeks to plan something for Saturday night the best they could come up with is a Roam-around. It would seem that regardless of whether it's Toronto or Western that will be celebrating tomorrow night, a ball that is a ball should have been planned. Sure and a dance should have been laid on for the Royal York, for what better place is there?

Trinity College Wins The Privy In The Toilet Bowl Feature

By JOHN WILSON

In a ceremony conducted at midfield following yesterday's UC—Trinity consolation football game, J. E. McCuthcheon, Intramural Athletic Director, presented the victorious Red and Black machine with the W. C. Privy trophy, emblematic of the annual Toilet Bowl championship. In giving the cup to John Gray's Trinity squad, Mr. McCutcheon stated, "this trophy typifies the true spirit of Intramural sport. It isn't every team that gets the throne."

Coming from behind, the Buttery boys went on to win the game 8-5. Early in the second quarter Townsend went over for the UC major, after the Red and White teams had spent most of the first quarter in Trinity territory. Keeping the UC attack to a minimum, Trinity scored late in the half, when Wally Kostiw intercepted one of Paterson's passes on the UC forty and went all the way for the touchdown. Loukidelis converted to make the score 6-5 for Trinity at half-time. The second half showed little of interest, the third quarter being nothing hurt an exchange of kicks. Early in the fourth quarter, Danny Paterson conceded a safety touch from the UC two-yard-line, making the score 8-5 for Trinity. Nimchuck, Wadsworth, and Wansbrough were outstanding for UC on the line, playing the full game. Noakes Gostling was good defensively for Trinity, while McTaggart, Smith, and Kostiw ran well out of the backfield. The Trinity captains placed the trophy in the College's trophy-case after the game.

Premeds Win 2-1 Go On To Semis

By MANI THALER

In a game which saw four overtime periods, and two teams giving the spectators just about the best game of the season, Pre-Meds eliminated a fighting Dents team 2-1 in a sudden death quarter final, from the championship race in Division I of intramural soccer.

Early in the first half Dents' well-named captain, and one of the best soccer players on campus, Eddie Fast, out-dribbled and outwitted the PreMeds defence to score the first goal. Meds' goalie Cal Himel didn't have a chance.

The score at halftime was 1-0 for Dents, and, as no team this season had yet won a game which they were losing at half-time, the Pre-Meds' chances looked grim.

Going into the second half, it looked as if the precedent was not going to be broken. Time and again, the Dents' line threatened the Skullmen's goal, and only the excellent defensive play of fullbacks John Ben and Jerry Cohn, and rugged persistence of captain halfback, Louis Teglas prevented the Dentists from lengthening their lead.

Then a penalty shot was called by referee Derzai. In one beautiful groundshot, Louis Teglas had tied the game up, and left it in the hands of the gods.

It stayed that way till the final whistle was blown. The teams went into the first five-minute overtime period. Nothing happened. The teams changed sides, and kicked, ran and shouted their way through another five-minute period. Nothing happened. The third period was started amidst the shouts of fiercely partisan spectators who had collected on the sidelines. Nothing happened.

But slowly the older Dents' line began to get tired. Their excellent pass attack of the first half had deteriorated, and now their forwards tried stray, distant shots on goal, and let it go at that. Pre-Meds were improving steadily.

The fourth quarter was called. The ball was now steadily in Dents' territory. A corner shot was called. A scramble in front of the Dents' goal, the ball emerging from it under the feet of Pre-Meds right outside Bateman, and it was all over. There was only one minute left to play, and the excellent ball-handling (or footing) of left inside Wary took care of that.

The semi-final of Division I, in which Pre-Meds meet UC, takes place on Tuesday, Nov. 24, at two p.m. on the front campus.

Benny Says—

One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, has been extremely busy these days. There are a great many scores for him to predict what with the college games, the ORFU playoffs, the Big Four playoffs and the Western playoffs.

"You guys is drivin' me nuts," Benny snarled when contacted last night. "I'm telling' ya one thing. I'm glad the football season is just over. Some weekends I like to flip my lid."

"The game Satiddy? Now yer talkin'. Don't see how the Blues can lose after the way they've played this season. I give the Blues two touchdowns, one converted. That's 11 and Mustangs convert one. That's 11-6 and John Q. can pack up the Yates."

Women's Scores

Last night UC Sophs trounced Sr. and Jr. POT by the score of 20-8 in women's lacrosse.

During the afternoon POT, UC and Vic gals teamed up against Trinity to win 2-1.

Blues' Hockey Test Lyndhurst Tilt Sat.

The Blues hockey team isn't going to wait for the football season to end before they have their first game. Coach John Kennedy's boys get their first crack at Senior action tomorrow night at East York arena at 8:30 against the Lyndhurst East Yorks. The game is being played as a benefit night for the Riverdale Kiwanis Club.

The Yorks are currently at the top of the Senior "B" OHA series. But their main claim to sports fame is the fact that they will be leaving shortly for Sweden to represent Canada in the World's championship games.

The Yorks have a star-studded team and should provide the Blues with plenty of action. Gabby Lindsay is up from Junior "B" hockey to take care of the east ender's goal. Danny Windley, who once played for the Pittsburgh Hornets of the American Hockey League, is playing defence. The Hornets are the American farm team of our Toronto Maple Leafs. On the forward line Howie Cox and Moe Galand will probably get a chance to show the type of hockey that has made them favourites in Toronto hockey circles for years.

Blues who have been practising for about a month, Jack Ross is back to handle the net minding duties. On defense, Paul Prendergast who played for Varsity two years ago and Lou Appleby who played last year will be knocking down the York's forwards.

The Blues have a real good prospect in John Tolton who played last year for Marlborough Juniors of the Junior OHA. Mal Hughes also looks good and comes from out west where they grow hockey men, the University of British Columbia. Harry Boyd who captained the 1948 team to the Intercollegiate championship is another vet that has returned to the fold.

Blues B-Ball To Take Up Where Football Leaves Off

While the football team captures the headlines with the Yates Cup playoffs, the hardworking basket ball team is taking definite shape on the Hart House court. The team has been picked and by the looks of the squad Varsity is going to have one of the tallest teams it has had in years. Jim Russell and Dave McQuaig are the only players under the six foot mark with the rest of the team sizing up like this: Lou Lukenda 6' 3", John Sheppard 6' 4", George Stulac 6' 1", Doug Scott 6' 2", Florian Matsella 6' 2", Bill Corcoran 6' 3", Harold Rotman 6', and Marv Tile 6' 4".

Although there are only ten boys on this list it is expected that Steve Oneschuk, Ollie Mandryk and Eddie Skrzypek will be out after a short rest following their football chores.

It is to be noted that only two of these chosen for the team are freshmen. All of the others have has some experience either with the seniors or the intermediates. However the new boys, Matsella and Sheppard, have had considerable experience during their high school days. Two years ago they played on the same team at Saint Michael's High. Last year Sheppard transfered to Niagara Falls High where he completed his secondary school education and led the basketball team to the Ontario High School Championship.

Rotman and Scott has a year of seasoning last year with John McManus's intermediate squad. Both boys played very impressive basketball for John and, even though they may be moved from their usual forward spots out to guard positions on the senior team, they are expected to continue their fine play this season.

During the scrimmages Dalt White has been trying various combinations in order to develop a starting five. The smoothest five in the recent practices has Stulac and Sheppard working in the bucket and Russell, Scott and Matsella in the backcourt. This is a well balanced five with speed, rebounding power and general basketball know-how. But they will have to improve their shooting before they become a real contender. Next week will bring Bob Masterson back to the basketball picture. He will waste little time in putting into effect the methods of play he wants to use this year, as he has only two left before the first game.

PHE Women Take Pair In Basketball At OCE

P.H.E. scored a double win in the women's basketball loop at O.C.E. last night. In the first match, P.H.E. II's trampled St. Hilda Jr's into the floor in a good natured hassle that was nontheless a fast clean game.

Inger Olsen, Joy Taylor and Mary Haza starred for Phys-ed in the scoring field, with Inger accounting for 14 of the 39 points.

Janet Wright and Marg Wansborough tallied for St. Hilda's with five baskets. However, the diminutive forwards could do little against the towering P.H.E. guards.

Despite the one-sided 39-11 score, the Physeders had to fight all the way to keep ahead of the snappy Saints. It was a game well worth the watching.

The second match of the evening featured a jumbled P.H.E. II squad against the determined and very game Vic Sophs "B". Vic has been without a coach all season, but despite this, they looked remarkably good against the supposedly hardened and seasoned Physeds. So much so, that they were ahead with a vast 2-0 lead at quarter time. In the next period, Vic increased the score to five against the astounded Phys-ed team.

P.H.E. superiority came to light in the last half with strategic plays and neater style. They tallied ten points in the half to finish the match in the front of a 13-9 score.

Women Can Eat

Tomorrow, before the Varsity-Western game, the Great Hall of Hart House will be open to both men and women. By permission of the Board of Stewards dinner will be served from 11:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Shelter

there are lawns like pool-tables (felt the same). There are wire mesh wildernesses, woolly with plaster of Paris snow. And one pale green back yard consists of five pounds of coloured sugar; the sweetest crabgrass this side of Heaven.

There are those who gather a rare, broccoli-like moss, dye it, and sell it to the Architects for bushes. But the canny lads are not restricted; under their thoughtful hands, parsley, plywood and plastics merge with the verdure. The store-bought shrubbery, for those who use it, costs up to $1.50 per small package. "I say it's spinach," confided one second year student, "and I say the hell with it."

The present display proves, once again, that whether the problem be getting a shelter up in Toronto or getting a shack up in Mongolia, an architect can make anything out of anything. Money, even.

Honesty

fects with the good effects, and the reviewer can give constructive criticism.

"The unpardonable sin in interviewing," said Miss Ness, "is to go without knowing anything of the subject." She said that the newspaper morgue will always give a quick resume for background information so that the busy people interviewed will not have to give basic information.

Miss Ness said the interviewer should go with some special questions. The interview may take a completely different turn, she remarked, but the person being interviewed has been questioned so many times that he does not know what you are interested in learning.

Interviewing women is the easiest, commented Miss Ness, because most women readers like to read about clothes. The celebrities know this, and dress accordingly. "You know the reader will be interested," she said. In interviewing a man she felt the only topics were his hobbies and politics. "Comedians are the hardest to interview," said Miss Ness, "either because they are afraid you will be disappointed if they aren't funny, or because they rely on their writers too much." With the exception of Victor Borge, who always has some subtle comment, Miss Ness felt that the average comedian has almost nothing to say, and it is necessary to dig for information. "Some stars can answer what you want, but usually you have to do most of the talking," said Miss Ness. Most people answer yes and no, she said, because they don't know where you are heading.

She said that the biggest and most important stars are the easiest to contact, and will go out of their way to help you because they realize that the publicity is their own bread and butter. Miss Ness felt that it was the newly-arrived stars who thought they were too important to be bothered with reporters.

CBC Records Yule Wishes

Students from the British West Indies, British Guiana, and the British Honduras may radio Christmas greetings to their relatives. The annual Christmas greeting program is scheduled for Monday, November 23 at 7:30 p.m.

CBC wishes to remind students from the area concerned of the opportunity to record messages. Those who have not yet signified their intentions of doing so are reminded that today is the last day to sign their name to the list in the SAC office, in the old Observatory.

The CBC records the messages of the students attending universities across Canada and sends them to the respective countries for delayed broadcast there.

Election Notes

Two years ago in the first Model Parliament elections a Progressive Conservative plurality was elected with a 20 percent student body vote. Campaigning was a complete disappointment, and the only reason as large a vote was polled was because it was new to the campus.

Last year the polled vote dropped over a third. Campaigning was almost negligible. Model elections were so crammed into a few days that they became only a formality. As it was admitted later, no election at all would have been better.

At least this year there has been enough advance notice for us to realize an election has come and gone. With the steady stream of mud we have waded in since the second day of school we have been aware that at least some form of active politics was to be found here.

Attempted campaigning this year was adequate. Student interest in political forums was at a three-year low ebb. Loudspeakers and sign painting were not enough to draw more than a fifth of the voters to the polls.

A great deal of the student interest that was aroused was due to the abortive efforts of the Independent Progressives who this year achieved, if nothing else, 77 spoiled ballots.

The 90 elected members will now meet in the provincial legislature chambers to discuss government issues. In past years the topics treated have been neither interesting nor applicable to student political activities.

We hope that this year the parliament will see fit to discuss issues which are more vital to student interest and which do not require knowledge which can only be gained in 15 years of participation in top-level politics.

First Come First Served

A letter on this page has, believe it or not, come up with a real gripe.

It complains of the recent rugby ticket sales, and it isn't a lone complaint by any means. There are a number of students on this campus who feel they got a raw deal on the first-come-first-served sale of tickets for Saturday's game.

The game is perhaps the most important of the season and there is every reason to believe it may be the best. In fact, Benny, from the sports page, predicts that the Yates Cup will rest at Toronto this year. We think Benny is pretty accurate.

But that doesn't take away from that fact that some true Blue supporters have missed a chance at the "best seat" through no fault of their own. Tickets went on sale at 10:00 a.m. and the first who came were, of course, those who didn't have lectures or who were close enough to Varsity Arena to get tickets in ten minutes.

This, our friends on the southern part on this campus could not do. They had lectures and were a good 15 minutes away from the Arena. And they have a legitimate gripe.

If the Athletic Directorate must use the first1come-first-served system then they should make sure that everyone has an equal chance of getting the "first".

Our Readers Write:

Northern Partiality

The SAC is a representative body of all the Faculties and Colleges on the campus, but has been either very lax or very partial regarding the ticket sales for the Playoff Game. In any case, partiality was shown towards those who live near Varsity Stadium, or had few morning classes last Tuesday.

The members of the professional faculties: Meds, S.P.S., Architecture, and all the rest, have full mornings, and were unable to be at the Stadium in time to get good seats. Consequently, the best seats went to those who "just happened" to be at Varsity Stadium at 10:00 a.m. Tuesday. What about the season-long supporters of the Blues from the south part of the Campus? They are entitled to the same chance to get good seats as those who are near the Stadium for their morning lectures, or have a spare Tuesday morning. The Reserve-Seat method of distributing the seats makes this a physical impossibility.

Why should students having spare time in the mornings be favored over those having a full timetable? The south of the campus is just as strong in its support of the Blues as the Colleges near Varsity Stadium, but how can they get seats within shouting distance of the 50-yard line if they are unable to buy the tickets until a full morning's or afternoon's lectures are finished? "Certainly," you say, "there will be plenty of tickets in the End Zone." Why there? Why cannot those in Skule, Meds, and Dents have an equal opportunity of buying good seats with those in Arts, C. and Finance, and so on?

The Playoff Game should be run the same as the regular games — the first ones at the game get the best seats, and a student who sits in the End Zone one does so as a result of his (or her) late arrival, and not as a result of circumstances beyond his control.

If the Reserve-Seat system was abolished, the difficulty could immediately disappear. A simplification of the system would very probably be accompanied by a rise in student attendance. The mere fact that the students know they must sit in assigned seats with no chance of moving to sit with friends, or of competing for a seat in the near vicinity of the 50-yard line is a strong deterrent to many.

It is much too late to do anything about the situation this year, but we hope this suggestion will be given serious consideration when arrangements are made for next year's Playoff game.

Strong Arm Methods

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In our concern about McCarthyism, there has been a tendency to ignore what McCarthy is fighting against — the spread and threat of Communism. We seem to have agreed with his purpose, but we are divided on the question of his means. Yet while we have condemned his policy in most cases, we have offered nothing constructive in its stead.

History has shown us that by using "strong arm methods" to fight "strong arm methods," we only alleviate the situation for the time being. We solve the problem to some extent, but in so doing, we are also creating more sources of friction. I would suggest that rather than attempt to fight Communism with force and fear, that we use Love, concentrating our energies on the remedying of the social, economic, and political injustices on which Communism thrives. For if we do not attend to these roots, no matter how many times Communism is suppressed, it will always return stronger and more determined than ever.

Today, most of us are dissatisfied with the status quo, as we should be. The Communist movement offers us "change" which some of us accept because there is no alternative — no other movement which appears to be actively working for the transformation of society. Nevertheless, Communism by its very nature must depend constantly on less, Communism by its very na- Fear for the achievement and maintenance of its end. And Fear is far from conductive to the happiness of mankind.

Where there is Love, there is no Fear. By working through active concern for others, and respect for the dignity of the individual, we are providing ourselves with another means of change, we are striking at the very foundation of Communism, and what is more important, we are taking a more positive step in the direction of real peace.

Needed—1 Hero

We need a hero.

More precisely, a martyr-hero. It is no difficult martyrdom we require; most students on this campus are in a position, at least twice a day, to give their lives for humanity. The supreme service may even be rendered by one of those reluctant heroes who "have greatness thrust upon them" on the way to an over-due lecture.

Follow these instructions. Cross Hoskin Avenue by Hart House, as you probably do frequently. But this time, slip, or look the wrong way, or be in such a hurry that you don't give that car its necessary leeway. You don't have to die. Permanent disability might just be enough to focus a little public attention. But the theory in these cases, seems to be: "No place is dangerous until someone gets killed." Better do a good job.

Afraid you won't ever get that organic Chemisty? Did that Engineer promise to marry you, and now you have no way of proving it? Or maybe its simply that It's all too much trouble. Don't waste yourself. Don't go to needless trouble getting poison, or cutting your throat in the shaving mirror. Be a boon!

We will get our martyr. He will come, tomorrow, next year, maybe when we have all graduated. And when he has come and gone, something may be done. A stoplight, an overpass (like the one at the Ex, which pays in money or an underpass. Martyr, in advance we salute you. Who will you be?

THE DOUKHOBOR DEMOCRAT TRIBAL PARTY

Fifth Party Platform

Though it is too late to vote DDT in the model parliament elections, our party is gathering so many adherents that we expect shortly to force a re-election. Our party platform has an undeniable appeal. We ask you to examine the bare facts, the naked truth. More candidly than any other party, we can maintain that we have nothing to hide.

Among our major reforms will be the following:

(1) Reform through the Government and the Senate. All members will at all times be in formal attire, unless, due to ill health or other extenuating circumstances, they are forced to wear clothes.

(2) Elimination of hidden taxes and reduction of taxes by eliminating the waste and extravagance of the clothing industry.

(3) Reducing voting age to eighteen to encourage young Canadians to take a more active part in Canadian politics. Young Canadians will contribute the greatest appeal to our party policies.

(4) Revision and extension of international relations, and relations in general.

(5) Establishment of a titled class, members of which shall be addressed as Douks and Douchesses disrespectively.

(6) Ritual performance of the burning of effigies and Liberal housing projects, though the latter may be rather scarce.

(7) Occasional blowing up of bridges will be tolerated, except in Quebec, where they fall down by themselves.

(8) For the especial benefit of University of Toronto students, there will be excursions to Krestova, B.C., and weekly nudist parties at Caledon Hills.

(9) For the facilitation of the foregoing, we intend to completely revise the Criminal Code, or at last establish a system of community jails with adequate supply of heat.

As eveyone can plainly see, we intend to approach the reality of nature as closely as possible. No more will we be surrounded by politicians offering us the shirt off their backs. At a time when complete freedom of movement continues to be menaced by tendencies towards concealment of the underlying facts by a flimsy fabrication of fabric, the DDT party continues to stand for the Sons of Freedom,

(Note: Any similarity between our platform and that of the Liberal or Progressive Conservative parties is intentional and purely ridiculous.)

MUSTANGS DO IT AGAIN BLUES' WEEKEND BLACK

By JIM PROUDFOOT

It looked as though things were finally going to be different. It looked as though Varsity Blues were going to beat Western Mustangs in a post-season playoff game and win the Yates Cup. It was 8-7 for Toronto in the last minute of play at Varsity Stadium Saturday and all the Blues had to do was keep the Mustangs at centre field for another three or four plays. Then, Mr. Don Getty coolly stepped back from the Varsity 52-yard line, reared back and threw a high, fast ball down into the north-east corner of the field. Mr. Murray Henderson caught it on the fly at the goal line. And that was it. Western had won 12-8 and was champion again.

For the second year in a row, for the sixth time in the last eight seasons, the Mustangs had given coach John Metras the intercollegiate championship. "That was a close one," Metras breathed afterwards. And he was right. He couldn't have come much closer to loosing.

In the Varsity dressing room, the gloom was so thick you could cut it with a knife. You couldn't blame the players. They had completely outplayed the Westerners in every department but the one that showed up on the scoreboard. And that's the place that counted.

Don Prowse had given the Mustangs a lead early in the game when he pounced on a Varsity fumble and Toronto's Bob Pinkney (82) and Western's Jack Fowler (52) battle it out for a forward pass here while Bill McFarlane (80) watches. It was a throw from Don Getty intended for Fowler and Pinkney almost intercepted. Neither of them caught it.

Fowler wasn't the only one who failed to catch a pass from Getty. But one of the fellows who did was Murray Henderson and he did it at a rather unfortunate time for the Varsity cause. With the Blues leading 8-7 in the final minute, he caught a 42-yard pass from Getty and ran 10 yards for the touchdown that gave Western the game and the championship.

New Or Not

This student is obviously paying no attention to the raging controversy about Hart House furniture. This year Hart House underwent a partial change of common room furniture which many students felt was "too modern" for the solemn Gothic architecture of the House. However, there were many students who felt that, regardless of the clash in styles, the new seats and couches were comfortable. The photographer assures us that the picture above was not posed, but that it clearly shows that new or old Hart House common rooms provide ideal resting places for undergraduate and graduate male students. The furniture changes but the snores remain.

Read Modern Writers Callaghan Advises Vic

The trouble with university students is that they are too busy to read the works of modern imaginative writers, said Morley Callaghan at a recent meeting of the Victoria College Liberal Arts Club. His topic was "Does Anyone read Anyone". The Toronto writer and winner of the 1952 Governor General's award for fiction also suggested that authors are not interested in writing for the minds of students 50 years hence.

Although a sense of the past is important so that one knows where he is now, said Callaghan, the value of scholarship lies in the ability of the student to look at the world through the eyes of his own personality. He may admire Plato or St. Augustine to the point of wishing to see the world through their eyes, but his knowledge shows fruition when he can look at the world and develop his own point of view.

In a further discussion of his topic, Callaghan denied that radio, the movies, television and comic books were the natural enemies to reading. "Those who want to read and who have the ability, will do so" he stated. While the hard-backed editions of "good" literature may suffer, those factors which seem to prohibit reading actually open up theworld of imagination to readers and so advance the cause of fictitious writing.

Logic On TV —Prof Goudge

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., CBL television presents another programme in the "Exploring Minds" series. The application of logic in everyday life is the subject, under the direction of Professor T. A. Goudge of the Philosophy department.

Six undergraduate students of the University of Toronto are taking part in the show. Leon Major, Stan Daniells, and Jack Rose will dramatize certain everyday situations. Then Professor Goudge will explain how logical or illogical action was illustrated in these situations. In the second section of the programme, there will be a round-table discussion, with Henry Best, Clyde Batten, Henry Anderson, and Professor Goudge discussing examples of logical and illogical thinking. There will be an attempt to develop out of the programme a definition of logical and examples of the logical approach to problem solving.

VCF Sponsors Lectures By Philadelphia Minister On Marks Of A Christian

A series of our lectures entitled "The Marks of a Christian" will be conducted by Rev. Donald Grey Barnhouse, D.D., minister of the historic Tenth Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. The series which will begin tomorrow and run through to Friday, is sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship. The lectures will be held in Rm. 8, UC, from 5:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m.

REV. BARNHOUSE

Dr. Barnhouse pursued his studies in a number of Colleges and Universities both in the United States and France. While on the staff of the University of Pennsylvania, and taking graduate work there, he was Pastor of the Grace Presbyterian church in Philadelphia from which he was called to Tenth Church in 1927.

Some years ago he visited the major mission fields of the world, spending a summer in Russia and another in Germany studying the religious situations there.

He has spoken in many Anglican churches ad many of the largest Presbyterian churches in England, Scotland and Ireland. He has also spoken in many of the leading colleges and universities of the world.

The University of Western Ontario's band, led by three baton-twirling majorettes (in perfect step, the perceptive reader will notice), takes the field for their halftime display at last Saturday's game. This is two fewer majorettes than usual but (as the perceptive reader will notice again, he's got eyes, that boy) the symmetry of the formation is still present.

Students Scatter, Bloops In Hands

By AUBREY GOLDEN

A bugler solemnly played taps as students dispersed from around Varsity stadium, bloops in hand, late Saturday afternoon. A scant 300, dressed in funeral - parlour purple and white, looked happy, distracting from the comforting companionship which misery enjoys.

The engineers went unnoticed as they scored the only victory of the day and carried the goal-posts down St. George. Even they showed respect in keeping with the general mood as the last few drops, saved for a victory toast, remained in the hip flasks and bottles.

Never let it be said that Western didn't co-operate with us, for during the half-time demonstration by our combined cheerleading squad and band, four Westerners helped out, thus insuring the success of the show. One was carrying a jug, full of embalming fluid no doubt, and while he was offering everyone on the field a drink his three cohorts "aided" the cheerleaders no end.

The engineers, much to the delight of the stadium officials, performed two swan dives into the arms of their waiting assistants who were enthusiastically shaking the goalposts. Later, to the accompaniament of the Blue and White band, repairmen took them down and then replanted the weakened supports. Not a helpig hand was offered from the Skulemen.

Augustus, the Law school horse, came to the game and appeared to be in good health. He showed himself to be fit by jumping over the Varsity horse in such fine style that a Canadian Cahmpionship for Jumpers is being tried on for size in the Law School trophy case.

The courageous steed repulsed a horde of engineers, (who should be reported to the Human Society), as they attempted to bring the recently-ill Augustus to defeat.

There was only one half-time casualty which was really damaged beyond repair. As the previously-mentioned Western assistants to our cheerleaders left the field they ran right through a sign advertising the Pharmacy Dance. Oh well, they must have forgotten their glasses or maybe their trouble was that they remembered them.

It has been rumoured that the Meteorologists were slightly disturbed by the side effects of the game which disrupted their instruments. It seems that the delicate devices used to measure the various things which slightly haywire due to the alcoholic content of the air, rising over Varsity Stadium.

This tale has been proven unfounded as have some others. For instance, don't let anyohe tell you we lost Saturday. Who knows, it may just be a rumour.

CCF—Big World Trends Are In Tune—Coldwell

"The CCF is a movement in tune with the great trends all across the world," said M. J. Coldwell national leader of the CCF at a meeting of the University of Toronto CCF club, held in West Hall of university College. He spoke to an audience of over 150 people, on the "General Political Situation of Canada since the August Federal Election'.

Coldwell outlined the development of the CCF party from the year of its organization in 1933, to the present. He said that the CCF was a member of a worldwide federation of socialist parties, and was the only North American representative.

"The CCF is a political movement drawing its members from a true cross-section of Canadians. It is a party with a completely Canadian outlook, attempting to establish in Canada a co-operative society for the common weal."

He said that in Canada most of the progressive social measures passed by the federal government could be directly attributed to the efforts that the CCF has made to have these measures given to the Canadian people. "While the CCF has never attained office, they have had a profound effect on the social legislation passed by the government." As examples he cited the Old Age Pensions, Marketing Boards, and Family Allowances.

Of international affairs, Coldwell said, "Force of arms will not maintain a permanent peace." We must remove the conditions of poverty, misery, and want, to fight communism, he said. "Two people out of three who go to bed tonight, will go to bed hungry. Men will turn to communism if there is not an attempt made to build up the economies of the underdeveloped countries. People of backward countries are demanding better conditions, and we must provide them with some assistance or suffer the consequences."

Coldwell lauded the British Labour party for its action in granting India its freedom, and he called on France to give Indo China, Morocco and Algeria their freedom, to prevent further trouble. He said a policy of race segregation such as the South Africans are promoting, play right into the hands of the Kremlin. "We shouldn't condemn the American people just because of phenomena like Senator McCarthy." "It is a few people like this who are giving the US its bad name," he said.

BC Campus May Join 'Burnings'

Vancouver, Nov. 10 — (CUP) — Students at UBC may burn effigies of both Senator McCarthy and Col. McCormack. The University of British Columbia students have "joined the attacks on McCarthy" calling him a "fascist" and telling him to "stay out of Canada".

An article in the UBC newspaper said that "much support was found . . . for the (Toronto) effigy burning, and students have hinted effigies of both McCarthy and McCormick may be burned . . ."

The UBC paper identified McCormick as the "English-baiting editor of the Chicago Tribune," who called the Toronto students "illogical and depraved."

The presidents of the UBC Social Problems Club and the Civil Liberties Union both attacked McCarthy in print.

Brown Raps Few Voters

"Politics need not be dirty. We only get the type of government we deserve," H. A. Brown, candidate for mayor in the forthcoming municipal elections said yesterday. He was speaking in the JCR at a meeting sponsored by the Political Economy Club.

Mr. Brown said the voters of Toronto think they are too busy to bother with civic government. Only 34 percent of them voted in the last election.

The question of the two-year term was brought up. Brown said: "We have no way of judging it because we have not had it yet." He does not feel it would make any more interest in elections.

Norm Chalmers, a member of the panel, asked Brown about the extension of municipal franchise to everyone over twenty-one. Brown said that the question is whether this would be a benefit. He wanted to know if the students felt themselves equally equipped with the people who vote now.

"The people who have been affected (by not voting) are not showing any great concern," he said.

Brown felt there should not be parties in the municipal government. At the moment the members of the government are free to vote according to their own wishes having no worry about party backers.

A decided "no" was the verdict on the question whether there should be a penalty for non-voters. Brown said this would be impossible to enforce. Also it would not encourage intelligent voting. He said the law would not be popular and that a law will only work when a majority of people want it.

Concerning rent control, Brown said that since the Board of Control asked Premier Frost to continue it, they must believe it is a good thing for Toronto. He himself is in favour of it. He said that those on an average income have no choice but to rent and that if the controls were taken off the landlord could ask any price he wished. This would lead to inflation.

Graham Is Appointed New Institute Director

Appointment of Prof. T. C. Graham as director of the Institute of Business Administration has been announced by President Sidney Smith. Prof. Graham succeeds Prof. V. W. Bladen, who is now Chairman of Department of Political Economy.

Prof. Graham has had a combined business and academic career. He has worked for Massey-Harris and the management consulting firm of J. D. Woods and Gordon, and since 1950 has been a professor in the Institute of Business Administration.

Primary responsibility of the Institute is to conduct courses leading to the degree of Master of Commerce. Courses are also offered in the evening for men and women from the business world, and special courses are held in co-operation with business firms.

Toronto Gets Art Mandate Start Contest

At its annual conference in Montreal this year, NFCUS approved the idea of a National Art Competition for university students, and gave Toronto the mandate for its organization. There has been a lot of discussion as to whether NFCUS is worthwhile, whether it is accomplishing anything. This is, they think, a method of proving the value of their existence.

NFCUS feels that the need for encouragement of Canadian culture is undisputed, and thinks that there is a possibility of discovering a great artist. In any case the "exchange of ideas on a cultural level" will be an important step toward a better understanding among Canadian university students, Toronto's NFCUS committee said.

NFCUS Veep Resigns Cause — Other Duties New Elections Called

NFCUS lost another vice-presidnet last week when Bill Troop, the Maritimes Vice-president resigned because of pressure of other duties.

This means that there are only two voting members left at present on the NFCUS executive. The Quebec vice-president resigned two-weeks-ago, also for personal reasons, and no western vice-president has been elected this year.

NFCUS president Tony Enriquez called today for an election of a new Maritimes vice-president. The five Maritime universities are requested to submit nominations by the end of November and NFCUS hopes to hold the election before Christmas.

Elections have already been called for Quebec and the west.

Tony Enriquez, who is the first full time national president of NFCUS said that his job "sure is a lot of work. Too much is being expected of the national presidency, and we are receiving very little backing from the students themselves."

"On the one hand," he said, "people criticize past NFCUS policies. On the other hand, they expect NFCUS to be carried by a full-time president. "It seems that most of our critics forget that NFCUS is not a private group, or a national president. It is the students themselves."

Enriquez leaves in two weeks for a trip to the western universities. He will visit the Universities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. He will return around Christmas time, then leave about January 1 for the Coordinating Secretariat of Western European Students conference in Istanbul.

Because of Toronto's refusal to pay the NFCUS fee increase, Canada's contribution to the Instanbul conference will have to come from private sources, if the budget is to be balanced.

Four Papers Unite Against Discrimination

Vancouver, Nov. 3 — (CUP) — Four western university newspapers have decided on taking a united editorial stand against discrimination in campus fraternities and sororities.

Representatives from the University of Manitoba's Manitoban, University of Saskatchewan's Gateway and the University of British Columbia's Ubyssey came to this decision at a recent western regional CUP conference.

Massacre Of The Intellectuals

Monstrous accusations have been brought forward against McCarthy; accusations that would be comic were they not so serious. He has been burned in effigy; he has been called the "Master American Communist"; he has been thrown into the mud and trampled upon. Even CBS's Stanky makes passes at him. And all that because he, in his own way endeavours to stamp out the Red Menace which had entrenched itself so firmly in the USA during the administrations of the naive Roosevelt and the not-so-naive Truman.

The vanguard of the attack against McCarthy is comprised of intellectuals who clamour that they are being persecuted. Yet, if they have nothing to hide why do they not take the oath. McCarthy summons men before the Committee whom, upon the evidence of the FBI, he has very good reason to suspect of being dupes of the Kremlin. Actually, quite a large number of intellectuals have been found to be members of the Communist Party. But that does not mean that all intellectuals are Communists. They have always been the greatest cause in overthrows of governments by radicals, not because they were radicals or revolutionaries themselves, but because they preferred to remain moderates during a death-struggle. Because they thought they could sit on the fence and understand both sides. Poor Girondins, most of them learned their mistake while facing Sampson's basket. Poor Russian idealists, who were fed romanticism, social democracy and the Duma. They learned their mistakes while facing the guns of the charlatans who in the name of the people murdered those very liberators of the people.

Intellectuals can be classified into two groups: first, there is a group which, like Raynal, Voltaire, Rousseau, Tolstoy and Shaw, press for reform. Yet, they press for reform without realizing that such a speedy change will only bring chaos and anarchy for, as Plato says "if they (the masses) could lay their hands on the man who was trying to set them free and lead them up, they would kill him". A harmless and beneficial change can come only with an imperceptibly cautious scheme to change public opinion without hardly letting the public notice it. England is a perfect example of this method. Man naturally abhors change and if such is to be brought about then only slowly. Otherwise man's nature revolts and he turns into a wild beast and then the philosophers and the intellectuals are massacred for their labours by that "headless multitude" which they strove to save.

The second group is composed of those who, like our present-day intellectuals sit in an ivory-tower, surveying the struggle beneath them. They try to explain the causes of this struggle by evolving wonderful theories. Yet, even if their theories were true, since when does understanding imply agreement? I will understand the causes which have led a man to become a homicidal maniac; yet by understanding them I will not allow myself to be murdered by him. I will understand that Marxism is based on an out-of-date view of human society; that it was just a passing phenomenon; a reaction. A view that has been changed since the capitalist society has emancipated the economic slaves of the nineteenth century to the present-day workers—owners of houses, cars, TV sets and any other comparative luxuries they wish to purchase. Communism is no more capable of presenting a nice picture to the masses of the North American Continent since those masses have been brought up to a level from which the prospect of a communal, private-propertyless society seems horrid and debasing.

We are engaged in a life-or-death struggle. The cold war is many respects much more horrible than the hot war. To sit and meditate on the iniquities of man, to take anaemic measa la '1984', that is which most of ures, in form of UN resolutions etc., against the impending doom us consider to be the right way out of the muss into which our "wise" statesmen of the forties have placed us. The fist-law, not a diplomatic note must be employed. One strong man arose, McCarthy, who realized the need of "cleaning out the joint".

Our "wise" men say—"let us discuss this whole matter intelligently; "intelligent discussion will always lead to agreement". That is true. Yet an intelligent discussion can only take place where the opposing parties are on roughly the same level of mental development. Has ever a man, confronted by a lion, tried to discuss the possibilities of a peaceful settlement by giving him (the lion) a piece of his thigh on the condition that he will be left in peace? Russia is such a lion. To indulge with her in discussion is just a bloody waste of time. Annihilate Communism and then continue with your freedom of speech and liberty of conscience. But until then let us be patient for otherwise those very democratci conceptions will bring about our downfall and will introduce into the world the Reign of Horror, such as humanity would not think possible

Good Thing ?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As the saying goes, one never appreciates a good thing until it has flown. Through forgetfulness I did not get a copy of The Varsity one morning. As I drank coffee in Hart House after my last lecture, I felt that something was missing. Without my Varsity, I felt lost. Then it occurred to me how much a daily campus newspaper means to the students of this university. Even Skulemen read and enjoy The Varsity. But how many readers think of the prodigious amount of work involved in publishing the paper? On behalf of the readers of The Varsity, let me thank the Varsity staff for their efforts.

As for The Varsity, I feel I should mention one phase in which it fails the student body. Like myself, many students do not have access to radios, or have time to read the daily papers. If The Varsity could publish each day a curt resume of important news items, I, like many others would know what was going on in the big world.

A Bad Tree

The Editor,
The Varsity:

To the series of letters and articles for and against McCarthyism, concluding with Mr. Peev's, "Ruthlessness Is Needed", some wisdom might be added.

To those who would build up an unhealthy fear (we have been led to believe, by Dr. Bernhardt, that a certain amount of fear is healthy) of McCarthyism; it might be to the point to add that the same kind of fear started it. An old Hebrew proverb assures us that, "Truthful lips endure for ever, but a lying tongue is but for a moment."

Those who, like Mr. Peev, advocate the continuance of Mr. McCarthy's methods, might be reminded that, "if anyone slays with the sword, with the sword must he be slain." Also that, "a bad tree cannot bear good fruit."

In answer to the threats of Communism: "Repay no one evil for evil; no, if your enemy is hungry, feed him; if he is thirsty, give him drink; for by so doing you will heap burning coals upon his head. Do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good."

Consider the effect of the American food relief to East Germany on the Communists. Consider the U.N. Technical Assistance Program; this year; U.S.S.R, the Vatican and others have given aid also. If we west-

Glen Gould In Piano Recital

Glen Gould's playing of his demanding programme proved that he is much beyond the student stage in music. His Bach Three Part Inventions, E Minor, F major, B flat major and D minor rank among the best we hear. The Allemande of the Partita number five in G major was exceptionally well phrased; his tone was warm throughout the whole. Even in such a difficult work he was always technically able to produce exactly the effect he wanted.

The Schoenberg "Three Piano Pieces" were never percussive as is often the case in modern music. Rather than the dissonant thumping of notes with little meaing which would usually be heard from such a youg pianist, Gould was able to give us large rounded tonal effects which made the pieces a very pleasant selection.

As a contrast Glen Gould played the ever-demanding Sonata Opus 110 by Beethoven. His arpeggios in the first movement were quite outstanding for their relaxed quality. Later on in the quieter sections he was able to produce a very rich singing melody.

The Recitatives were carefully thought out and played with precision, but the highlight of the Sonata was his superb entrance to the Fugue. Perhaps the left hand could have been more prominent in the octave subject theme. Undoubtedly with more mental maturity he will become more emotional and individualistic rather than characteristic in his performance.

Gould's informal chat before his encore—Berg's Sonata Opus 1 —made this part seem quite separate from the recital. His technical ability and warmth again proved what can be done with moderns to make them exquisite instead of headaches.

Glee Club Concert

The average Torontonian doesn't often get the chance to see the Great Hall at Hart House but on Saturday night many did at the Inter-University Choral Concert. McMaster, Varsity and Cornell universities were represented in a concert varied in depth and mood.

The McMaster choir was first on the programme keeping more to the lighter vein, and considering the proportions of the chorus of some odd-99 voices things went well. Conductor Roy McKeen Wiles controlled the group fairly well but there were several untidy releases not to mention attacks. In a choir of such large forces there is always the danger of overemphasizing the consonants for the sake of the diction — the effect being percussive rather than melodious. That they went flat was of little consequence, for they all did it together and none but "perfect pitchers" could object. None the less I am grateful that they spared us the tour de force treatment common among large choirs and remained pleasantly intimate throughout.

The now familiar, and I might add popular, Hart House male chorus followed in a group of varied selections. One can not help but be impressed with the tidy sound that this group achieves in regard to phrasing, diction, and attack. Unfortunately, overdone it becomes a hazard, chopping up the phrasing and destroying that long line so essential to choral music. At their best they were dynamic and convincing, and at their worst a little disjointed. The blend was not always impeccable, the lower voices tending to overshadow the first tenors who, by the way, did a Herculean task for their numbers. Ward McAdam can be congratulated for his meticulous work which showed to advantage in The Drinking Song by Gustav Holst, that concluded the local group's part in the concert.

The concert took on an international flavour with the appearance of the Cornell University A Cappella Chorus, a stunning choral group all the way round. Their diction was flawless, be it of French, German or English, the blend always leaving little to be desired. The real "coup de grace" was their rendition of In Stiller Nacht by Brahms which was a master stroke of subtlety, quiet intensity and beauty. Conductor Robert Hull successfully combined the solo quality of fine singers and the choral quantity indicative of characteristic choral sound. Their program, almost entirely American, was enjoyable for its contemproary element and yet not too modern to be irritable to the masses. Well done, friends.

The last group, a combined effort was massive if not convincing. The Echo Song — Di Lasso — lost its intimacy, Healey William's Angus Dei dragged badly and My Ain Hoose lacked the bright spirit so necessary to the work. But all in all it was a thoroughly enjoyable concert, and I hope there will be more of the same in the future.

The Curious Savage

There are in Toronto a number of small but enthusiastic groups of amateur actors who receive little attention because they rely for their audiences not on the general public but on their own members. Most of the general public, in fact, has never heard of them. Tracking down a clue about one of these groups, Theatre '49, I went to see their production of "The Curious Savage" by John Patrick.

It is difficult to know whether or not to recommend their choice for although this play, like most successful comedy, calls for more polish and sparkle than most amateur actors are able to bring to it, still the group deserves credit for tackling something rather more ambitious than usual.

As the evening progressed, the actors gained in assurance and lightness of touch, and the play picked up speed proportionately. Some of their scenes were very entertaining and the curtain fell on a quite successfully touching tableau.

There are a good many laughs in the play which only the smoothness and experience of a professional company could bring out; the Theatre '49 players missed a good many but they rescued enough to keep the play from dragging.

The funniest and perhaps the most convincing performance was turned in by Fran Lipton as Mrs. Paddy, an otherwise delightful lady who hates everything and never speaks. Miss Lipton's characterization was sufficiently exaggerated to be amusing without turning into a meaningless caricature.

Elsie Watson's performance as Mrs. Savage was competent and often sympathetic; she was especially successful in her humorous moments. Aileen Taylor succeeded in making Fairy May an amazing little creature, scarcely believable but very likeable. Miss Willie, as played by Barbara Belling, was the last word in tactful efficiency although her frequent overacting made her sympathy often appear synthetic.

"The Curious Savage," although not a good play, is a successful one. The fact that it is so well-constructed keeps it running smoothly and logically but at the same time kills the suspense because it is obvious for what end each contrivance has been introduced. The Theatre '49 group performed with interest and thoroughness; they showed great discretion in their casting and although they did a neatly finished job they refrained from assuming a false professional polish.

Under the circumstances in which they were working this was the only wise course. The Victoria Auditorium is very small and the stage regrettably high and narrow. The lighting facilities are, I gather, inadequate; at any rate the results achieved were unimaginative, though not obtrusively bad. The set was naturally somewhat crowded; however it was sufficient if uninspired.

Theatre '49 seems to be an ambitious group who take their theatre seriously and are not content to remain in the mediocre amateur class. It will be interesting to see whether they succeed in leaving it when they try their luck with their next play which appears at Hart House in April. Perhaps with the advantage of better technical conditions they will be able to introduce a performance which has at once more depth and more lightness of handling as well, perhaps, as more professional assurance and agility.

Their presentation was amateur and not particularly rewarding but it had an air of thorough and conscientious rehearsal which is a good basis for a brighter future.

Ethel Waters

Ethel Waters has been a citizen of the entertainment world for many, many years. And those thousands of hours of singing and actig on stages, in night clubs, i recording studios ad before motion picture cameras have had their effect. The Ethel Waters voice, which is currently entranc ing the customers at the Casion theatre, is not the vibrant, full-ranged voice of a decade ago. But the Ethel Waters personality shines through and that is more than suffieient.

Time was when Ethel Waters was the Lena Horne or Dorothy Dandridge of her daz. Her first important recording was in 1927, when a song with the rather dubious title of "Shake That Thing" made her a star. Ste doesn't sing "Shake That Thing" in this particular show.

What she does sing, though, is a sort of compressed version of her many-facted career in the hteatre. "St. Louis Blues", "Taking a Chance of Lone" and "Cabin in the Sky" which have become associated with Miss Waters' name are reprised for the benefit of Toronto audiences.

The range of emotion this person can convey in a group of songs is amazig, to say the least. I would say that her "Stormy Weather" is the most impressive in this connection. She imparts a great deal of feeling to Cole Porter's lyrics, which are seldom sung in their proper context. From sadness here, she moves to a hopped-up, mirthful version of Handy's "St. Louis Blues" and on to a couple of ribald selections which don't have any particular titles. She seems able to sing these varying types of music without stepping out of character.

In conclusion, she suggests that "you take this thought away from the theatre with you" and musically expresses her conviction of the existence of a "Cabin in the Sky". Of course, singers have a habit of turning serious and sending you away with a thought. The number of times "I Believe" has been used this way is appalling. The differnece here is that Ethel Waters is sincers.

Special mention should be made of Miss Waters' musical accompaniment which is provided by Reginald Deane at the piane. Mr. Deane is a very talented musician and his delicate and tasteful artistry is a decided asset to the performance.

The supporting acts this week are uniformly good in their own fields. Tops is Wally Dean, an extremely funny young man, who has two or three origial characterizations as well as a rapid-fire succession of jokes. The Three Fleetwoods are a trio of inte and imaginative dancers. The other two acts aren't new by any means but are pleasantly diverting: th Campbells, who juggle, and the Simpsons, who manipulate a group of marionettes.

Commencing Thursday, the Casino's attraction will be Christine Jorgenson, a "differe!" sort of girl.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Hodge-Podge

Starting off this hodge-podge of film is Strange Witness, which recently departed the Studio theatre but will doubtless turn up sooner or later at one of the neighbourhood movie houses. In the opinion of this reviewer, later would be just as good as any time. Strange Witness (European title: Angelo tra la Folla) is a slick, well-realized, and sentimental film about a small mulatto boy's misadventures which, despite the first-class treatment the Italian film industry has given it, is a total bore from beginning to end. I must admit I am probably slightly prejudiced by a congenital inability to appreciate films in which a small child (innocent young girl, aged gentlemen, dying mother) spreads cheer throughout the great city and solves the deepest problems of everyone he comes in contact with. Still, Strange Witness offers little that is either new or intuitive. The plot sustains a dead level of mediocrity but is, thank heaven, cinematically presented.

The Holly and the Ivy, at the International Cinema, is another film which could be castigated on various grounds but holds up rather better than Strange Witness. An English film made by George More O'Ferrall, from a play by Wyndeham Brown, it has Ralph Richardson in an excellent performance as an aging vicar whose devoted daughter (Celia Johnson) believes she will be forced to give up marriage with a presentable young engineer in order to take care of her absentminded but loveable father.

Distasteful as this concoction sounds, The Holly and the Ivy has its moments, chiefly due to superb performances by Richardson, Miss Johnson, the old Vic's Margaret Leighton and Denholm Elliott, and an elderly lady with an Irish accent named Maureen Delany. Totally uncinematic in presentation, The Holly and the Ivy deliberately achieves the atmosphere of a play: its situations and dialogue are cramped and talky. The dialogue, though there is often too much of it, is complex, clever, and a constantly sharp revelation of character. As a play, The Holly and the Ivy is average or a little better; as a film — enigmatic.

The best movies I have seen in the past two weeks, however, are both under twenty minutes long, and both from Canada's often-maligned National Film Board. At the Towne Cinema, Allan Wargon's Varley is being shown with The Beggar's Opera, and the long-awaited cartoon The Romance of Transportation is running with The Holly and the Ivy at the International. An admirably short, and stunningly succinct presentation of the life and work of the artist Frederick Varley, the Wargon film never attempts to remark on every phase of the artist and his activity, and achieves its effect with simple well-chosen images or incidents. The score by Louis Applebaum is is tense, evocative, yet unobtrusive, and the colour photography and set design far beyond any Film Board work I have ever seen. Despite a palpably weak ending, Varley leaves the over-all impression that it may have ushered in the era of genuinely mature, creative work which Canadian Film has been awaiting ever since John Grierson organized the Film Board as a monument to the perpetuation of the creed of the functional film.

The Romance of Transportation, an animated film which adopts much that is best in the style of the UPA cartoons, still has a great deal that is new to contribute on its own. Like Varley, it substantiates my impression that Canadian film has achieved its majority. Slight, subtle, and individual, The Romance of Transportation certainly isn't the funniest cartoon ever made, but achieves that elusive, engaging, rather personal quality known as "distinctively Canadian" which heretofore has seemed confined to the humour of Eric Nichol and to radio plays like The Man from Number Ten. There are those who would regard it as a dubious distinction. I personally like good Canadian films, art and literature as well, and often better than the best produced by foreign lands like the U.S of A.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

CONGRATULATIONS

To the University of Western Ontario go the congratulations of The Varsity. The Yates goes back to Western again thanks to one of the most spectacular finales seen in Intercollegiate play at Varsity Stadium in a long, long time. That the Mustangs won is not to be denied. The final score was 12-8 even though the statistics indicate that for most of the game the Blues ran wild through the purple and white. But yards rushing won't figure in the league records a few years hence, only the fact that Western won the Yates. So congratulations to John Metras, Murray Henderson particularly, Jacques Belec, Gino Fracas et al.

METRAS

To Coach Bob Masterson and the University of Toronto Blues also go congratulations. Not for winning the Yates although the game statistics would indicate that they did win the silverware. But for playing some inspired ball. The only thing between the Blues and the Yates was a 52-yard pass to Murray Henderson that resulted in the game winning touchdown. It will probably be quite a while before you see such a play in a Yates playoff again. It was one of those once-in-a-lifetime plays.

OUR TEAM

Our team has nothing to be ashamed of. They played a great game. A lot of the credit goes to the Coach, Bob Masterson. A lot of the credit goes to a game bunch of lads like Bill McFarlane, Phil Muntz, Bob Waugh, Baz Mackie, Don Smith, Joe Scime, Pete Maik, Steve Oneschuk, Bruce Johnson, Gene Chorestecki, Bill Horton, and the rest. They all deserve mention. They all played good games.

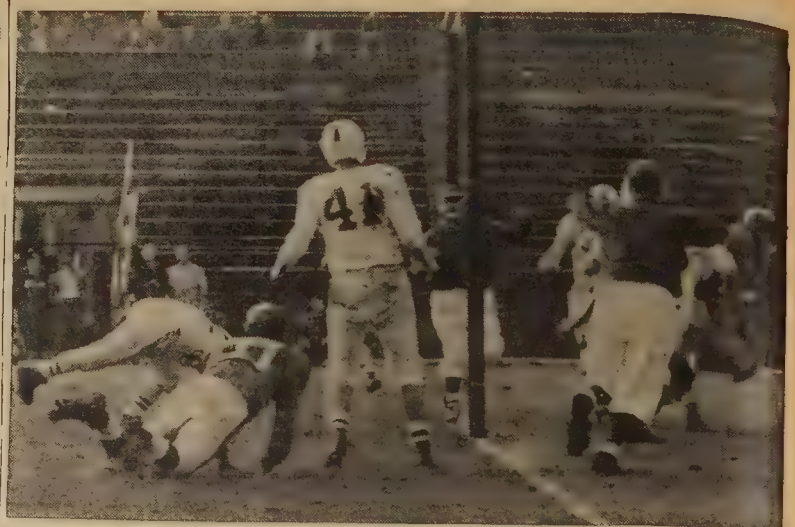
THE UNIVERSITY

The University should be proud of their team. Over the year they played great ball and entertaining ball. That they fell short of the Yates is a disappointmnt but not enough to take anything away from our representatives. For that's what they are' as good if not the best group of representative students as you could find on the campus.

DON'T FORGET

In thinking back on the play of the year and Saturday's game there are a few things that the average fan will forget. At the beginning of the season few vets came back from last year. That is true of the line particularly but also of the backfield. Baz Mackie, Roy McMurtry, Don Mattason and Alex Macklin were the only ones who had played for last year's Blues. Up from the Intermediates came a group of rookies such as Bobby Waugh, Joe Scime, Jack Strapp, John Wismer, and John Meaker. Macklin was hurt in the first game with Western here. Later Joe Harris came back to add some experience. But by and large it was up to the rookies to fill the gaps.

MASTERSON



And fill the gaps they did. So well in fact that they came within one play of winning the Yates from a Mustang aggregation that was packed with vets.

In the backfield the Blues were a little better off. Bill Bewley was the only loss from the year before. But in the pre-season game with the Beaches, Bob Kimoff, on whom a lot of hope was placed, was lost with a knee injury. Looking around frantically there didn't seem to be anyone to take Kim's place. But that wasn't reckoning with another

Nobody Stops Phil

Varsity's Phil Mntz can be seen on the far right after going over with the lone Blue TD of the day, in the first quarter of Saturday's Intercollegiate playoff. The major came five minutes after Western had gone into the lead 6-0. Western finally won the game in the last quarter with 50 seconds left to play in the game when Don Getty tossed a long pass to Murray Henderson for the winning touchdown. In the above picture, Varsity's Al Haig (71) is on the ground at left and Western's Don Getty (41) stands close by.

Mustangs Do It Again
Blues' Weekend Black

carried it 30 yards for a touchdown which Gino Fracas converted. Phil Muntz dipsy-doodled for a Varsity major and Steve Oneschuk converted to even it up before the quarter ended. Then in the second period, Jocko Thompson kicked a single to put the visitors in front again. Oneschuk evened it again in the third with a single and Al Haig made it 8-7 early in the final stanza. When that happened, Toronto fans started counting up their winnings. But they reckoned without the arm of Mr. Getty which suddenly came to life as the minute flag went up.

Toronto's ground attack rolled as usual. It piled up 279 yards to Western's 112. It made 16 first downs to Western's nine. But most of those yards and first downs were made around midfield and the attack seemed to falter inside the Western 30-yard line. Western completed five of 15 passes for 102 yards, while the Blues completed two of eight for 47 yards.

Western's Gino Fracs played himself into exhaustion, working hard both ways and piling up good gains every time he got the ball. Fullback Jacques Belec carried frequently and well for the Mustangs, as he, along with guards Jack Thompson, Jack Fowler and Jack Wyatt, was playing his last game of college ball. Quarterback Getty wasn't impressive until that last minute when he uncorked an 11-yard pass to Don Killinger and then the 52-yard touchdown play to Henderson.

Steve Oneschuk, playing with an injured shoulder ran for a couple of long gains and played strong defensive ball. Bill McFarlane, athough it was his fumbe that Prowse ran for a touchdown in the first quarter, cam on in the second half to play outstandingly both ways. Small Pete Maik, replacing Don Cheeseman at fullback, was a tower of defensive strength. He was in on numerous tackles, ran back kicks 11 yards a try from the safety spot and even carried on a bit of a feud with 6'2" Ted Roman (Maik is 5'9"). Phil Muntz, who has led the Varsity running attack all year, did the same Saturday with the peak coming in the first quarter when he scored the Blues' only touchdown. Ed Skrzypek had thrown a long pass to Ted Kennedy in the end zone. It was ruled complete for interference, giving Varsity first down at the Western 10-yard line. After one play failed, Muntz scooted through the middle of the Western team for the major.

The Varsity wingline outplayed the Western behemoths all afternoon. Roy McMurtry, Joe Scime and Joe Harris at tackle and Don Mattason, Bob Waugh and Baz Mackie at guard were stopping the Western running plays before they started and giving quarterbacks Skrzypek and Mandryk plenty of time to get their plays rolling. The ends — Gene Chorostecki, Fred Smale, Ted Kennedy and Don Smith — played well, with Chorostecki doing some very efficient blocking.

It was a good day for the kickers. Jocko Thompson got away some terrific 60 and 70-yarders in the second half but was outkicked on the average by Varsity's Al Haig. Each contributed a single with Steve Oneschuk getting another for Varsity on an attempted field goal from 30 yards out.

Blue Notes — Joe Harris, Bill McFarlane, Al Haig, Roy McMurtry and possibly Olie Mandryk were playing their last games in Blue suits . . . The crowd of about 12,000 was somewhat disappointing in view of the perfect weather conditions. The tarpaulin had kept the field dry despite a heavy rainfall in the early morning . . . Biggest cheer went up when it was announced that Balmy Beach was leading Winnipeg out west . . . And that's the story of college football for 1953.

Forestry Upstarts And SPS St. Mike's Scarlet And Gold In Semi-Final Games Today

An underdog will attempt to upset a powerhouse and two arts colleges will clash this afternoon at Varsity stadium in the Mulock Cup semi-finals. SPS and Forestry play in the first game at 12:45 and then Victoria College and St. Michael's meet at 2:45.

In the event of rain, games could be moved to the back campus. The Grey Cup game is scheduled for Saturday and stadium officials would not want to risk having the field ruined.

The winners of these two games will meet Thursday in the Mulock final which is tentatively scheduled for the stadium at 1:30.

St. Mike's and SPS won their respective divisions. The Skule Combines won six straight games while St. Mike's had a five-and-one record in Group Two. Vic, the defending champion, broke even in six starts Forestry, with a vastly undermanned squad, started weakly, but came on strong to beat out Trinity for a playoff spot. The Foresters are the only outfit to beat St. Mike's this season.

Skule is heavily favored to win their first Mulock Cup since 1945. The engineers entered only one team this year instead of the usual two and, as a result, are very strong in every department. Last season. Vic and St. Mike's met at the Bloor Bowl in the final with the Vicsters carting off a lopsided win.

PUCKMEN START WELL

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Being a sideliner can be a pretty tough job but that's the part we little girls play year in and year out in the Fall. We sit through sleet and snow, rain and wind cheering, yelling, laughing and sometimes crying for the big boys in Blue.

Well, it's all over for another year and the cigarette manufacturers can slow up production for a while. We would venture to say that more nicotine was inhaled here Saturday afternoon than ever before. Along with smoke, shmog dust and screams the old lungs really took a beating but it was worth it. We didn't win but we're still proud of our team. They played like they've never played; before; we cheered like we've never cheered before. And if the upset had to happen in the last minute of play — well it's just the way of the world.

So from all us sideliners to all you Blues and Blues' fans, here's our thanks for a wonderful season and here's to another year on the gridiron.

Year's Statistics

Now that the regular intercollegiate football season has run its six game course, Varsity team statistician Ray Yakasovich, a veteran of last season's squad, ha completed the statistics, showing just about every mathematical aspect of the season so far.

	Tor.	Opp.
First Downs Rushing	77	49
First Downs Passing	25	23
Yards Rushing	1517	938
Yards Passing	660	434
Number of Plays	275	223
Passes Attempted	91	99
Passes Completed	39	38
Kicks	63	75
Yards Kicking	2716	3219

Individually, the Blues showed a number of consistent ground-gainers. Topping the list is rookie Phil Muntz who carried the ball 81 times and made a total of 531 yards for an average of 6.5 yards. Bob Pinkney gained 331 yards in 56 tries, an average of 5.8. Steve Oneschuk averaged 5.9 yards, carrying the ball 45 times for a gain of 269 yards. Bill McFarlane ran 40 times and picked up 211 yards for a 5.3 average. Fullback Don Cheeseman had an average of 10.1 yards per attempt as he picked up 101 yards in 10 plays.

In the passing department, Olie Mandryk threw 39 passes and completed 15 of them for a total gain of 316 yards. Ed Skrzypek tossed 42 times, had 18 completions for 253 yards. Top receiver was Bob Pinkney who caught 12 passes while Al Haig and Steve Oneschuk snagged six each.

In kicking, Al Haig booted 62 times and averaged 43.8 yards against the opposition kickers' average of 42.9 yards. Bill McFarlane did most of the returning, running back 41 kicks an average of 10 yards, thus saving his team a first down every time.

Sick And Mad

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Some of the practices and attitudes on this campus have a sickening effect on me. There is the matter of filling one's pen at the library desks and not replacing the cap on the bottle. So when I pick up the bottle I get ink all over my hands! This is downright vandalism and it makes me sick sick sick. Furthermore it makes me sick to read letters written by those who do not share my opinions. This makes me sick sick sick. Furthermore I don't want to see anybody enjoying themselves, because they never let me go with them. I don't know why, I'm really very agreeable as you can see. My mind's all right, but all this just makes me mad mad mad. As for Communists and Catholics (of which I know nothing), I think they're in cahoots with each other, trying to scare poor me. Engarde! Something is brewing — from which I am again excluded. Now don't nobody contradict me. Even though I have no evidence, I know I'm right and everybody else is wrong. It all makes me sick sick sick and mad mad mad.

Yours for agreeable companionship.

The Lonely Frustrated Student.

ern countries would pour more of our resources into this aid program instead of into defence, perhaps the Communist countris would follow our lead. There is probably an equal amount of fear on both sides of the iron curtain.

When will individuals and nations take this advice of St. Paul and try it, once at least, to see if it works?

young lad by the name of Phil Muntz who came up from the Intermediates to win the plaudits of all followers of the Intercollegiate passtime. Muntz only became one of the best backfield prospects to come out of Varsity since Ted Toogood.

AND PETE

And when there was a big hole in the linebacking crew after the game in London, who stepped in to fill the hole? None other than Pete Maik, another Intermediate. A 5' 9" kid who weighed 175 soaking wet, who was thrown in to stop 210-pound lads like Gino Fracas. And stop them he did. As a matter of fact, he was one of the best on the field Saturday. His runbacks averaged 11.6 yards for seven tries.

NEXT YEAR

The Blues will be in there next year. Likely the Mustangs will be, too. Don't be too surprised to see both teams taking up where they left off on Saturday.

END NOTES

Steve Oneschuk played with novicaine in his shoulder to ease some of the pain from a bad muscular bruise. The CRU tarp, that celebrated piece of cloth, did a good job of protecting the field from overnight rains. The field was in good shape. At half time one of the goal posts had to be replaced thanks to some students who beat the gun. Usually the posts don't come down until after the game.

Outplay Lyndhursts Team But Lose By 3-2 Score Wilkes, Cossar Get Goals

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Varsity hockey Blues have seldom opened a season on as impressive a note as they did Saturday night at East York arena when they skated on even terms with the Lyndhurst East Yorks for two and a half periods of fast, hard-checking hockey before relinquishing a 3-2 decision.

Lyndhursts, a burly, experienced crew that is slated to go to Sweden in February to represent Canada in the world championships, discovered quickly that it couldn't run away from the U of T crew and was hard-pressed to eke out a one-goal margin.

The Blues came from behind twice to tie the score 2-2 at the end of the second period and the winning goal which was fired by Don Couch was only hotly disputed by the Varsity players who claimed Lyndhursts had a man in the goal crease.

Jim Wilkes, commencing his third season of senior hockey, whacked in a pass from Red Stephen for one Varsity goal and rookie Don Cossar slapped in Don Avery's rebound for the other. Norm Gray and Vic Sluce scored the Lyndhurst goals.

Harry Griffiths, who has handled the team while coach Jack Kennedy has been busy as assistant football coach, appears to have developed a couple of polished offensive units. Rep Stephen centres Jim Wilkes and Ernie Bodnar on the first line and the second unit is a "kid" line with three first-year men—Don Cossar making the plays for Robin Logie and Don Avery.

Stephen, Bodnar and Wilkes were flying in mid-season form with all three having excellent scoring chances. Bodnar was back-checking well and Stephen stick-handling in fashion of other seasons. The second line did plenty of thumping and bumping and had the Lyndhurst veterans off balance most of the time.

Regular forwards Ken Lawson and Harry Boyd were out of the line-up with injuries and a third line saw Joe Akitt working with Jim Jerome and Joe Walker.

Lou Appleby, who played part of the season with the Blues last year and was a McGill player the year before, went well on defence and picked up an assist on Cossar's goal. Mal Hughes and Paul Prendergast took regular turns on the blueline with Don Stewart and Barry Smith seeing more action late in the game. Ex-Marlboro John Tolton was playing well on defence until he was injured in the first period.

Jack Ross was a standout in the Varsity goal and had to be on several occasions as the experienced Lyndhurst forwards broke in quite often, especially in the later stages as the blues began to tire.

Blue Notes—The Varsity hitters outbumped the Y.Y.'s beefy defence . . . Lyndhurst were wearing the sweaters they'll wear in the world tourney. Red Stephen, who has played for them all season, was given a sweater although he won't make the trip to Sweden . . . . About 1,000 fans saw the game as it was played as part of the Riverdale Kiwanis hockey night. A group of noted local skaters gave exhibitions of figure skating during the intermissions. . . The Blues play their first league game this Friday when the champions University of Montreal Carabins will be the visitors at Varsity Arena.

We Can Show It

This year the University of Toronto has been mandated by the National Federation of Canadian University Students to conduct a national art competition among university students. It is to be completed after Christmas.

And recently Toronto decided to remain in the Federation, even though the fee increase was repudiated. If Toronto is to stay in NFCUS than it should do its part to back up and support the organization.

The art competition is an ideal project by which Toronto can greatly strengthen an almost ignored aspect of the Canadian Federation. In the past the cultural side of Canadian student development has been side-stepped. Toronto is well-suited for such a competition as it has a faculty of fine arts which would be extremely helpful in an advisory capacity.

The Toronto NFCUS committee has already begun to publicize the competition. But the committee itself can go just so far. It needs support and co-operation from the whole student body.

The problems of a Canadian culture, if there is such a thing, are intimately connected with university students. It is the university community that can lead in the expression of the Canadan culture.

If we have faith in NFCUS—and we've shown we have—we must do something to materialize that faith. The report of the Toronto NFCUS delegates states: "We felt that by accepting this mandate we would be taking positive action in our support of NFCUS." We are staying in the Federation, we are responsible for the competition; now let's do our best.

Profligate Waste

(Reprinted from Queen's Journal)

Last week's Financial Post concluded an editorial with the statement, "It is an unfortunate commentary on our prosperous times that to keep the light of knowledge burning, collecting money must take precedence over all over activities for most of our college presidents."

In the face of this wide public recognition of the crisis in university education the Federal Government failed to mention the topic in last week's speech from the throne. This failure is an outright insult to Canada's youth. There may have been some excuse in the past for generations of Canadians to have had no opportunity to obtain adequate training in professional fields, it is a criminal act at this time to allow such profligate wastage of our natural intellectual resources to continue. The government must recognize its obligations to education and come to the assistance of the universities and the students.

The Government has had before it for over two years the recommendations of the Massey Commission for the establishment of both the Canada Council and a scheme of National Scholarships. As yet it has acted on neither of these two measures which are essential for the progress of education in this country.

It has been stated that 60 per cent more freshmen will be ready to enter university by 1960 than there are today. Within this short time the men responsible for ensuring that facilities are adequate must meet this influx. Adjustments will be necessary and Government finances form the essential basis of these adjustments.

Taylor Reports

From Inside The IUS

At the recent NFCUS Conference in Montreal, the honesty and sincerity of overseas commissioner, Chuck Taylor, were questioned by many of the delegates because he had forwarded a report favoring associate membership with the International Union of Students. Below is a letter by Taylor (who is currently studying in England) written to The Varsity in an attempt to clarify his position about the IUS.

By CHUCK TAYLOR

I have just heard of NFCUS' foreign policy decisions made at the McGill Conference last month. I frankly find them rather disturbing. It seems to me that some of the vital issues involved have not been as well understood as they deserve to be. I should like, with your permission, to try to present some of these to the readers of The Varsity.

THE RELATIONS OF NFCUS to the IUS have always been the subject of heated debate ever since the IUS was founded in 1946. And rightly so. The day is past when the students of Canada can remain West of the Atlantic and withdraw from the affairs of the student world. This is so true, it has become a platitude All Canadian students recognize it, and the McGill Conference recognized it in reaffirming NFCUS' support of Cosec.

Now any international policy has to take account of the IUS, if only because it groups a large and, whether we like it or not, important section of the student world. But I don't believe that the issues which the IUS raises have always been fully grasped in NFCUS discussions on the subject. And it is very important that they should be.

IT HAS BEEN SAID MANY TIMES that the IUS is "communist-dominated". This is literally true, but it is essential to realize what this involves. Virtually the entire Secretariat and Executive of the IUS consist of Communists and Communist-sympathizers. They do not want to, and it is doubtful whether they are free to follow anything but a Communist line. This involves, of course, a desire to spread Communism throughout the world — a desire which they share with other Communists everyhere.

So much is tolerably certain. But I do not believe that this is enough to frame a policy. It is certainly not enough of a reason to refuse membership in the IUS. And it never has been. The Western unions who withdrew from the IUS in the year 1949-50 did so, not because the IUS was Communist, but because it used flagrantly unconstitutional and underhand methods to further a partisan end. The Prague Congress of 1950 was the all-time low. Western delegates were bullied into silence. All sorts of glaring breaches of procedure were countenanced or used by the IUS leaders in impressing their will on the meeting, and the Congress was carried on in the continuous atmosphere of a demonstration. It was this together with actions like the expulsion of the Yugoslavs which led Western Unions to disaffiliate, because they saw no further possibility of any fruitful co-operation, or even of self-expression.

THE FACT THAT THE IUS is communist-dominated is not a sufficient reason for having nothing to do with it. An attitude of this kind is not clear-sighted in the least. The really operative questions are what is the IUS doing, what policy is it adopting? What are its aims? Communist organizations differ largely in function if not in basic altitude, and so it is necessary to ask, and answer, these questions. I would never recommend associate membership in the Red Army. But I think associate membership in the IUS is worthy of consideration.

The fact is that IUS tactics have changed considerably since the Prague Congress, and even since last year's Council Meeting in Bucharest. Warsaw reflected this change. The policy of bullying, hostility, calumny and name-calling has been largely replaced by one of toleration, with some small degree of give-and-take, and comprehensiveness. In short the policy of the "United Front". Of course, this is tied up with many important developments in the Communist world, some of which are difficult to trace. But the purpose, on the student level, apart from the general relaxation of world tension that international communism seems currently to desire, is to secure as broad support as possible — communist and non-communist — for a certain watered-down programme. This, to the IUS, is a means of spreading Communism and a means which has been used many times before since 1917 — alternative to, and often more effective than the other policy of bullying which was adopted in the period '47-'50. I believe that the worst thing that we can do in face of this new policy is to back out and refuse contact. Because this is precisely what will make the policy of the United Front an unqualified success. It is in showing up the fear and indifference in the Western World that the IUS will accomplish its end. In this way they will "prove" to the students of colonial and under developed countries that the students of the "capitalist" countries are indifferent to their problems, and have no part to play in international affairs. We just can't afford to reject the outstretched hand of the IUS, even after we have seen through the gesture. Because in doing so we are raising our own "Iron Curtain", we are ourselves violating the principles we have always accused the IUS of violating. And it will appear so to all the world.

AND, FURTHERMORE, it is more important now than ever before that we understand the mentality and outlook of the students of the Communist bloc. Whether we like it or not, this bloc groups about two-fifths of the world's people. We just cannot remain in the same world with them in ignorance and bigotry towards them. Such a policy would be suicidal. It is a platitude that we are living in an age of revolution and upheaval. We absolutely must understand more what is going on. We can only do this by meeting students from these countries whenever possible. Back in 1950, this was barely possible. Now it is becoming more and more so. I do not believe that we can afford to lost this opportunity.

And — to my mind the most important consideration of all — we must not close the door irrevocably on any possible understanding. In doing so we merely intensify the atmosphere of hostility and suspicion that the IUS has created, and is now attempting to dispel. It is foolish to go in blindly, accepting every thing the IUS says at face value. But it seems to me to be morally wrong to refuse the contact and the confrontation that is offered us. It is not a question of whether or not we shall convert or be converted by Communists. It is a question of trying to see each other a little more as human beings, and less as the butt of newspaper cartoons. Of course we must take the communist desire for "Peace and Friendship" with a large grain of salt, but, whatever the aims of their sponsors are, meetings like the Bucharest Festival and the Warsaw Congress do bring about some human contact and understanding, even in spite of formidable ideological blocks. This kind of understanding is at a premium today. We must give it every chance to grow. If only, because it is ultimately one of the essential components of world peace.

IN THE EAST THE IRON CURTAIN is a legal barrier, enforced by border guards, but in the last few years there has grown up in the West a mental Iron Curtain, enforced by widespread anxiety. This is extremely dangerous, since it precludes any possibility of clear thinking and ultimately of humane action. I believe that it is particularly our job as students to break away from ths attitude, and to break down this barrier.

Up till very recently, the IUS gave us no opportunity for real contact. Now, this is becoming possible. This is not the time to recoil in fear and suspicion. We must be clear-sighted and above all we must have the courage of our convictions. It was mainly with this in mind that I made my recommendations to NFCUS. I am sorry that the conference did not see fit to accept them. I hope that they can be reconsidered by Canadian students and that the vital question of our relations with the IUS will not be allowed to drop by the wayside.

SPS, IRISH ENTER FINAL

Got It, Got It!

The Interfaculty sports fans got a preview yesterday afternoon of the action they can expect to see on Thursday in the Mulock Cup playoff. SPS played Forestry and St. Mike's squared off against Vic in the second half of the Interfaculty semi-finals. After it was all over SPS had won 29 1 and St. Mike's had crushed Victoria, 27-9. A Forestry pass is being knocked down by an alert Skule pass defense in the above picture.

Whip Forestry, Vic With Large Scores

By JOHN WILSON

Striking for twenty-two points in the second half behind some fine running by Ron Lyons and George Kelly, and the passing arm of Don Hart, Skule yesterday pushed a determined bunch of Foresters out of the Mulock race with a 29-1 victory.

Forestry opened the scoring early in the first quarter when Don Lowman hoisted a punt over the Skule goal line and Hart was rouged. The score remained 1-0 until late in the quarter. Some hard running by Ron Lyons and George Lewis brought the ball to the Forestry forty. From here Hart hit Don Boynton with a nice pass at the ten and he dragged a couple of tacklers to the Forestry one-yard line. On the next play Hart carried over on a quarterback sneak and Earl Ford converted to make it 6-1 for Skule going into the second stanza. The Forestry halves bobbled the ball four times in this quarter and S.P.S. recovered two of them. However, despite their apparent dropsy, Forestry showed a stronger offence and held S.P.S. to a single point. This came off the toe of Bruce Day after a Skule drive fizzled out on the Forestry thirty.

Trailing by 7-1, Forestry put on a determined attack with Tom White finding Jim Waddell for two beautiful completions at the start of the third quarter. A series of fumbles left Skule on the Forestry forty-five and after two tries at the almost invulnerable Green line, Day booted another long kick into the Forestry end zone.

Late in the third, another Forestry fumble spelt disaster as Cal Weaver picked up the loose ball and galloped sixty yards for a major. Earl Ford again converted. Entering the final frame, enjoying a comfortable 14-1 lead, Skule concentrated on the tiring Green and White front wall. Only able to dress twenty men, Forestry found themselves badly outnumbered by the Blue and Gold machine. Quarter Tom White resorted to a pass attack to get the Woodsmen back in the ball game. Threatening on the Skule thirty-five he pitched into the flat to Waddell, but Gord

A talented and highly spirited St. Mike's squad came back fighting to overcome Vic's early lead and win going away yesterday in a Mulock Cup semi-final game at Varsity Stadium yesterday 27-9. The win puts the Irish into the inter-faculty finals Thursday against SPS.

Despite the score the eventual winners trailed going into the last period 9-5. Then Jim King intercepted at mid-field and ran it back to the two-yard line. Jude Fusco crashed over for the touchdown and Frank Connelly converted to give St. Mike's the deciding edge. On their next play from scrimmage the double blue sent plucky little Dave Winters driving off tackle for sixty yards and another major. Johnny Burns and fleet Phil Wood also added touchdowns and Connelly scored another extra point as St. Mike's rolled up 22 points in the final quarter.

Up to this point the two teams appeared very evenly matched with Vic fighting stubbornly to hold their lead. The Viesters drew first blood midway in the opening period when Don Lewis intercepted a Blue pass and set up Vic's score. The touchdown came on a split-T option play with Norm Williams pitching to Iam MacPherson in the end zone. Williams kept Vic in the game with his accurate passing from the single wing. Although the Red were unable to count another major their aerial attack got them close enough to let Pete Potter kick a single and a field goal and run Vic's lead to 8-0.

The Irish came back strong just before the half as field general John Burns hit Fusco with a 35-yard pass for a major. They were driving again as time ran out for the half. On the last play of the second quarter Burns spotted Hawk Ahearn on the goal line with what appeared to be a touchdown pass but the referee ruled Ahearn had stepped out on the one-foot line. The decision was unpopular.

St. Mike's opened the second half with a powerful drive that brought them to the Vic 25 before they stalled. By now the Double Blues' hard-charging line had halted the Red offense and the game settled down to a defensive battle until King's interception opened the flood gates.

Both teams played well and hard. St. Mike's turned in their best effort of the year and it was just enough to knock off the tough Vic crew. Norm Williams in the tail back slot was probably the best man on the field while halfback Jude Fusco and end Tommy Ahearn were outstanding for the winners. As were Dan Driscoll

Poor Sports Hard Up Steal Books From HH

The Hart House Library, run by a Committee of members of the house, has been losing books. Volumes from its finest collection of philosophical, and historical writings, English, Russian, French, German, and Greek and Roman Classics, biography and modern fiction have been making their way through the door. The Library Committee, noticing this tendency is asking the aid of the members in preventing this exodus. Lists of the missing works will be posted on the Library Notice Board.

The curator of the Library said, "the members are surely aware that the Hart House Library has no weapons with which to defend itself — no reading room slips, no fines, no stack passes. It is all too easy and in no way dangerous for these books to escape. There is no risk; there is no gamble; gentlemen, where is your sporting blood."

Switch Fails Staff Is Held For An Hour

This morning's Varsity almost didn't appear.

Early last night The Varsity copy boy, Clark Deller II UC, was chased across Queen's Park and along Bloor St. by three students whom he described as "real monsters". However, he said, he evaded his pursuers and managed to get the copy on the 8:30 Oshawa bus.

Deller refused to return to The Varsity office which was surrounded by about twenty other students.

As a result of the blockade the 9:30 copy run did not get out, but the rest of the paper managed to be sent out by 10:30 p.m. About 9:00 The Varsity news and editorial offices were invaded by the attackers and an attempt was made to substitute specially prepared copy for The Varsity copy. But it was made clear to the unidentified students that their attempted switch could never succeed, unless all the working staff were kidnapped.

They claimed they had no intention of "being obnoxious" and left the offices soon after. But the production of the paper was postponed for an hour.

Deller, who sought refuge at the SCM House on Bloor St. said later that as he left the SAC building to deliver his first parcel several students charged at him from behind the bookstore. He escaped and ran the rest of the way to the bus stop.

For the "Ayes" will be J. L. Louden, III Meds. and G. S. Kell III Vic. For the "Noes" will be N. Stoner I Law, and Dick Van Praagh IV Meds. The speaker of the House will be H. K. Krever. The Honourable Visitor will be Prof. H. M. McLuhan of St. Michael's College.

In their statements to the press, the speakers for the affirmative issued the following: Kell said, "There can be no doubt about it. The sexual conventions of our society tend to turn us aside from the obvious primose path to the performance of our activities more exquisitely." Louden said, "I consider that the sexual conventions of our society, even though disregarded by a large proportion of the population, are one of the main pillars upon which Christian civilization stands."

For the negative Van Praagh said, "The opposition hopes to abuse and verbally violate the ranting moralists of the affirmative. Now that sex has finally reared its glorious head in an open debate in Hart House, the opposition feels its absolute responsibility to calmly state the facts about sexual limitations and their desirability. Sex is certainly here to stay! But is 'morality'?"

The Hart House debates are based on the English Parliamentary system. This means that there is a speaker to preside over the House and two speakers from each side to speak "from the paper". Then the debate is thrown open to the members of the House, who are permitted to speak "off the cuff" on the subject for five minutes each. The honourary visitor speaks during this period. Also men of distinction in fields related to the topic are asked to address the House in support or opposition to the motion.

It has been said that since its inception, every Prime Minister of Canada has spoken in a Hart House Debate. A search of the records discloses such names as Sir Robert Borden, W. L. MacKenzie, R. B. Bennett, and Louis St. Laurent, as well as political names of such significance as George Drew and G. Howard Ferguson.

Transatlantic cordiality has been manifested in exchange debates. Hart house played host to the debating unions of Cambridge and Oxford as well as from the Universities of Birmingham and London and Edinburgh. Just last year three of our debators visited Oxford and Edinburgh and Hart House was host to an itinerant group of debaters from the "Old Country".

Trial By Brewery

The Varsity, believing that its contributors should be versed in all those processes which go to make The Varsity what it is, cordially invites each and all of them on a conducted tour of a Dundas St. Brewery, which shall be nameless. Refreshments will be provided by our hosts and the excursion will be followed by another of the cultured gatherings known as Varsity Parties. The particulars can be obtained in The Varsity office, by those interested.

Thurber Male Animal Is Latest HH Play All Of Coming Week

The Male Annual by James Thurber and Elliott Nugent will be the second Hart House Theatre production of the current season. This comedy was originally produced eleven years ago and only last season was staged in a very successful revival in New York. It is a play which is even more appropriate to the present day than it was when first written, and especially on a university campus.

The main theme is Thurber's concept of the Battle of the Sexes about which he has written so amusingly for many years. But there is a secondary theme which concerns freedom of speech at a midwestern university in the United States. In the story Professor Tommy Turner plans to read to his class in English Composition a letter by the late Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

This is Vanzetti of the famous Sacco — Vanzetti case in the anarchists, were executed for Twenties. The two men, confessed anarchists, were executed for murder but in the opinion of many people they were innocent of that crime and unjustly executed for their political opinions. A reactionary member of the Board of Trustees forbids Turner to read the letter and he is faced with the decision of exercising academic freedom and thereby losing his job.

Prominent in the cast are Robert Shirriff as Tommy Turner, Paisley Maxwell as Ellen Turner, Reg. Southgate as Joe Ferguson, Norman Griesdorf as Dean Damon and Joel Wagman as Ed Keller.

The play opens on Saturday, November 28 and runs to Saturday, December 6.

What's Coming Up

Christians' Discussion

Arts students, Medics and Theologs argue every Thursday at 1:00 p.m. in the Student Christian Offices in Hart House about the responsibilities of Christian students.

A book "The Christian Student and the World Struggle" is their guide. They discuss the Christian interpretation of history, Christian interpretation in Economics, Politics and Culture.

The writers of the textbooks are Professors, Economists, Ministers and University Students.

The discussions will be led by students.

Vic College To Debate On Miners

"Resolved that this House upholds the actions and principals of the strike in the Northern Ontario gold mines" will be the motion debated at the 95th session of the Victoria College Debating Parliament, tonight at 8 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Victoria College.

Speaking for the government, John Barnes, III Vic, said, "The issues are basically economic. There are no other issues involved." Bob Nadeau, II Vic, also on the affirmative side, said, "I do not think this controversy is a regional issue. In this instance I feel that labour has a very good case and that is why I am supporting them."

On the Opposition side are Alex Langford, IV Vic, and Don Sprung, I Vic. Langford said " . . . in almost any industrial dispute there must be certain valid arguments for each side, but for the strikers to cite one or two badly managed mines and then condemn all the mine owners seems a little absurd. Each single strike in each single mine must be dealt with on its own merits." Sprung said, "We cannot uphold the action of the striking miners when they have disregarded the labour laws of the province and made verbal attacks upon Premier Frost and the Courts."

Osiris City Talk Topic

"The City of Osiris in Upper Egypt" will be the subject of the Archeological Institute of America meeting in the museum today at 4:30. Miss Winifred Needler will be the speaker. She is on the staff of the Royal Ontario Museum of Archeology.

The lecture which will be illustrated with slides will consist of historical description of the site which is now known only as a vast cemetery. The city that once existed has completely disappeared. Osiris was the most popular of the ancient Egyptian gods and it was thought that he was buried there. This led to many more burials here and the founders of the ancient Egyptian dynasty also were buried in this cemetery.

Crandell, playing a fine defensive game, came from nowhere to intercept the pass and carry the ball seventy-five yards for another touch. The convert was wide. About four minutes later, Hart found Cal Weaver at the Forestry twenty-five with a perfect pass and he went all the way to make the score 24-1 as Ford's convert attempt was blocked. Taking over for Don Hart in the dying minutes of the game, Marv Larsen threw a strike to Armstrong in the end zone. Again the convert was blocked and the game ended with Skule on top 29-1.

The Foresters played inspired ball to hold the heavily favored Skule machine for the first three quarters. Jim Waddell was a standout performer, snagging several of White's passes for long gains. Ed Marcus, Don Harrott and Fred Gray were very fast in the backfield, while Burgar and Crosbie played well along the line. Don Hart proved his worth as a very efficient quarterback, leading the Skule attack through most of the game. Kelly, Lyons and Lewis were backfield threats, carrying the ball for yards many times. All the Skule linemen played well, and found the Forestry line a solid wall during most of the afternoon.

Bloodthirsty Campaigners Seek Plasma

Better take it easy during your Christmas holidays; they'll be out for your blood in January.

The University of Toronto blood donors campaign gets under way January 18 and will run for a week. There will also be an interfaculty competition similar to the one held last year, Bill Baldwin said last night.

The prize for the competition will again be the Skule cannon which has been donated by Forestry, last year's blood champion-givers.

Meds Gals Take Saints 26-6 In B-Ball

By ANN STARK

It was Meds A all the way to win 26-6 in last night's B-ball battle against St. Hilda's Seniors. The Medswomen are unbeaten so far this season, and if yesterday's game is any indication of their play, they well deserve the honour.

The first quarter pretty well mapped the play for the rest of the match. Sally Wallace and Doris Kerr scored three times in the period making the tally 5-0 for Meds at quarter time.

Penny Ketchum opened the second quarter to commence the scoring for the St.'s. However Marilyn Sonley and Doris Kerr came in to overshadow the St.'s rush and end the first half by a tall 11-2- margin.

In the third quarter, Ketchum, Wallace and Kerr tallied again as the main scorers for their teams. Sally Wallace starred in the last period of play to boost the Meds' total to 26 against 6 for St. Hilda's Seniors.

Ann Lawson made a considerable dent in the Meds' forwards every time they tried their formidable rush. Meds' guard Sally Sarles did a steady and fiery job under the hoop and managed to keep St. Hilda's Penny Ketchum from shooting more often than she did.

In the second match over at OCE last night, UC's Freshies completely overwhelmed Vic Freshies in a 20-4 one-sided hassle. UC's success stems largely from the almost invincible Bailey-Littlejohn team on the forward line. These two gals have been playing together for the past four years, and needless to say, their style is something to see. Other than that, the game was full of fumbles and stumbles.

At the end of the first quarter, UC was ahead 6-0 due to the shooting of the two afore-mentioned forwards. In the second, Elaine Bassin and Marg. Penman, who were to feature in the rest of the game, came into their own with six more points for UC. Vic set out in pursuit and got into the scoring end of the game with Marilyn Mason's opener. The quarter ended with Vic trailing by 11 points.

Bailey and Littlejohn came back in the fourth with three baskets to make the final tally 20-4 in favour of the UC Freshies. This is a fast experienced team; they are unbeaten this year with the exception of a default last week to St. Hilda's.

Since it was necessary to run a four page issue this morning, the Interfaculty Sports Page will appear tomorrow morning and will feature the advance stories to the Mulock Cup Final on Thursday afternoon.

Blues Hosts To Hamilton For Water Polo Wed. Night

On Wednesday night the water polo season gets under way at the Hart House pool when the Varsity team plays host to the Hamilton Aquatic Club, the perennial rivals of the Blues for the Ontario water-polo honours. The Blues have been practising for about six weeks now and are rapidly rounding into the form that carried them to the Herschorn Cup last year, emblematic of the Senior Intercollegiate waterpolo championship.

The game with Hamilton is a warm-up for the first Intercollegiate test with the McGill Redmen on Saturday December 5. Back with the team this year are all of last year's championship Herschorn Cup squad including Bibi Stipitec, Dick Glumac, Norm Mortimer who has been with the water polo Blues for more than a couple of years, Larry Rosen and Bob MacKenzie.

Spectators, both male and female, will be welcome for free on Wednesday night.

Interfaculty Soccer

The Emmanuel and Knox soccer teams complicated the Division Two interfaculty soccer playoff situation considerably yesterday when they battled through two overtime periods to a 1-1 tie in a sudden-death semi-final game. The game must be replayed now to name a team to go into the final.

Yoos scored for Knox and Bould came right back to even it for Emmanuel and that's the way it stayed through two extra periods before the game was called.

PreMeds and University college meet at two o'clock today in a Division One semi-final.

Law Wins 4-1 As Hockey Gets Started

The Law hockey team showed yesterday that they will be a force to reckon with in Division Two of intramural hockey. They knocked off Architecture 4-1 to raise the curtain on another season of interfaculty hockey at Varsity Arena.

Bob Godson rapped home two goals to lead the lawyers to victory. He assisted on another as Hersh Solway and Murray Morgan accounted for the other two tallies. Montgomery and Callahan picked up a pair of assists each for the Law squad, which counted twice in each period.

Salter took care of the architects' scoring with Salter getting credit for an assist.

Senior SPS, Meds Winners In First Mural Squash Sets

Varsity's newest interfaculty sport got underway yesterday when the brand-new squash league opened operations. The Senior SPS and Senior Meds teams were winners in the first day of play, both taking two-out-of-three victories from their opponents, Senior UC and Trinity "A", respectively.

John Haig of SPS defeated UC'S M. Levine 15-6 and 15-7, and Skuleman J. McLelland stopped C. Siegel of UC 15-8 and 15-8. Friedland picked up UC's lone win when he had 15-6 and 15-7 scores over J. Clark.

Johnston of Trinity got the crumpeters off on the right foot in their matches with the Medsmen by taking Charendoff in three games. But the Docs came back with Hamilton defeating Heeney 15-8, 18-8, and Montgomery downing Montizambert 15-9 and 15-13.

The Old Standby

The Mock Parliament elections are over, but the issues raised in the various party platforms as published in The Varsity are not.

One plank of the LPP program could stand some closer scrutiny—that of "keep Canada independent". On the surface this looks fairly commendable, but underneath this is obviously a policy closely associated with international politics.

Power politics implies, to some extent, spheres of influence; we can't get away from that. It appears, then, that the LPP is desiring to get us out of one sphere of influence only to get us into another.

At the expense of being repetitious, we must point out again the close relationship between the LPP and the Russian Government policies. Therefore, we cannot accept the LPP program of "keep Canada independent" at its face value.

If we want independence, it must be an "independent" independence. We want no part of independence within a power sphere. Canada can speak for itself.

We wonder how the LPP would look on an organization in, say, Poland, that pressed for keeping Poland independent. We wonder if this wouldn't be called western "interference".

If Canada is subservient to the United States, as the LPP contends, then how can the LPP explain the frequent and sometimes violent disagreements Canadian leaders have with American policy. The Gouzenko incident is a case in point. There are certain definite economic pressures originating from the US, but to call for independence from them one must make sure of the meaning of independence. Independence does not mean a simple switch of subservience to another great power.

Switch Of Spheres?

Probably no topic has been more discussed in the last few years that sex. And the Hart House debates committee is adding its chosen words to the millions already blown about.

Tonight the subject for the Hart House debate is: "Resolved that the sexual conventions of our society constitute desirable limitations on the behaviour of its members". Who knows, with this "new" topic there may be some "new" discussion.

With the end of the war sex became front-page news; books on sex became best-sellers. We suppose that the Hart House debates committee hopes that sex will be a public-drawing attraction. And it probably will be.

No scientist ever achieved the triumphant popular fame as one, Dr. Alfred Kinsey. In some areas his researches were front-page headline material. Certainly his books sold fast.

We wonder if this whole topic of sex isn't being made one big music-hall joke. It is a reflection on our society that research into sexual behaviour published in an $8-volume becomes a best-seller.

But sex is of universal interest. It may stir some of the Hart House members to turn up at a Hart House debate. And it may create some good discussion.

However, we are disappointed to see that university students need s-e-x to get them out to a debate.

Our Readers Write:

The Other Side Of The Cornell Weekend

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The November 18th issue of your paper carried an article by Mary Alice Hunter on the exchange weekend at Cornell. As one of the other students on the weekend, I have several complaints to make about the article. First of all, Miss Hunter's views are by no means representative of those of all the other Toronto students, and second of all she has made the mistake of generalizing from a few particulars, isolated and unrepresentative, and ascribing these generalizations to Cornell as a whole.

Actually, most of the faults ascribed to the university by Miss Hunter may be laid at the feet of the few people who were in charge of the weekend and who lacked the capability to organize it. It is the fault of these few Cornellians that the programme was so poor, and so disorganized. The general impression Miss Hunter seems to leave with the reader in her article is that Cornell is situated on a beautiful campus, but is rather a party-type, unacademic type of dog-ridden institution which does not even come close to the halls of higher learning here in Canada. She is right only with respect to the campus and the number of dogs on it.

It should be made clear that the arts student at Cornell works a great deal harder than does his contemporary at Toronto. The number of books he is required to read, the essays he has to write, and the tests he must undergo, in only one subject are far greater than that which we here are subjected to in one year in, say, the Modern History course. The students I met while at Cornell were basically the same as those at Toronto. Granted, they knew less about Canada than we knew about the US, but they certainly were not, as Miss Hunter would have us believe, semi-illiterates. They proved to be interested in just about everything a college student should be interested in. I doubt, frankly, if one could differentiate to any great extent between the U of T student and the one from Cornell, even though they are at least one academic year behind us.

Miss Hunter makes the remark that we all came home feeling that "Canada isn't such a bad place after all." It is in this statement that she proves that she missed the most glaring defection of the whole weekend. Of the more than one hundred Canadian students there, more than half of them were incapable of representing even the mythical Lower Slobbovia. It seemed fairly obvious to us that the only ones who had had to prove themselves to go on the trip were the students from Toronto. Some universities sent twenty and thirty students down, most of whom acted as if they had never left grade eight. The absence of discussions was in a way a blessing, for many of our countrymen would have disgraced us completely. It was a group of Canadian students who sat down to a banquet drunk and made utter fools of themselves. It was the other two faculty advisors from Canada, besides Dr. Lynch, both of whom were married and fathers, who tried to pick up dates for the weekend, who stuck cigarettes behind their ears, and spent most of their time drinking with the students. It was a group of Canadian students who, in public, serenaded their faculty advisor, with a rather well-known song in which, at the end of the song the advisor was compared to the back end of a horse. It was also a Canadian faculty advisor who poured coffee into the hair of one of his students. It was a group of Canadian girls, one of whom seemed quite illiterate, who spent all of Saturday night ditching dates and picking up new ones. When we last saw them it was three in the morning and, they were almost up to a good round dozen apiece. These were only the examples of Canadian youth that we ourselves saw. It is not difficult to imagine what else went on. A Cornell student looking at us would be quite justified in claiming that the US was not "such a bad place after all."

In general the impression I and a few others gained was that Cornell was an extremely good university, with high academic requirements, well equipped, with extremely good student facilities (much better than those at U of T), and that its students seemed to be above average in intelligence, hard-working, under the university's control to a far greater extent that we know it here, and also, and this is a personal opinion, more socially mature than we are.

I hope that in the future Miss Hunter will try to broaden her references before she attempts any generalizations, and also that she consult the others in the group before she attempts to speak for them.

In conclusion, no account or evaluation of the Cornell weekend would be complete without giving well deserved praise to Dr. and Mrs. Lynch. They were certainly the most able faculty advisors there, and it was due to them that there was any last-minute organization at all in the weekend.

Earl Berger,
III UC.

ED. Note: The opinions expressed by Miss Hunter were her own and not those of the group.

Here Is The Evidence

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Since most replies to my letter were "to the person" and not to the point, I'll ignore them. If I'm "maladjuster" because I call a thief a thief, fine! (I don't mind some students' pranks, but I do mind stealing.) If this is "abnormal" and "foolish", I am a fool. The robbers are the enlightened gentlemen, constituting a "free society" which I wrongly attack. O.k.—

But to conclude from this that I have anything in common with the murderers and tyrants called Nazis, presupposes a defective mind. N.B. While I do and can get mad at some people, I nowhere stated I want to "purge them outright".—

To be sure of one's case and to criticise totalitarianism is to a normal mind no sign of Nazism. My "ruthless and oppressive attitude" simply says: Equal rights to ALL, special privileges to NONE. Here is a small part of my promised evidence: Reg. Catholic totalitarianism, intimidation and impersonation by priest. "The Star", Val D'Or Aug. 7, 1953.—Catholic Mob Violence, narrated with relish by "L'action Catholique" March 28, 1952. Hideous crimes a la Gestapo and murder in Colombia. "The Reaper" July 1953. "The persecution that rages against Protestants is at the instigation of the Roman hierarchy. A pastoral letter from the bishops . . . urging . . . Charity would put an end to it. (Ibid p. 183).

In a Catholic country Protestants could not broadcast, "because there is no reason why the broadcasting of truth should be prevented, but . . . the broadcasting of error to people who already have the truth should be forbidden . . . He who would rid the world of all errors would do it a very great service."—"The C. Church would give everybody the liberty to be religious. But liberty to propagate any religion at all is another matter."—"The C. Church, having the truth, has a right to exist and teach everywhere . . . Protestantism has, not the same right. "If all in America were Catholics, the Church would rightly forbid the danger to their faith by the introduction of error". "Radio Replies", pp. 213, 222.

"Man has not an unqualified right to practice any religion he may choose . . . Neither does it necessarily oblige others to allow him the unrestricted practice of his beliefs" — (Freedom of Worship" by F. J. Cannell, imprimatur by Cardinal Spellman.

Do we need any more witnesses? The parallelism between Communism, Fascism and Catholicism here is perfect.—If in the minority they clamour for equal rights; if in the majority, they admittedly "must demand the right of freedom for herself the C. Church) alone". "Civilta Catholica", April, 1948. ALL totalitarians are convinced they alone have the Truth. Woe to the dissenters!

Tell us, gentlemen from the "other Catholic College", if you can, whether you can believe in our free society and in the statements of your leaders at the same time!

H. L. Wipprecht

"Love has become a three-letter word, spelled SEX," Profsesor H. M. McLuhan the honorary visitor told Hart House Debaters last night. He is shown in this picture on the right. It used to define a person as a male or female, now it means mechanical copulation, he said.

Really!

Unconventional Sex Approved In House

By TOM VIRANY

Sexual Conventions of our Society do not constitute a desirable limitation on the behaviour of its members, Hart House Debaters decided last night. A motion, advocating the opposite was defeated by a vote of 57 to 25.

"Love has become a three-letter word spelled SEX," said Professor H. M. McLuhan, the honorary visitor to the house. Sex, which defined a person to be a male or female, has come to mean mechanical copulation, he said.

Modern dating pattern, a convention, has to do with social assertiveness, not sex, he said. Pre-puberty dating has little to do with sex, he explained; it has a consumers' aspect, having no meaning without an audience.

A curious hangover of puritan Sex conventions is that good women get no pleasure out of sex relations, whereas bad women get pleasure out of that only, he said.

Masculinity is not maleness today, it is being non-female. This imposes the ardor of the latin lovers on men of our society, a role which does not suit them.

"Without the existing sex conventions we would have sex relations on every corner, even in Hart House perhaps," said Lowler Louden, III Meds, the first speaker for the government.

The only alternative to the existing limitations would be Government-owned chastity belts and spying by secret police, Louden said.

He called the present system unfair to those only, who did not want to marry, but only to have a good time.

Quoting the Kinsey report, he said that only one third of the male population of Universities live up to a high sense of morals. "If we shoot high, let's aim at the star," he said.

"Yes, but the star should be someone else than Marilyn Monroe," said N. Stoner, I Law. Our society has shown itself unwilling to accept limitations, he said. "We do not yet erject religious conventions." But society says adultery is dangerous, not bad, a pleasant game, limited by our society to those who can play the game cleverly enough not to be caught.

"We accept the sexual conventions of religion and the law; we place a high and sincere value on human decency, and we wish that others did the same," he said.

"The bagaboos and superstitions of our society have combined to warp the individual mind into extraordinary attitudes, and maim it by compression like a Chinese lady's foot," he said.

"Our standards work better than than the suggestions of idealists," said George Keil, III Vic. In this age of nominal chastity we can keep a degree of freedom, he said, because restraint means freedom.

He said that "Sex conventions came about being by divine revelations or handed down to us, and they are reasonably practical."

The French and the Belgians are with the noes," decalred Dick Van Praagh, IV. Meds. What is desirability, he asked; what may be desirable in one situation, may not be in the other. "Desirability cannot be legislated," he said. "The desirability of a limitation on the other hand which does not limit is preposterous," he added.

Sex conventions constitute no limitations, said Praagh. He said that the only theological limitations he could find were incest, homosexual relations, pre-marital extra-marital sexual relations and sexual relations with beats.

Speaking from the floor, Verne Turner said he supported legal prostitution, because the alleyways "are so unfriendly without it."

Vic Debaters Reejected Strikers Lively Discussion On Unions

University students were offered a serious topic of debate, yesterday evening, in the Alumni Hall of Victoria College. The Victoria College Debating Parliament discussed whether or not to uphold the actions and principles of the strikers in Northern Ontario. The resolution to uphold the strikers was defeated 14-12.

The three issues of wages, hours and union security were clarified by the first speaker for the government and accepted by all other speakers. The speakers for the government pointed out that the boards of conciliation had generally recommended changes in the hours and wages of the workers. All but one recommended that recognition of the union be adopted.

The speakers for the opposition declared that the strikes were in some cases illegal. The latest reports of the boards of conciliation had been received for only one day when the strikes were called. A seven-day-interval is required by the law. They also argued that university students could not support the actions of the strikers, because of the extreme violence shown in some cases. The dynamiting of homes, attempted arson, and even attempted murder, were cited as examples of violence. This violence, the opposition claimed, is extremely prevalent at the Broulan-Reef mine.

A discussion period followed the debate. Questions concerning various statements made in the debate were brought up and some speeches, were made from the floor.

Organization Sends SHARE To The Top

Except for a few odds-and-ends the SHARE campaign has been completed for another year. Trinity, UC, Victoria, Emmanuel, Wycliffe, and Knox, all were either 100 percent or over.

UC particularly is to be congratulated on fine organization which resulted in collecting $657.55. Trinity's sights were aimed at 200 percent and they failed by only 6 percent to make this mark. Victoria went over the 100 percent mark and these two illustrate the effect of efficient organization.

The three theological colleges, Knox, Wycliffe, and Emmanual showed that they certainly "practice what they preach".

Parking cars on Saturday has been reasonably remunerative to date, although Saturday's playoff was a loss to both the Blues and to SHARE.

Well over $250.00 has been collected from the staff with expectations of doubling this amount. The banquet resulted in a clear $75.00 for the cause.

The Helsinki choir student ticket sale was a decided disappointment. A complete report on this however will not be available until Wednesday.

International Who's Who

It's In The Book

By DAN BURTNICK

One of the most interesting books on the campus (no, I don't mean the Kinsey Report) is found in the Hart House rotunda. I am speaking of that gigantic volume known as the Hart House Guest Book. In its own quaint way, this book has got something the Kinsey Report hasn't, — it mentions names, thousands of names.

The guest book is no pocket book edition. It is large, heavy, and quite costly. The book was the gift in 1919 of Rouse and Mann, the old firm of Toronto printers. On one of its opening pages is inscribed the Founder's Prayer, a beautiful piece of hand-craftmanship. The book is like an international Who's Who, for in it are famous names from almost every land in the world.

The first signature was penned in 1919 by the then Prince of Wales. The signature which reads Edward P. is now better known as that of the Duke of Windsor. And this is by no means the only royal name in the book. His father, the late King George V signed on two different occasions along with the queen. In 1951, Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh recorded their names for posterity.

George McManus, the creator of Maggie and Jiggs in the comic strips is there, as is Grenfell, the Arctic explorer, and Rothschild, the fabulous financier. Lord Baden Powell, the founder of the Boy Scout movement, penned his name in the Golden Book, as has Bliss Carmen, Canadian poet. Doyle Carte, the famous Gilbert and Sullivan Savoyard, also signed on the dotted line.

There are more names per-square-inch of the world's great educationalists than in any other book. The headmasters of Great Britain signed as a body during their visit in 1930. Banting, the co-discoverer of insulin, Randolph Churchill, Viscount Alexander, one of Canada's most popular Governors-General, Anthony Eden, Beaverbrook, the Canadian-born newspaper magnate—all these have at one time or another affixed their names to the pastel-green pages of the Guest Book. It contains the name of every Governor-General and every Prime Minister of Canada since 1919. Just after the war an Allied Supreme Commander, an American general named Eisenhower, recorded his signature. Wonder what ever became of him? I understand he plays golf now.

The names are written in every language from Chinese to Sanskrit, and they vary in size from the ⅛ inch high writing of a Frenchman named Jacques Martin to the gargantuan scrawl of former Prime Minister Borden, whose signature occupies a quarter-of-the page.

While we are on the subject, Hart House has a couple of other books which are worth noting. One of these is the Nurnberg Chronicles. Mr. Cowan, Hart House Comptroller, explained when showing me this book that it was now out of print. Apparently this is due to the fact that it was printed in 1495. The book describes and illustrates all the important cities of the time and is valued at $3,000. This is probably an underestimate since one collector values a single page of the book at $100.

The other volume, just recently purchased, is one which describes the stamps of King George's collection. The copies of the stamps are so fine one has to run his fingers over the pages to make sure they were really only reproductions. The book is handsomely bound in red morocco with the royal crest embossed in gold on the cover. The volume was published as part of a limited edition and was purchased for $195. It is already worth at least twice that amount.

The last two books described will be on permanent view. So if ny be on permanent view. So if any nationalistic Scots want to find out whether Queen Elizabeth signs her name II at the end, just take a peek at the Guest Book in the rotunda of Hart House.

Pranks Cost Skule A Lot Colleges Bill For Damage

The price of folly was brought home to the engineers last night at the Engineering Society Meeting. Bills were received for 160 dollars to cover the cost of removing the paint from the wooden fences in front of the new University College residence facing on St. George Street. Opinion at the meeting was that the bill was much too large, but the president of the Society said that although the society itself was not responsible for the job, he felt that the paint job helped to publicize the Skule Night show, so that the society should assume some responsibility.

Victoria College also sent in a bill for $25.00, to repair damage for the gate and grounds of Vic.

What's Coming Up

Socialism, Christianity Talk Topic

Toronto lawyer, Andrew Brewin will be the speaker in the concluding lecture of a series of addresses sponsored by the Hart House Chapel Committee Wednesday afternoons. Brewin will speak today at 1:30 in Hart House Music Room. His topic will be "Christianity and Socialism."

Brewin is a member of the National executive of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation National Executive, and works with the Institute of International affairs. He has worked in the fields of civil liberties and trade unions. In addition, he is a member of the Anglican Synod of the diocese of Toronto.

The meeting will be open to women students.

UC Players Guild Host To St. Mike's And Vic

Two plays will be presented tonight in the Women's Union Theatre at 8:00 p.m. They will be Tenessee Williams' "Portrait of a Madonna", and A. A. Milne's "Toad of Toad Hall". The first is presented by the Victoria College Dramatic Society, and the second is by a St. Michael's College group.

University College itself will not be presenting a play, they will simply be acting as hosts. The UC players invited the other colleges to join in the joint effort, St. Mike's and Vic were the only ones that responded.

This is the first time a successful invitation evening has been held. Every year for the last three years an attempt has been made to hold such an evening but the co-operation needed wasn't forthcoming.

This in no way linked with the proposed plan of St. Mike's Dramatic Society to hold informal evenings of dramatic entertainment, to study the play and all aspects of its production, and presentation.

The evening will be free to members of the dramatic societies of the Universities, and will cost 25 cents to others. Refreshments will be served after.

Historians Hear Prof. On Guiana

Te possibility of a West Indian Federation will be discussed by Professor M. P. O'Connell of the Department of Political Science, tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Falconer Hall. The topic of his address is "British Guiana—What Next?"

He will discuss the problem of West Indian Federation as a solution for the future of British Guiana, and all the other little colonies or republics of Central American and the West Indies. He will discuss the recent British action of deposing the government of British Guiana, and also the possibility of a united Guiana made up of the three tiny Guiana colonies. All the economic, social, and political implications will be discussed in the lecture.

Professor O'Connell has just completed a summer tour of the West Indies and British Guiana, so he should be an authority on the subject.

Sports Editor of Star Will Speak Thursday

Milt Dunnell, sports editor and columnist of The Toronto Daily Star, will speak on sports writing at 1:00 p.m. tomorrow in Room 8, University College. The address is the third-in-a-series of lectures by Toronto newspapermen sponsored by The Varsity to acquaint the staff and the public with the theories behind journalism.

Mr. Dunnell began his newspaper career with his home-town newspaper, in St. Mary's, Ont. Later, he was sports editor of the Stratford Beacon-Herald before joining the Daily Star. After several years on the city and telegraph desks, he succeeded Andy Lytle in the autumn of 1949 as sports editor.

Apart from his duties as head of the sports department, Dunnell is widely known for his daily column Speaking on Sport", an analysis of current and past sports news.

Engineers On Display

Skule Opens Doors For Girls, Laymen

Do you want to see Niagara Falls in operation Friday night, right here? You can. The Engineering Faculty is opening up its doors to the laymen, and women at 7:30 p.m.

Steam and gas engines will be operating in the Heat Engines Laboratory. Staff, and undergraduate Engineers if you have a date with them will be on hand to explain the principles of operation of machinery and equipment.

"Many of our students, who have spent four years here complained that they never had a chance to show their relatives and friends what they do," pointed out the Head of the Mechanical Engineering Department, Professor E. A. Allcut. "This is how open house came into being," he said.

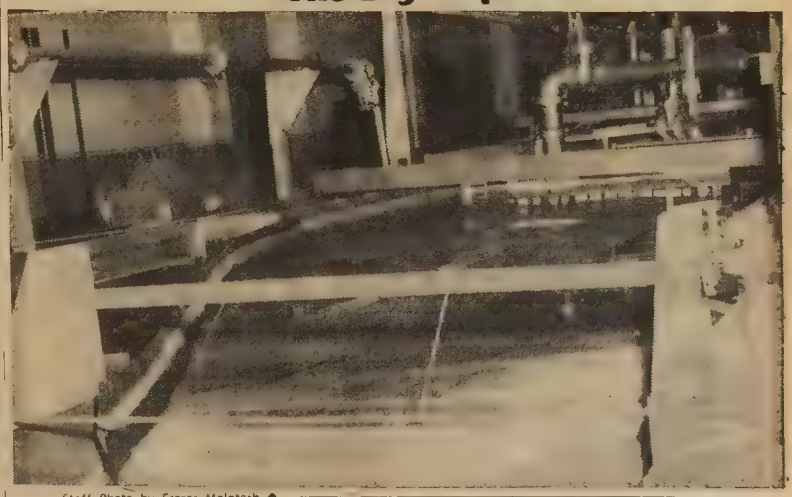
Prof. Allcutt said he thought that even an Artsman would spend an interesting and educational evening there.

Jet engines in the museum will be on display, and a Rolls Royce Aircraft Engine.

The Hydraulics Laboratory in the Department of the Mechanical Building will be full of water. A giant model of the Sir Adam Beck Generating Station will be operating at full power all evening.

A radioactive Geiger-counter used for the search of Uranium will be shown to visitors.

The Department of Mining and Metallurgy will have its Assay furnaces in operation.



Movies showing various phases of industrial management, Time and Motion Study and personnel relations will be shown by the Department of Engineering and Business.

The Electrical Engineering Department will show its alternating current machinery, its communications and electronics laboratory.

Guides will be handed out to visitors and attendants will be on hand. The heat engines will be operated by the stationary engineers, Prof. Allcutt said.

Originally the students were asked how they wanted open house said Prof. Allcutt. They wanted it thrown open to SPS, friends, and interested High School students, he said. "But we cannot handle that volume, so the High school students come separately," he said.

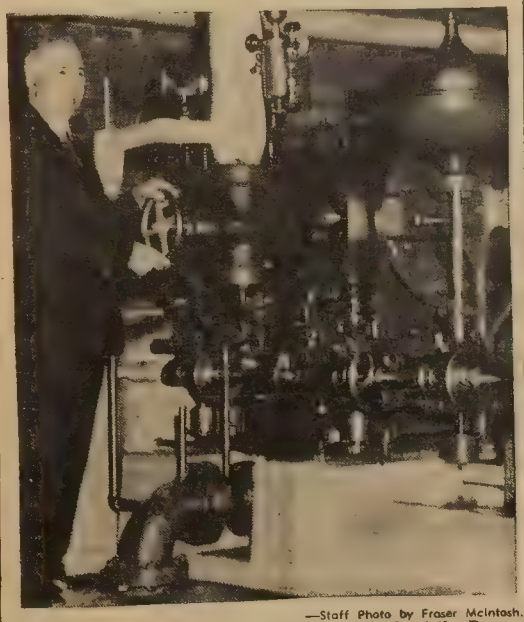
This is the model of the Sir Adam Beck Generating station, which will be shown to visitors of Skule's open-house Friday night. On a grand scale, it is located at Niagara Falls, crisscrossing the city under and over-ground. It will supply Ontario with more Electrical power when finished.

Federation To Survey Aid Plans



A national survey of university entrance scholarships is going to be conducted by National Federation Of Canadian University Students. Delegates at the conference in October felt that lack of knowledge prevented many students from taking advantage of available scholarships, and that this survey would encourage more foreign students to study at Canadian Universities.

The Federation Committees of the individual campuses have agreed to work in close co-operation with the mandated committees at the university of Carleton College and McMaster University in this survey.

The Federal Government, as well as university authorities are interested in this scheme, and has agreed to take an active part in the compilation.

This material, when prepared, will be made available to secondary school authorities, and other interested parties. Abroad, the booklet will be available to foreign students through representatives of the Government of Canada and UNESCO.

City Of Osiris Now A Cemetery Speaker Tells Archeology Meet

Abydos, once the city of the most popular Egyptian god, is now a vast cemetery, said Miss Needler, a member of the department of archaeology in the Royal Ontario Museum. She was speaking to a meeting of the Archaeological Institute of America, in the museum theatre, yesterday. Her talk, illustrated with coloured slides, showed the continuity of the development of Abydos from pre-historic times until modern.

Miss Needler pointed out that matters concerning death were always of prime importance in Abydos. Its earliest function was as a cemetery for the kings of the first-and-second dynasty of Egypt. About 2000 years later, Osiris, god of the dead and god of resurrection, became associated with the city. Then the rich men from miles around paid for the privilege of being buried there, or at least of having a tablet set up in their memory. Now it in indeed a city of the dead; the cemeteries are the only interest.

Slides were shown to illustrate the various excavations. They showed the immense amount of work that has been done and that still remains to do.

Miss Needler gave a brief account of the history and geography of early Egypt. Then she devoted some time to the Osiris myth; the connection of the other Egyptian gods, such as Isis, Horus, and Seth. Finally she explained the situation of modern Abydos, where Moslems and Coptics live side-by-side, using tools of 2000 years ago.

Our Readers Write:

Proof Of What?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Most of the letters in the McCarthy controversy are not worth replies, but the comments of F. J. Murray are a sincere and intelligent attempt to provide a logical basis for McCarthyism. As such it should be answered.

First, how successful has McCarthy been in fighting Communists? According to Herbert Philbrick, for nine years an FBI spy in Communist Organizations, "The leaders of the Communist Party feel McCarthy has helped them by adding to the confusion and making it harder to tell who is a Communist, by making the Party seem stronger than it is and by damaging liberals whom the Party hates."

And what Communist infiltration did McCarthy turn up: The eightieth Congress completed vigorous investigations into Communism, so vigorous that GOP Congressman Bert Lonkman said that Communists had been swept out of government, especially the State Department.

How many Communists has McCarthy turned up? Not one. I challenge Mr. Murray to give one example of a Communist turned up by McCarthy. Take the people Mr. Murray mentioned. William Remington was charged as a Communist before McCarthy's charges. Frederick Vanderbilt Field has been known as a Communist since 1941 and has never been in the government. Hiss was prosecuted by Richard Nixon, not McCarthy, and was convicted before McCarthy made his sensational charges at Wheeling, West Virginia on Feb. 9, 1950, that 205 (later 81, then 57) Communists were in the government. These 205 cases had already been investigated by Congress.

(References to all this factual data can be found on pages 172, 173, 177, 243 of McCarthy, — the Man, the Senator, the "Ism", by H. Anderson and R. W. May, Boston, 1952.)

Does McCarthy have support? Yes, that is precisely the danger. He preys upon simple minds that must see things in terms of black or white, for or against, McCarthyite or Communist.

Sincerely,

J. M. Roberts,
III UC.

Pitifully Wrong

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Shot through by sensations of disgust and dismay I have read your comments, you who support the despicable tactics of McCarthy and his ilk.

Gentlemen, I grant you your sincerity, but you are wrong, wrong, pitifully wrong.

You believe, as I do, that Communist agents must be weeded out of government bodies. There are, however, security forces in a nation which do the weeding quietly and resolutely, as did the RCMP in Canada in 1946.

You, terrified at the Communist menace, believe that ruthless counter-measures must be applied. In other words a democratic society, to protect itself from the rise of Communism, must employ the purge, a Communist tool, to "purify" itself; the society thereby contradicts and undermines its own moral foundations and sinks to the Communist level.

You believe in guilt by association and prosecution by a public committee, standing outside the law. You care not that the reputations and careers of perfectly innocent people may be besmirched beyond repair, evidently feeling that the majority (of necessity) is justified in oppressing, or at least intimidating the minority, while civil liberties are scattered to the four winds.

You condone methods based on the force of fear while but a short while ago young men of this institution died to remove fear from our lives.

You, students of a noble University, blatantly hail a rude man, who is anti-intellectual and contemptuous of the schools for higher learning. The universities have ever been the strongholds of the freedom of discovery, thought and research. But this man and the too many like him are the enemies of that freedom; they wish to investigate, confine and rule. Oh, the shame of it, that you are willing to sacrifice the sacred and ancient ideals of the University.

You then stand up for a man who has probably done more than any other American in history to lose friends in the Western World for the USA. Not just the reaction to it but McCarthyism himself and similar diseases of the body politic are inflicting serious scars on the fabric of Western Unity.

Perhaps you could support the man, the methods and the spirit of McCarthyism — in the USA as long as Canada was an observer of the scene. But now? Now the name of our country and of one of our most highly respected and valued statesmen, Lester B. Pearson, are being inextricably involved in that ugly mixture compounded of Unamerican Activities, McCarthyism and unscrupulous party politics. In an unparalleled demonstration of bad manners and ignorance certain individuals and groups to the south are pointing the fat accusing finger at a friendly nation as if she were little more than the most insignificant American civil service clerk without rights or self-esteem.

Can you really still acclaim this iniquity? Does anything prick your conscience when Canada is so abused? I should blush, if I were you.

I believe you are a tiny minority and I still have faith that common sense and moderation will continue to reign in the northern half of this somewhat epileptic continent.

Sincerely,

V. G. Turner.

MODERN DANCING

Willy Blok Hanson Group

The Willy Blok Hanson Dancers appeared in Eaton Auditorium Saturday night in a program demonstrating different stages of development and techniques of modern dancing" and the finished product.

The first four movements, Prelude, Theme, March and Suite were intended mainly to show the basic motions and exercises which are practised in order to obtain body control. The young children in a display of marching and kicking were charmingly ingenuous. In the Suite, the isolated movements of the opening three demonstrations were co-ordinated to make a complete flow and line. The use of a ball in this set of exercises, helps in the attainment of freedom and balance, even if it does remind one of the less successful attempts of Y.M.C.A. groups at ballatic choreography.

The rest of the program was devoted to four dance-dramas. The first of these, two scenes from Romeo and Juliet, was done in close-fitting black costumes which emphasized pure body outlines. This simplicity of costume was advantageous because the choreography alone has such an interest of complementary and fluid movement. Although it did seem incongruous to have girls in the duel scene their force of expression made up for it. Outstanding in this were Charlotte de Neve and Bernadette Brooks.

The Idiot, presented only in fragmentary form, was, paradoxically, more unified and clear than when I saw it as a whole. The contrast between the forces for good, as represented by the virtuous Aglaya and the forces for evil, as represented by the seductive Nastasia, is heightened by simplification.

Maria Chapdelaine is a most refreshing tale with its initial gaiety and final message of hope restored. An alternation of mime and interpretative dancing serves to outline the happenings and the reactions which they cause. Willy Block Hanson as Maria dominated the drama and gave it point. Her grief at her lover's death was thoroughly portrayed to the music of Calvin Jackson. All of the dancers were admirable in this, but little Christy Hanson bade fair to steal the show from her mother. Her stage presence and power of communication have developed since last year. The main weakness of Maria Chapdelaine, I would say, is still the groupings. Often the pattern is pleasing and balanced, but just as often it is casual to the point of formlessness.

Leo Barkin and Margaret Clemens, who played most capably throughout, also played the Slavonic Dance No. 7 of Dvorack (the one reminiscent of London Bridge is Falling Down) in a Piano Interlude which need not be excused as a filler for costume changes.

The Loon's Necklace, a North American Indian dance legend, was both conclusion and climax of the program. The costumes were most effective: orange tights and leopard with bright yellow dish-mop style wigs for the scolding women, a black wig for Kelora, a contrasting blue with feather marks for the Loon, wolf-heads and masks similar to those found in the Royal Ontario Museum. The curtain rose upon mask upon mask forming a totem pole. The music again, by Calvin Jackson, occasionally seems to confound primitive melodies and rhythms with those of jazz. It has a lovely imitation of the weird call of a loon. The dancing, here, was on the whole appropriately grotesque and angular, but some of the ritualistic effect was lost in a failure to keep together. In general it achieves a genuine primitive atmosphere with much of the symbolism found in the other dance-dramas.

Willy Blok Hanson's stamp is on the whole company. Even from people who have studied under her for a relatively short time she produces freedom of expression and movement combined with stage presence though the technique naturally takes more time. And the choreography, which is all hers, is, for the most part, interesting and in harmony with the music.

Wendy Michener.

Albert Pratz

Mr. Pratz chose three violin sonatas for us to hear Sunday night — none of them were easy. In general I would say the performance was on a steady upgrade from a somewhat powerless Beethovan to an expansive Gibbs.

The Sonata in C minor op. 30 by Beethoven was opened in a singing relaxed tone, giving promise of exceptional playing which was never achieved. The warmth, richness and strength of Beethoven were not there. A thinness of the quiet notes and fuzzy staccatos were found throughout the sonata. Yet clarity of theme was certainly one of his better points. The quietness of the second movement I think, came across the best of any part of the work. The third and fourth movements both required agility and technique which Mr. Pratz did display. He was also able to give us some spirited playing — but it was not as Beethoven can be played.

Dohnanyi's Sonata opus 21 was given a more pleasing interpretation than the Beethoven. I felt that the first movement was played with deep feeling. Here the vibrato of a violin was used to great advantage. The quiet notes were more controlled. The depth of the music was fairly well handled by an increased richness in tonal effects. The second movement showed good contrasts, but in the last Mr. Pratz really did his best of the evening. He had a feeling for the humour and lightness of the subject theme in this third movement which changed to a sincere and moving quietness at the end.

Gibbs, a contemporary English composer wrote the very interesting Sonata opus 63 (Lyric Sonata), the last composition on the program. Mr. Pratz's attack and accuracy were commendable in this selection. His performance was thoughtfully played, expansive and contained the modern sparkle necessary for this type of work. I think however, that there was not enough contrast between the first two movements and the third, marked "Vicace con brio". A pastoral atmosphere was definitely created at the beginning of the sonata but brilliance was never achieved.

Gordon Kushner at the piano proved to be a good accompanist. He never drowned out the violin when playing together and carried the theme adequately in solo.

Sally Diblee.

OCE Stages Two Plays

The OCE dramatic society will stage two one-act productions this week, The Masque of Aesop, by Robertson Davies, and The Boor by Chekhoff.

The Masque of Aesop is a modern Canadian masque, combining the features of the 17th century masque with modern satire and humor. The Boor is a comedy in a Russian peasant setting. These plays will be performed on the nights of Nov. 26, 27, and 28.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

FEATURE ATTRACTION

The feature attraction of the Intramural athletic year takes place on Thursday afternoon at Varsity Stadium, namely the Mulock Cup final. What the Grey Cup game is to pro football, the Mulock is to Interfaculty sports. After Monday afternoon's semi-finals, SPS and St. Mike's will be squaring off to do battle for their colors.

NO STRANGERS

SPS and St. Mike's are not strangers to Mulock Cup play. Only last year the Irish put up a pretty good battle against a better Victoria squad, but in a losing cause. Back again this year the double blue will provide some interesting opposition for the men from the little red skule house. The last time that SPS appeared in the Interfaculty final was four years ago. So the Skule men should be really hungry.

TWO IN ONE

A lot of the credit for this year's success down at the lower end of the campus can go to the decision that united Jr. and Senior Skule. It was a smart move on the part of the Engineering athletic people and one that looks like it might pay off in silverware.

Some people have been trying to condemn the gold and blue for packing their best into one team. But it's had to buy their yarn. It would be like saying that Casey and his Yanks should be kicked out of the American for winning five straight pennants. It apparently isn't good to field a winning team. Anybody that figures like that is wrong. Instead, more power to Skule.

As far as St. Mike's are concerned, they will probably go into the game as underdogs. It won't be the first time they have and it wouldn't be the first time that St. Mike's pulled an upset.

TEAM SPIRIT

Probably it's fitting that two of the most colorful colleges and faculties on the campus will be represented in the Muolck. Over the past four years only the colleges or faculties that have had the best college spirit have managed to get into the Interfaculty final. The exception was University College two years ago and UC lost to Vic 25-0. In the Interfaculty, ye old college try goes a long way.

BENNY SAYS

If anybody is interested after last weekend, One-eyed Benny, the Campus bookie, phoned in after a quick trip to New York and his business interests, to say that Skule was good for the win on Thursday. That's a good bet.

END NOTES

Since the Grey Cup game is on Saturday, the Interfaculty gets the benefit of the famous tarp for Thursday's game. SORRY NO GREY CUP TICKETS. The seasons are really crowding us. Interfaculty hockey started Monday and Intramural basketball practices are underway this week as well. Let's make it complete and get out the old ball and bat.

Oldest Football Trophy Mulock Cup Celebrates It's Sixtieth Anniversary

By JOHN WILSON

On Thursday afternoon two powerful football teams will square off to decide the resting place for the Mulock Cup until next fall. First up for competition in the fall of 1894, the Mulock Cup was presented to the university for Interfaculty football supremacy by the late Sir William Mulock, Chancellor of the University from 1924 to 1944. In the years up to his death in 1944, Sir William always made it a point to present the trophy to the winner in person.

This fall is the sixtieth time Sir William's mug has been contested, the Diamond Jubilee of Mulock Cup competition. Although this football classic has never rivalled the Grey Cup game for colour, this year's festivities are expected to be much bigger than usual in celebration of the anniversary. 1948 saw possibly the most colourful final of all. At that game, played between St. Mike's and Victoria there were two bands along with numerous cheerleaders and organized cheering sections. 6,000 people watched St. Mike's cop the coveted trophy that day, the last time the Double Blue squad won it. Last year's champions, Victoria College have made the best showing, carrying the Mulock Cup home sixteen times in all. Senior SPS will be looking for their eleventh championship since before 1900, while a win for St. Mike's would make it their fourth.

Only one tie for the championship has occurred in the 60 years of play. In the fall of 1940 Junior and Senior Skule were unable to play the deciding game due to bad weather conditions, and the two teams shared the Cup for that year. It seems that there was something like seven or eight inches of snow on the ground at the time. In 1950 snow again caused a change in plan, and Forestry and Trinity fought it out on the back campus in about three-or-four-inches of mud and water. It was in this season that the field in the Stadium was in such poor shape for the Grey Cup final, demonstrating to the CRU the necessity of a tarpaulin to protect the ground. Incidentally the tarp was put down yesterday at 1:00 and will remain until tomorrow morning, unless the weather is so good that its removal would allow the field to dry more quickly. However the prophets seem to think that it will be cooler, just about the same conditions that prevailed during Monday's doubleheader.

Skule's last Mulock victory was in the fall of 1945. They were last in the final in 1949. St. Mike's lost out to Vic last fall but haven't won the Cup since 1948. Mr. Fred Sgambati will referee Thursday's game, which starts at 1:30 sharp. The game will be regulation time—four fifteen-minute quarters with the clock stopping when the play stops. SPS have yet to lose a game this season, while St. Mike's have lost only one; that to the strong Forestry squad who were beaten by Skule on Monday. The two teams are undoubtedly the best on the campus and should provide the fans with a spectacular display of football come Thursday afternoon.

Close Call

In the above shot Tom Ahearn has just snagged a pass fired by St. Mike's quarterback John Burns. This was the controversial last play of the first half in Monday's Victoria-St. Mike's tussle. It would appear that Ahearn is headed for pay dirt, but head linesman Chuck Dolman ruled that he stepped into touch just eight inches short of the goal line.

Mural Basketball Practise Gets Swinging This Week

Intramural basketball got underway with the standing committee meeting last week. It has been announced that practices will begin this week and the first games will be played on Tuesday, January 3rd.

In the major league ball the grouping is much the same as last year; in the first division 36 teams have been entered. There are nine groups of four teams each and every team plays the other three members of its group twice. At the end of the scheduled season the group winners will play an elimination tournament for the Sifton Cup.

Group I which usually produces the eventual champion is comprised of Senior UC, St. Mike's A, Senior Meds and Senior Skule. However last year's champs SPS Thirds are reported to be back intact, so they have to be ranked as pre-season favourites.

Division Two of the major league is composed of teams from some of the smaller faculties; group 1 of this division includes Law, Pharmacy, Forestry, Knox and Architecture.

Minor league basketball has not completely arranged as yet, but over 100 teams are expected to be entered, so the outlook is for a banner season. All entries for minor league teams must be in the third of next month.

Skule looks strongest in the inter-faculty leagues with nine teams entered in the majors, including not only the Thirds who are defending titlists but also the perennially powerful Senior team and Junior SPS, who finished last year's season as runners-up. Strong entries are also expected from Vic, Dentistry and UC.

Law Team And Tigers Get Wins

Yesterday's soccer matches saw UC and Law both score shut-out victories to capture the semi-finals of their respective divisions. UC knocked off the Pre-Med team by a 3-0 count as Burki, Rintoul and Hansa supplied the scoring. The lawyers downed Forestry in an exciting 2-0 game with Kempte accounting for both of their goals, one coming on a penalty shot in the second period. In both contests the winners put up a brilliant defense.

In intramural volleyball Pre Med IIA scored a decisive 15-5, 15-8 win over St. Mike's A team. Trinity's A's also took their game, ending on top of a see-saw battle with Skule Thirds by a score of 15-4, 6-15, and 15-

Last Minute Flourish Gives Saint Hilda's Win

The first of the evening bouts at OCE last night produced the best showing of the season and a couple of the best first-year players seen to date in the women's basketball loop.

Saint Hilda's and POTs battled it out to a 27-22 win for the little blue Saints. To say it was exciting would be the understatement of the year because leads flew from team to team till Joan Lander monopolized the POT basket in the dying minute of the game.

POT opened the scoring as Noreen Cossar netted a long shot, and at the end of the opening quarter this squad was ahead 6-4. Little Jane Kelly tallied the deciding basket for the Saints later in the half and after chalking one to clinch this segment 11-10.

It was POTs turn now to take over and take over they did. Most of the play in the opening minutes of the second half centered menacingly around Saint Hilda's defence. Streaking down the floor on a wild break-away, Cecil Philips netted a beautiful shot which was shortly added to. POT didn't like this at all and pulling their offensive together brought the scoring to 16 for their squad. Mary Bodrich clinched the POT lead which was 18-15 at three-quarter time.

Soon after the final quarter got underway, the scoring was brought to a 19-all tie. Joan Lander fouled and POTs had a big chance to break the tie. After a short out, Noreen Cossar took the shot for POT which tallied and gave the squad a one-point lead. It looked as though POT had the game in the bag as Cossar followed through with a basket.

With just less than a minute to go POT fouled. Joan Lander took it for the Saints and it was good. This short, brunette fireball who had boobed miserably earlier in the quarter took over the ball for the rest of the game and led the Saints to a three-point lead. Pat Arther followed with ten seconds to go and brought the final score to 27-22 for the Saints.

Though she wasn't the highest scorer of the meet, Joan Lander played one of the best games seen this year. A steady and fast contender, Joan made plenty of trouble for her opponents and finally came through with a steady and spectacular finish.

Noreen Cossar took top scoring honours gaining 16 of the POT tallies. Noreen played well throughout and was the official tie-breaker for POT.

Help

Have you heard the news? There are big openings for sports-writers in this department on The Varsity staff. Both men's and women's departments can still use a few helpers in reporting and make-up. Sports reporting is exciting as well as . . . well, it's fun anyway. If you would like to contribute some journalistic gems your assistance will be welcomed. Drop in to The Varsity office or give us a call here. We're down here most of the time.

Soccer Playoffs

The fall season of Interfaculty sports activity is rapidly drawing to a close, with the football final, divisional playoffs in soccer, and the tail end of the volleyball schedule, all on tap this week.

A win by the Trinity 'A's in today's fixture against Sr. Meds would put them in the final against UC for the Arts Faculty Cup on Friday Incidentally while the gridiron glory boys are celebrating their sixtieth in interfaculty competition, the Arts Faculty Cup is being contested for the fifty-ninth consecutive time this fall. Although it has no significance as far as an over-all championship is concerned, there will be a challenge game between the Division I winner and the top team in Division II on Tuesday, December first at 2:00.

Intramural hockey started on Monday, hot on the tail of the fall season. With six groups in the first division and two in the second there will be plenty of action for the people who eat their lunch in Varsity Arena. In two first division games yesterday, Jr. UC came out on top of Jr. Vic by a 4-2 count, while Sr. S.P.S. whipped Sr. VIC 4-1.

Nurses Frolic at Annual Stag Show Acting Ability in Skits

The nurses held a stag last Monday night. It is celebrated each year to commemorate no particular event, but is just a get-together of the undergraduate nurses and also the graduate students.

It seems as if each degree course presents a skit and out of this melee a winner is declared. The skits were seven minutes in duration and were not connected in any way with the nursing profession.

The degree students presented "Snowhite", a modern presentation of George Gershwin's music and musicals. The Post Graduate students presented a show featuring the fashions through the years, a combination of the sublime to the ridiculous. Other skits were presented featuring everything from a parody on "Goldie Locks" to the heart-warming drama of Beauty", a skit presented by some very experienced gal"

The winners of the evening were the class of Clinical Supervision. The grand-finale was a kick-line titled the "Fallible Follies", which focused around the "gloating male".

The evening closed off with some refreshments that were welcomed by all concerned.

Some "Queens" from the School of Nursing display their prowess as fashion models in the days of the "gay nineties." This particular "Queen" displays remarkedly well the fashions current in that great period.

Composers Will Offer First Night

A concert of Canadian music will inaugurate the season's activities of the Canadian League of Composers this Saturday in Eaton's Auditorium. The league is an association of about 25 composers, whose aim is to make Canadian music better known by securing performances and publication of the music.

Saturday's concert will be the fifth in Toronto since the league's inception in 1951. It will consist of music by Papineau-Couture, Betts, Somers, Morwetz, Kasemets and Beckwith (the last-named a former A M and D Editor of The Varsity).

The music to be performed will include works for piano, cello, violin and soprano and baritone voice. The performers are well-known Toronto musicians, and include one of the composers, John Beckwith.

Associate membership in the Canadian League of Composers is available to students at $2.50. This includes admission to the concert on Saturday, as well as another later in the season, and two film showings on Sunday evenings.

Separate tickets for the concerts are available, but not for the film showings. Associate members may bring one guest to each of the film showings.

U of T Hosts Prepare For Montreal Guests

At a meeting of the Host Committee last night, final plans were drawn up for the annual Carabin exchange week-end, Dec. 3 - 6.

On Thursday evening the 40 Carabins from the University of Montreal, will be greeted at the station by their Toronto Hosts, and escorted to Brennan Hall where they will be welcomd by Principal Jeanneret of University College. Friday the visitors can accompany their hosts to their morning lectures (if they wish), or else they can simply explore the campus, the subway, or the new UC Men's Residence. After lunch there will be a discussion on Canadian Culture at Falconer Hall, which will be followed by a reception and dinner in the Great Hall, Hart House, followed by the annual Friday evening "party". Saturday at noon the Montrealers will be taken on a tour of the city, and then will return to the Vic Union for a discussion on "The Theories and Meaning of Education in French and English-Speaking Canada." At five o'clock a fleet of automobiles will leave the Vic Union for Nobleton where a strawberry social, square dancing and skits will be held. On Sunday the visitors will go to Mass, have dinner at the homes of their hosts, and then go to a farewell tea at Falconer hall.

Enrolment Up At McMaster

Hamilton, Nov. 20—(CUP) — Registration at McMaster University is higher this year than it was last. The most noticeable jump is in the Engineering course where there are 60 men registered. Last year there were only 40.

It is expected that the overall total will be near 1,100.

The Muddy Trail

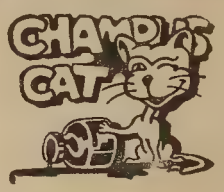
Our Readers Write:

Truism, True

Give It A Try

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It seems to me almost a truism to say that a real essential for world peace today is the cultivation of good feeling among the English-speaking peoples of the world. To us of North America the two nations involved are Canada and the United States. In Canada our duty is further simplified: it is to cultivate and preserve good feeling toward the United States.



IF WE LOOK FAR ENOUGH WE can find in any nation or its peoples policies and activities of which we do not approve. If we feel like crusading against these policies and activities, let us, for maximum effectiveness, take our crusade directly to the people of that nation. Granted, for the sake of argument, that the students who have been expressing themselves so vigorously about "McCarthyism," "thought-control," "witch-hunting," "brain-washing," have made thorough investigation and really believe that they have all the facts and inferences, it would be more fitting if they would write their sentiments to the correspondence columns of the leading newspapers of the United States. Your readers would at least respect your good intentions. You might even win adherents and exert some influence. But to carry on this agitation in Canada is simply to generate among Canadians the attitude of disrespect, distrust, even hatred of the United States. That is not your intention, of course; you may not be in the least anti-American. But that will be the effect. And across the border, if people take any notice of these extravaganza, the effect will be to lower Canada in their estimation, and the two neighbor nations will enter upon a period of mutual ill feeling.

ANOTHER ILL EFFECT: Left-wingers will make capital of everything you are saying. The Hate-America campaign now being fostered in China is for the purpose of binding the Chinese people closer to Russia. The opponent whom Russia really fears today in her long-range program of world domination is the United States. To alienate the allies of the United States, Russia spreads her propaganda that America as a nation is immature, adolescent, even puerile; and in policy is fascist, totalitarian, anti-democratic, war-mongering. She may even hope to fire the hatred of these allies to the point that they would gladly become satellites of Russia just to spite America!

BUT LEAVING COMMUNIST REACTION out of the picture, let us remember that good feeling between nations, even more than between individuals, is a tenuous thing, easily disrupted. Let us do our part to uphold rather than to break down, good feeling and good will between two nations who are by ancestry, language, and institutions close relatives, and by tradition and long experience friends.

Eloise Bradshaw,
Emmanuel.

Put The Pin In Someone Else

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Now is the time for all good men to awake! Awake, I say, to the greatest potential red menace this continent may ever know! Awake! First, hear my story.

In those dark days before the red investigations were ever thought of, I knew of the menace. Yes, I realized the dangers which red spies all around us were threatening us with. And I also realized that all these great counterspies, espionage agents, etc., were walking about all over. Why I found out that the second cousin of the very girl I was going steady with was known to be a friend of a girl whose boy friend was known on occasion to speak to a chap who, I hesitate even to say it, had been known to frequent a library in which there was a copy of a volume by, (gads, dare I say it?) Karl you know who, on the second shelf from the top (left wall). Need I say I saw my patriotic duty and broke up this ill-fated relationship before I should become involved with a saboteur; not only that, I reported her to the proper authorities and asked an investigation be made. I am shocked to say that the proper authorities utterly shirked their duty and made no investigation. (I am presently thinking of having more-proper authorities investigate those other proper authorities "so-called".)

And what of all the other countless dangers looming all around us? Do you think I was insensitive to the fact that one of my teachers could be seen wearing, from time to time, a red tie? Hah! You may not make much of this, but such is not the case with me. I reported him to his superiors and asked that an invertigation be made. I shudder to this very day to think of myself, in all my childlike innocence, sitting in that classroom and being taught natural science by that fiend. Oh, how he might have thwarted the facts for my yet young, undeveloped brain had I not discovered the danger! And do you think I was fooled by all the other insidious sneaky treachery of the Communist propaganda? No! Young though I was, I demanded investigations! For example I have constantly demanded that Hans Christian Anderson be investigated, for one of his stories is out-and-out politbureau propaganda! He might have called this story of his 'The Leather Moccasins', or the 'Fusia Slippers'. But this Communist rat had the out-and-out audacity to call it, "The Red Shoes".

Finally, came the day of reckening. There arose from the ranks a hero to champion my cause, a hero known merely by the name of Senator McCarthy. He alone, as I, saw the true menace all around us. He alone demanded, (as I single-handedly had done for so long) investigations! Oh happy was the day when I could pick up the paper and read across the headlines of another investigation of communism where one would least expect it, by Senator McCarthy. Funny thing is, he made investigations even where I least expected investigations to be investigated. He was even more zealous than I. That's what led me to suspect.

Being the father of this investigation movement (at least in spirit) I pride myself on knowing all the tricks of the Communists! I know just how shrewd, tricky, and subversively clever they are. Yes, I know their ways! And, I ask you, what better way to divert suspicion from one-self than by putting suspicion on others? And I ask you, who today is putting more suspicion on more people than anyone else? Senator McCarthy! Hence, who would seem the least suspect of Communism? Once again, Senator McCarthy! Oh, he's a shrewd, subversive rat, that Senator McCarthy, but he can't fool me. I can see the true danger! Under the guise of the crusader against Communism, how busily at work he must be for the Kremlin, safe from any suspicion while all his would-be apprehenders are busy proving they're not communists! I shudder to think at the harm he had done!

Awake! Awake, I say, to the greatest potential red menace you may ever know! Write a letter to President Eisenhower demanding an investigation of McCarthy (before Eisenhower will be too busy being investigated, himself). Route out this menace in our very midst! Save America! Awake!

Edward Lawrence,
Arts I UC.

Mike, Congrats

Walking along a back alley, or a school playground, one often sees heated verbal battles among the small fry. They may or may not have a soap box to stand on, but they can and do wash in public the dirtiest linen they can find. And all for personal spite, a vent to their childish tantrums.

At a University, adolescent students use sensationalist tactics to precipitate public awareness of a menace very nearly strangling us all. This we are told is a disgrace to our University, and to other students who will be the leaders of tomorrow.

As models, we have only to look at the leaders of today. Is Col. McCormack's vile attack on Mike Pearson anything more than personal spite? Was ex-president Truman dragged into the White case for any other reason than personal politics? Will that one publicly elected head in the United States never show any principles, but rest on his laurels, and let the washing hang?

Already, as indicated in Senator McCarthy's speech last night, the organized fight against the Communist threat in the U.S. has been changed to a senseless purge of the Democrats. No real respect could now be accorded any anti-Communist programme.

Indeed we have fine examples. University of Toronto students may rest assured that until they die as idealistic babbling idiots, they have served better than their predecessors.

At this time it would be trite to call anyone a spoiled brat, but it won't matter what is said aloud. We know what we think. So many boys in one pot are having so many tantrums, they take it for granted the next kid is worse than they are if he even looks on.

The over-simplified answer is, "Let's grow up." But who can tell bespectacled died-in-the-wool publishers to grow up. They have played games with their rules all their lives and this is no time to stop. Everyone has always seemed to laugh at the rules whether they liked them or not.

But it is about time we woke up to ourselves. It's about time someone laid down some rules or stopped playing. Someone has tried it, and may get his fingers burned.

But he doesn't have to have his fingers burned if we let him know we are all behind him. Men like Mike Pearson deserve credit for a brave attempt at bringing the situation to a reasonable solution.

Canada probably had to be the first to take the smear. Pearson had to be the first one here. The first will get it the hardest, but that won't be too bad if the support is sincere. The Varsity takes sincere pleasure in taking this opportunity to congratulate the man, the man with the respected record, Mike Pearson.

Close Eyes

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Letter by the SAC Representative in the November 23 issue of The Varsity came as a proof of suspected tendency of the SAC to close their eyes and hope that issues will be forgotten. SAC, although made up of students' representatives, is not really body guarding student interest. When a group of students feel that their rights are abused it is most natural that they should direct their complaint to their representative body. No wonder that the letter has been written by students in their first and second year. They have not learned yet that SAC has very little to do with students' interests, and that the best it can do is to refer the matter to somebody else or to pass a motion. . . . .

Rep Charges Simcoe Hall Withholds Prize Payments

Horace Krever, SAC Law representative, charged last night at the SAC meeting that Simcoe Hall was holding back payment of scholarships, bursaries and prizes of students that have not paid their second installment of fees.

The SAC decided to call a Caput Liaison Committee meeting to discuss the problem. Krever said that the University was dictating to the donor of the funds just exactly how they should be spent. He charged that when the awards were announced in November the prizes were not given out unless the student had paid his second installment of fees. This, he felt, was very unjust to the student as there were many ways that the student might to spend the award than using it to pay his fees.

Another injustice pointed out by Krever was that the University was obtaining twice the interest due to it. It was obtaining interest on the award money as soon as it was given to the University, and it was also charging the student interest on the second installment of fees.

Krever said that the student should be allowed to spend the money any way he wished, as soon as the award was made known, especially since some awards were granted for specific purposes laid down by the person or institution making the gift. He said that in some cases the student receiving a bursary, gift or scholarship, needed the money in the fall term for board and room expenses or books and in some cases the holding back of the gift caused considerable hardship.

HORACE KREVER

The only apparent reason for this is that there is on the fees form a clause that definitely states that the awards shall not be granted unless the fees are paid in full in September, he said.

Orie Loucks, associate editor of The Varsity said that small prizes were donated to students for their immediate use, and the university had no right to withhold payment.

Scholarships, Krever pointed out, are not given out unless the student returns to carry on his studies. However, with prizes the student wins them on the basis of his last year's work and so should not be excluded from the prize list.

UC Lit Goes South

By DAVID G/ "THIER

Probably, the University College Literary and Athletic Society will meet this afternoon at 4:00 in the J.C.R. Probably since the usual apathy may result in no quorum.

If there is a meeting, the Executive is confident of controlling a majority of the votes, and, therefore intends to vote itself a week in Florida, all expenses to be paid by the Lit. Besides this, Mike Benazon will be feted, for putting UC over the top in the SHARE campaign, Ron Gould will be feted, for publicizing "Where on Earth?" all over the world, Ron McGill will be feted, for apologizing for his neglect of duties, and Al Millard will be feted, for trying to reduce the Society's expenses.

Plans for the Arts Ball, and for the Music Club's operetta, will be discussed. A report on the show will be presented, as well as constitutional amendments and recommendations relevant to next year's show.

WUA Literary Director Joan Seymour will be proposed for honorary life membership in the Society, for her services in cleaning up the Lit. Office. Otherwise the meeting will be the usual dull, monotonous Lit. meeting, and the Executive hopes that no one will show up, so that it can have things all its own way.

If these young ladies, Mickey Hicken on the left and Pat O'Brien, would remain in front of this sign which adorns the athletic wing of Hart House, there's a good chance that 90 percent of the male undergraduates would know what the sign (notice the sign directly to the rear of the girls) s s.

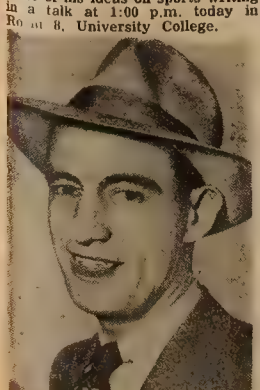
As a matter of fact, just about everybody knows that St. Mike's and SPS are playing in Varsity Stadium today at 1:30 for the historic Mulock Cup, symbol of intramural football supremacy.

These colleens will be leading the St. Mike's fans in cheers today at the stadium. And the fans should be i nlarge numbers, too, because lectures are cancelled at St. Mike's this afternoon as are lectures and labs at SPS.

Federation Farcical' Says Ottawa Paper

Ottawa, 21 Nov. — (CUP) — A special supplement to the campus newspaper, The Fulcrum at Ottawa University has announced that the Students Federation is "a farce".

The issue followed a meeting of the federation to authorize the '53-'54 budget, which had already been formed in closed executive meeting at which an executive member said: " . . . everyone knows our constitution is not ratified. We have no constitution."



The Fulcrum also took exception to the allocation of the funds. NFCUS, the Fulcrum and other committees took large cuts on funds while the Cine Club which had a surplus last year took only a five-dollar cut.

The situation demands that "a new form of student government be introduced", according to the one page English-French supplement.

The Fulcrum was completely against the phantom constitution and said "If the constitution remains only a figure, the students can never expect to be completely represented by the Federation."

Sports Editor of Star Speaks Here Today

Milt Dunnell, sports editor of The Toronto Daily Star, will give some of his ideas on sports writing in a talk at 1:00 p.m. today in Room 8, University College.

MILT DUNNELL

The address is the third in a series sponsored by The Varsity to acquaint its staff and students in general with the principles behind newspaper writing. Previous speakers have been Robert Turnbull, city editor of The Globe and Mail and Margaret Ness, women's editor of Saturday Night.

Dunnell is a native of St. Mary's, Ont., where he began his newspaper career with the local weekly. Later he became sports editor of the Stratford Beacon-Herald before joining The Daily Star staff. He worked for several years on the news and telegraph desks and in the autumn of 1949, succeeded Andy Lytle as sports editor.

He is probably best known in Canada for his daily column, 'Speaking on Sport", a commentary on current and past news in the sports field. In 1952, he covered the Olympic games in Finland for the Star and in recent months, he has covered such events as the World Series, the Marciano-Walcott and the Marciano-LaStarza fights, and last week, he was in Winnipeg to report on the Western Canada football playoffs.

In addition, Dunnell's articles have appeared in the Star Weekly, Sport Magazine and his column is a regular feature of the Hockey News.

Today's meeting will be open to the public and a question period will follow the talk.

Ontario Editor Urges Uncanadian Committee

Vancouver, Nov. 13—(CUP) — Red cells in Canadian universities, churches and labour groups, were reported to students at the University of British Columbia by the self-styled president of the "Canadian anti - Communist Association".

Mr. R. Gostick told the students that the federal government should establish an "un-Canadian Activities Commission" which would be patterned on the lines of the un-American Activites Commission in the U.S.

Gostick lauded Senator Joseph McCarthy as a man who had done "a valuable service to the U.S. government and anti-Communist forces in the world." In keeping with this opinion of the Wisconsin senator, Gostick urged him to come to this country to investigate communism.

According to Gostick, "one small step in the right direction" would be the outlawing of the Canadian LPP political party.

Gostick is the editor and publisher of a small Ontario publication which in his words, "is dedicated to the preservation and strengthening of the Christian Way of Life and the exposure and defeat of Marxism."

Dr. R. Gordon Bell To Talk On Problems Of Alcoholics

Alcoholism will be the topic under discussion by Dr. R. Gordon Bell at Convocation Hall, this Saturday at 8:15 p.m. Dr. Bell, Medical Director of Shadow Brook Health Foundation and Willowdale Hospital, will talk on "New Horizons in the Prevention of Alcoholism" and discussion will be supplemented by Lantern slides.

He attended the University of Toronto from 1930 to 1935, interrupted his studies for four years and returned to finish his studies in 1939. He has been concerned with the problem of alcoholism for a good many years, being instrumental in the foundation of both Shadow Brook, for men and Willowdale, for women. Both hospitals are for the treatment of alcoholic addiction.

As a social being, man, according to Dr. Bell, is normally a dependent creature. He feels that a person who is unable in times of stress to depend on other people, will become the victim of periodic states of tension. Unable to depend on people, he must depend on something, and he may learn to depend on chemicals. The chemical most commonly utilized for this purpose is the anaesthetic ethyl alcohol.

Any chemicals can produce disease if it is encountered in large enough doses and once encountered, alcoholic consumption changes from controlled heavy drinking to uncontrolled heavy drinking. Accordingly, Dr. Bell says, treatment and rehabilitation must be directed towards assisting a patient in shifting from an abnormal dependence on chemicals to a new and lasting interdependence with people.

Baha'i Hears Prophethood Explanations

"Recognition of the prophet is the greatest test of man for his sincerity in wanting to serve God," Mr. Cliff Huxtable said in his talk to the weekly meeting of the Baha'i Student Group, Wednesday, November 25.

One of the "Proofs of Prophethood" which Mr. Huxtable mentioned was that every prophet regarded his message as fundamentally the same as other prophets. Others were that he must be an educator with the purpose of the advancement of civilization, and that his knowledge must be innate, spontaneous and not acquired.

Of the station of prophethood Mr. Huxtable said that prophets are the manifestations of the attributes of God, and while their revelations differ in accordance with the needs of the time, yet their essence is the same.

Standards Of Humans Unchristian

Dr. Donald Barnhouse of Philadelphia yesterday claimed that human beings have, as standards of measurement, wealth, education and position. He was speaking at the first of a series of four lectures on "The Marks of a Christian," sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship.

Dr. Barnhouse began with the postulate of a perfect God whose standard is perfection. He stated that God has two measuring rods: the Ten Commandments, in the Old Testament, and Jesus Christ, the Son of God, in the New Testament. Both of these establish the fact that man cannot conform to God's standard.

Dr. Barnhouse further stated that the heart cannot bring forth anything that will satisfy God, although it may satisfy Toronto. You can never by yourself provide what God demands for the good in man is not good enough for God, he said. God will not allow entrance into heaven on the basis of human education, wealth or even character, he said. Heaven will be filled with people who, admitting they cannot fulfill God's standard by their own efforts, accept Christ as their vicarious substitute, as the One who has paid the penalty for their sin, said Dr. Barnhouse.

'Christianity," he said, "is not a system of ethics." He added that man, completely ruined by sin, can find his remedy in God, "Who is equally Love and Justice."

Improved Debating Required

Debating trials for the UTDU tours for both men and women will be held three o'clock this Friday at University College. Open trials for both men and women will be in Room 8 while at the same time, the women who wish to debate by themselves may try out in Room 71.

"Three tours have been arranged for the winners of the open competition," said UTDU chairman, Earl Berger. The winners of the women's trials will debate in the Women's Intercollegiate Debating Competition to be held sometime in late January or early February.

"The retrials were called because of a rather novel situation," said Berger. "Although those in the finals included some of the better debaters on campus, the quality of the debates given was not high enough to warrant having these people represent the University of Toronto." "It is hoped," said Berger, "that these retrials will offer the previous debaters a chance to rectify their mistakes and to allow others who are interested to participate."

Judges for the open competition are Dr. Fields of Victoria College, Dr. Lynch of St. Michael's and Carmen Guild, UC grad and graduate secretary of Hart House. Judges for the women's trials will be the same as last time.

Lit To Try Constitution Amendment

A constitutional amendment will be introduced to the University College Lit's Open Meeting today at 4.00 p.m. "The proposed change will mean that the director of the college show will be appointed by the incoming executive and the Social Director will still be elected, but not necessarily to direct the Lit. President Roger Bull yesterday.

In future the Social Director has assumed direction of the shows as well as the many other functions for which he must be responsible. this proposed amendment will be put to the open meeting this afternoon for vote.

Technically, all persons registered in UC are members of the Lit. In the past there has been a general lack of interest in the meetings which the Lit hopes to rectify by a special committee, set up to study the organization of such meetings. There are two regular open meetings in the fall and two in the spring.

Financial reports to be studied include a report of this year's show, "Where on Earth", the Arts Ball and the successful SHARE campaign engineered by Mike Banazon.

"We feel that Mike Benazon should be particularly congratulated," said Bull as he commented on the success of the campaign in a large and diversified school such as UC. The college celebrated its centennial year by going over their objective with 104 percent and coming out with the highest total on campus with $57.00.

The final report of the Sophomore banquet and the Freshman Weekend will be submitted to the meeting. Both affairs were considered very successful by both the executive and freshmen participants.

In commenting on the Arts Ball, Bull said, "This year we're going to keep the private parties held before the Ball which we began last year." "We hope that the enthusiastic response which the freshmen gave to the Freshmen Weekend is indicative of the spirit around UC which will make the affair not only a social success but a financial one also."

Grads Hold Hoe-Down In Lounge

The first meeting of the newly formed square-dancing group of the Graduate Students Union is scheduled for Thursday from 8:30 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. in the graduate lounge, 44 Hoskin avenue, Thomas Dooley, president of the Union has announced.

A professional caller will be provided for the evening. Both beginners and experts at square dancing are encouraged to attend the sessions, Dooley stated.

The square dancing group has been formed as a part of the expansion of the social and extra-curricular activites undertaken by the executive of the Union.

Group To Continue Interprovincial Visits

An organization called the "Alliance Canadienne" is now being formed in Canada. At a meeting which took place at the home of John Stuart who is connected with the Visites Interprovinciales, a temporary committee was set up to draw up the constitution of this organization. Three university students representing Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg were present.

The purpose of this new organization is to carry on the work of the Visites Interprovinciales which was founded in 1936 to arrange exchange visits between high school students, on a university and adult level.

Mme. St.-Hilaire the moving force behind the group and a journalist for La Patrie of Montreal, said that she believed that personal contacts between French and English people of the same interests and education are necessary to wipe out the old prejudices which still exist.

Mme. St.-Hilaire also read several letters of approval and offers of help from distinguished people all over Canada. Among these was a letter from Mgr. Vandry, rector of Laval University and one from Principal Jeanneret in which he said, "the movement is promising for the future of Canada and I am very proud to associate myself with you in such an undertaking."

— received word of a grant for the Blue and White band in a letter from President Smith which thanked them for their part in the U of T cornerstone-laying ceremonies;

— heard a letter from an University of Western Ontario band member asking for the return of the cane from his uniform which was stolen from him in Hart House after the Western game and for which he will have to pay unless returned;

— were told that the SHARE Indian sale will be held Dec. 14. 15 and 16 with Ian Scott (III SMC) as chairman;

— approved $50 for entertainment for the Canadian University Press conference which will hold open sessions at Hart House Dec 28 29 and 30, and a banquet for representatives of 23 student papers;

— listened to a SHARE interm report detailing 76 percent of the total objective collected so far with UC doubling their last year's contributions;

— applauded two Indian Seminar delegates' reports by Tim Armstrong and Elizabeth Scroggie NUC which explained Indian use of Toronto WUS and SHARE aid and suggested financially supporting only big projects;

— heard a suggestion that a mass meeting be held to inform the students of Indian affairs and enthusiasm for information about Canadian affairs;

— saw Elizabeth Scroggie (IV UC) present Miss A. E. M. Parkes and E. A. Macdonald with gifts from India for their help in aiding the support of the seminar;

— learned that the Blue and White dances, Friday and Saturday evenings for the Western game, were not as successful as previous affairs;

—were informed that the Christmas Tree will be held on Dec. 17;

— heard UTDU chairman Earl Berger (III UC) say that though women were interested in debating they were frightened of it. He feared that Toronto who had originated and fostered a women's intercollegiate debate tournament would not be able to put forth a team themselves; — thanked all those who had helped make the football social events a success.

— turned down a proposal that would allow only three campaigns for funds per year to be held at two-month or appropriate intervals;

— adjourned before 9 p.m., the earliest hour in several council meetings.

CUP Representatives Will Meet In Toronto

Plans for the forthcoming Canadian University Press conference to be held at the University of Toronto are nearly complete, it was announced last night in the report of the Publications commissioner. The conference will be held in Hart House during the three day s— Dec. 28, 29, and 30.

Accommodation for 50 delegates has been arranged at the Campus Co-operative Residences, the report announced. Delegates will eb sent from 23 student newspapers in Canada, extending from Newfoundland, to British Columbia.

The Conference Banquet, sponsored by the Toronto Telegram, will be held the last night of the three-day conference in the great hall of Hart House. It is at this banquet that awards for the best all-round newspapers, in three different groups, and the award for top editorials are made. The Varsity has held one of these awards, two in the last three years. Gregory Clark, of Weekend Magazine will be the guest speaker, it was announced.

The sessions of the conference will be held in the Reading Room of Hart House and will consider resolutions regarding inter-university news coverage, announced Fred Ross, CUP Editor of The Varsity. "This the first time in a number of years the conference has been held in Toronto," he said, "and we hope to give them a top reception."

A. Y. Jackson To Be Judge At Art Show

Any Toronto student may enter the national NFCUS art competition to be held February 1 to 6. Toronto received the mandate for this year's show at the recent conference held in Montreal

Chairman for the competition committee, Barbara Backus [illegible] that literature containing regulations and inviting entries in the competition has gone out to all Canadian Universities.

The works will be hung in the Croft Chapter House of University College and will be judged by A. Y. Jackson and Charles Comfort. It was proposed that a preliminary contest be held on each campus. Colleges with enrolment under 1000 will be limited to four pictures; between 1000 and 5000 to eight picutres and over 5000 to twelve pictures.

Hart House is holding the same type of show from the Quebec and Ontario universities and the Committee is trying to make arrangements for any artist who is interested to enter work from the show in the NFCUS competition.

The plan for a national art competition was approved at the NFCUS conference as a method of proving the value of the existence of the federation. NFCUS feels that the need for encouragement of Canadian culture is undisputed and thinks there is a possibility of discovering a great artist.

In any case the "exchange of ideas on a cultural level" will be an important step toward a better understanding among Canadian university students, Toronto delegates said.

Grad Lounge Gets TV Set For Saturday

Graduate students, their families and friends will have an opportunity to view the Grey Cup game via television this Saturday at the graduate students lounge, Thomas Dooley, president of the Graduate Students' Union announced.

A set [illegible] rented for the day to accomodate those graduates otherwise would not be able to view the sporting classic.

"The lounge will be open from one until six in the afternoon of the game," said Dolley. "Space is limited," he added, "so everyone is encouraged to 'come early'.

Refreshments will be served during the game and until six o'clock for anyone wishing to stop in the lounge after the contest. A nominal fee will be charged.

The NFCUS Corner

Short Stories

By RON PRICE

This year NFCUS is holding a National Short Story Competition. The project is one aspect of the overall NFCUS aim of providing a link between students of various Canadian universities for the interchange of ideas. The annual NFCUS Conference held this year at McGill mandated this project to Bishops and Carleton Colleges. The rules have been drawn up by these Colleges and have been forwarded to the various universities. Entries from Toronto students for this contest are now being received by the NFCUS Committee of the SAC.

The contest will be open to all students registered at the University of Toronto. The stories may be on any topic. They must be under three thousand words in length.

Since many students have written and have had short stories published in the past, it was decided to admit as many of these as possible to the contest. Therefore, the rules state that any of the entries may have been published before, provided that the magazine in which they appeared is a student publication. In other words, anything which has appeared in Acta Victoriana, The Undergrad, The Varsity literary issue or any other student publication will be eligible. However, stories which have appeared in other than student publications will not be considered for the contest.

For those who wish to write a new short story for the contest, a few suggestions have been forwarded by the mandated universities. These are to be taken only as suggestions, however, and are in no way binding upon the writer. It is recommended, first of all, that the main character of the story should be faced with a real problem. The character should have a good reason for wanting to solve this problem rather than running away from it. The ultimate solution to this problem should not be dictated by fate, but should come as a result of the success or failure of the character to respond to the challenge which confronts him. However, these are only suggestions. If the writer has any original ideas of his own, he is quite at liberty to use them.

The deadline for entries to the contest will be December 14. The stories will then be judged by a panel composed of members of the faculties of the various colleges. Two winning stories will be chosen and will be forwarded to the national contest. Although no official word has been received as yet, it is hoped that the national winner will be published in Macleans. Suitable awards are also being obtained for the two Toronto winners.

If you have contributions, contact: Ed Lowery, MI. 0178 or Ron Price, HU. 9-8848. Arrangements are also being made for these contributions to be left with the editors of Acta Victoriana, The Undergrad, The Trireme and The Trinity College Review.

Triangle

The eternal triangle is demonstrated once more in this scene from "The Male Animal," which opens a week's run at Hart House Theatre on Saturday night under the direction of Robert Gill. The participants here are Robert Shirriff, Paisley Maxwell, and Reg. Southgate.

Thurber Play At Hart House This Saturday

The Male Animal by James Thurber and Elliot Nugent, will be the second Hart House Theatre production this season.

It is a comedy, first produced in 1942. It seems more appropriate to the present day than it was then, and last year there was a successful revival in New York.

It is the secondary theme which seems so peculiarly important today. (The primary theme is the eternal battle of the sexes.) This secondary theme concerns freedom of speech in a midwestern university. The trouble starts when a professor intends to read to a class a letter by the late Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

The famous Sacco-Vanzetti case took place in the twenties. Two men, confessed anarchists, were executed, but many people thought they were executed for their political opinions, and were really innocent. A reactionary member of the college's board of trustees forbids the professor to read this letter, and so the question of academic freedom comes up.

Professor Tommy Turner is played by Robert Shirriff, Ellen Turner by Paisley Maxwell. Reg Southgate, Norman Griesdorf, and Joel Wagman are also in the cast.

The play runs from Saturday Nov. 28 to Saturday Dec. 6. The next Hart House Theatre production will be Ibsen's The Wild Duck.

Literary Issue

Once again The Varsity plans to publish a Literary Issue. Short stories and Poems (serious and humorous), and essays are eligible. There is also a photography contest. Entries are judged by experts in various classes. All contributions must be in by Jan. 15th. They are accepted in The Varsity office.

LABOR VS MANAGEMENT

Is The Public Always The Loser?

These Say Yes

So We Walk

The public always loses; because in the larger disputes which frequently result in strikes, such as the recent T.T.C. strike, the public who had no quarrel with the labour or management involved, was the chief sufferer. Yet the public had no voice in the dispute or the possible settlement of it.

In some cases, quite possibly, members of the street car riding public lost working hours and as a result lost income due to a lack of transportation. While it is true that the T.T.C. employees received a certain minimum support from the union, John Q. Public has no reserve fund from which to draw.

Thus in similar cases in industry, it is the public who will lose.

Beatrice Randall,
Grad Studies.

Danger!

Yes. Because the power of labour today has grown so great that it frequently endangers our economy. Widespread strikes often reach the point where men's lives are threatened as in the recent strikes in Northern Ontario and the truckers' strike. Furthermore, public health and welfare may be affected also, as is exemplified in the recent milk strike.

Barbara Boadway,
III Vic.

YOU Lose!

Yes. Labour today has obtained more power than any other period in the history of the western world.

When Labour strikes, all related industries are crippled. For example, during a coal strike. the steel industry suffers from want of coal. During a steel strike, the automotive, railroad and a thousand related industries are severely affected, due to the lack of steel. This can be said to be true for any major industry. Therefore, from the collective action of one section of industry, hundreds of thousands of others may have to receive a cut in hours or a complete layoff.

Not only in strikes, but in all management-labour disputes, a vicious circle is encountered. Assuming one section of labour scores a victory, eventually the cost of the product they deal in will rise, thereby increasing the cost of living. And with an increased cost of living, labour will want more money, and so on . . . ad infinitum.

Thus, the public who carries the burden of cost of living increases, as well as part of the burden of strikes in the form of inconveniences and frequently threat of welfare, will suffer.

Jumbo Branigan,
III S.P.S.

Mais Oui!

A qualified yes. The immediate result in cases of collective action on the part of labour in the part of strikes, for example, such as public utility strikes will be annoyance and disturbance to the public while other strikes may affect the public disfavourably in the long run. Inevitably, in all strikes, the public will lose if the strike is carried on long enough. This does not gainsay the fact that strikes are a valuable and necessary means for labour to assert itself against management.

Jesse Glass,
II General.

Yea Joe!

Yes. And furthermore, I don't like McCarthy.

Doreen Talontest,
II Arts

Boxing Too?

Does the public lose? Definitely! If there is a strike, the public loses the productive man hours, the products and the earnings which would normally be spent.

Assuming that labour is successful and obtains their demands, who pays for it? The public does, in the form of higher costs of production. Furthermore, if there is bad feeling between labour and management, the result is poor work and again higher costs—it all hits the poor 'ole public in its collective neck.

But what the hell, we only live once, so get your disputes in while you may. If the majority of the public don't mind paying for someone else's squabble, then they can laugh it off. But personally, I think it's cheaper to go and see a wrestling match.

Dave Baum, III General

FORUM

Lost

Yes. A portion of the public consists of the union member and his dependents. The public, however, also includes the unorganized worker and his dependents, the unemployed, either through design or lack of work, those who derive their income solely from investments and the self-employed.

Whenever there is a dispute, there is a change in relationship, either subjectively or objectively, in which case, a certain portion gains or loses something. Since this portion is a part of the whole public, therefore the public always loses.

Harry Lipton,
II Poli Sci. and Ec.

—Cartoon by Peter Grant.

These Say No

Logic

No — it does not appear logical that the public always loses in any dispute between labour and management. According to our modern dictionaries, the term "public" interpreted in a broad sense, means the people in general, which includes all human members of society.

In such a dispute, only three things can happen. Either management is victorious, or secondly, labour can win, or lastly it can end in a stalemate, as nothing has changed, the public has lost nothing. If anything, they have gained, as the facts of the dispute may have been publicized and they consequently have been enlightened.

Where a victory is obtained, it is obvious that one part of the public must lose, while another win. Hence PART of the public must always lose where there is a winner, but not necessarily the public in general.

Wilfred A. Johnson,
I Grad Studies.

Neigh

No. — If the interests of the public correspond with the interest of the majority, and the majority of the people are members of the labour force, then the public gains with every gain made by any portion of the labour movement. It is a dynamic process — the tendency being that progress in one area creates progress in another.

The higher standards of living which most of our people now enjoy may be greatly attributed to the victories of organized labour

Al Borovoy,
I Law.

Hmmm . . .

It is impossible to say categorically and without qualifications that this is or is not the case. We have to consider in what industry the dispute (presumably a strike) takes place, the duration of the strike, how large the industry is, social and economic conditions before and after the dispute, and whether we look at this question from a short term or long term point of view.

As far as the Canadian people are concerned, the present dispute in the gold mines of Northern Ontario and Quebec, to take a current example, is not harmful to it. Gold is not an essential product, and the public does not suffer when it is not produced. And as long as we consider 'the people' to include everyone outside a particular industry, then it can safely be said done. But we could say the opposite if by 'the people' we refer only to the communities directly concerned with the strike.

The last two considerations are closely connected. If a town or area is dependent on one industry then it can safely be said that a dispute, especially a long one, in that key industry really does injure the people. However, the public suffering may be only a short-run proposition if the dispute results in better wages, hours, working conditions and social status. In the long-run, the people or public is better off. It seems to me that unions of workers strike and create temporary suffering only because they feel that they — and employed persons are the people — will be permantly better off. If a strike does not improve the lot of the workers, then the workers, i.e., the public, may have suffered an irretrievable loss.

A. Millard,
II UC.

Thoughtful

No. It is important to remember that in the overall picture, labour and management are the public. Both have completely different aspirations, a different outlook, and different methods and tools with which to effect their needs and wants; in fact the only similarity between them is their unlikeness. In view of this, the operation of a dispute between them gives rise to principles, which are seen in two different lights, each accusing the other of myopia.

Many say, therefore, as a result, in this overall picture, labour and management selfishly neglect the public who suffers unduly from the dispute in time, cost and lack of a voice in the decision. In prolonged disputes of the public is threatened and (or) the economy undermined, then steps must be taken to enforce a speedy and fair settlement.

Converging forces tend to collide somewhere, sometime and the operation of a mediating force, government or otherwise, between labour and management, is a stable factor in a liberal state. In England, nationalization called for replacement of management by the government which was formerly the mediating force, and thus a reducation again to two converging forces, i.e., labour vs. management, nevertheless this time with no impartial judge between them. In such a situation, the public is the loser because it is bucking a sovereign force; because there are only two opposed or converging forces, and because the labour force has achieved socialistic control and loses its inspiration and incentives.

Where there is, however, an arbitrator and where one of the sides receives more of its demands than the other; and with the prevailing strength of both sides in power and numbers; and with one of the sides receiving some benefits; then as a proportion of the public they are not the losers. Only if every dispute ended in stalemate, which it couldn't, would the public lose out. Wherever one of the parties benefits, however, and this is usually the case, then this benefit is translated to that part of the public. Though it is true that similarly will part of the public lose; nevertheless, it can not be said to always lose, because herein does it gain.

No more can the public be dis-associated from the public. More important, in this broad picture, is the factor of the arbitration itself, for the very exercise of collective bargaining does benefit the public immeasurably, in this realm, as a free people. No, the public is not always the loser.

Herb Noble,
III Arts.

I still say that the Blues deserved to win that game.

The Cat.

Labour Wins

In most cases of disputes between labour and management, the interests of the public lie more with labour than with management, and consequently, a victory for labour in one of these disputes is in the public interests. This is particularly true in light of the organized nature of the labour movement, because of which a victory or defeat for one section of the labour movement reflects on all labour. The fact of the matter is that the term "labour" comes much closer to meaning "public" than "management".

MULOCK GAME TODAY

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

It must be nice to be a football player. It must be great to wear a blue and white sweater and shoulder pads and score touchdowns while thousands cheer. It must be terrific to have your name in headlines and your picture in the papers. And to be interviewed on the radio. And it must be wonderful to step forward at the athletic banquet in the spring and get that white "T" that says you are a college athlete. It must be nice.

And it must be nice to get your arm shot full of novocaine so the pain will be dulled enough to let you play.

It must be nice to drop the forward pass that would have won the game had you caught it. And to think that the 10,000 people who were conting on you are disappointed. And, even if you're wrong, to think that you've let down the fellows you've played with all year.

It must be nice to run with the ball 20 or 30 times on a Saturday afternoon and be tackled by three or four 200-pound bodies each time you're stopped. So that by the end of the game you're dazed and don't know what day it is.

It must be nice to be smashed in the face by an elbow when all you're trying to do is smash somebody else's face with your own elbow. It must be great to get your nose broken or your front teeth knocked out. It must be terrific to have your knee torn and ripped so that you hobble and limp for three or four months and finally have to undergo an operation.

It must be nice to turn out to practice five nights a week and run and tackle and scrimmage for two hours. And study the movies of last week's game and see where you were wrong. And go out on the field and repeat the play again and again until you can do it right. 'Nice to get home at ten o'clock every night and have to go to bed because football players need nine hours' sleep. And then play your heart out Saturday afternoon and spend Sunday resting. And find that by the end of the season you're fifteen miles behind in your school work and spend the rest of the year slugging and studying so you can pass those examinations next May.

It must be nice to do all these things for little else except that you like the game. With no one to say you've done well and dozens of sports writers and sideline what you didn't do. It must be really great to be a footwhat you didn't do. It must be real great to be a football player.

But give us the grand stand every time. It would take more than a "T" to persuade us to be a football player.

SPEAKING OF BARGAINS

Campus bargain hunters ought to find what they're looking for tomorrow night at Varsity Arena when the hockey Blues are at home to the University of Montreal Carabins. The Athletic Association somehow works it so the games are free to Varsity students. That's about as reasonable an admission price as you're likely to find.

If the calibre of hockey counts for anything, they'd be quite justified in charging at least half a dollar. But through the UTAA's generosity and the returns from the football season, the hockey team doesn't need the money.

Anyhow, this year's edition of the Blues ought to be worth a look. They looked mighty impressive last Saturday night against the players who are going to represent Canada in the world's championships, and lost a 3-2 game only by a couple of goals that could have been called back as easily as they were allowed.

Les Carabins may be a different proposition, though.

Crumpeters, Skule Win Ice Contests

The Trinity "B" hockey machine opened the Group Two season yesterday against SPS IV with a 6-0 victory. Paul McTaggart was top man around the net, potting four goals, while Don Ross and Mick Merwin tallied one each. Ross also assisted on one of McTaggart's goals. Wall and Fred Chalk shared the duties between the pipes, and managed to hold a somewhat shabby Skule attack at bay for the full two periods.

In the only other contest, also in the first division, SPS III topped Vic III by a 2-1 count. Vic's lone goal came midway in the first period when Hubert slipped a low shot past Skule goalie John Urbis. Rick Clarke scored twice for SPS, once in each stanza, to give the Gold and Blue squad the deciding edge. There was just one penalty in this game, as Clark of Victoria was banished at 5:01 of the first period for high-sticking.

Chancellor To Present Trophy After St. Michael's—Skule Clash

By LES PENDLETON

J. E. McCutcheon, director of intramural sports, announced yesterday that arrangements have been completed to have Chancellor Samuel Beatty present the Mulock Cup immediately after today's final game between St. Michael's College and School of Science. The game will be played at 1:30 p.m. in Varsity Stadium unless it rains, in which case the game would be moved to the back campus.

Chancellor Beatty, it will be recalled, was recently installed to succeed the Honorable Vincent Massey, the present Governor-General. The Chancellor has always been a staunch supporter of both intercollegiate and interfaculty football as well as a frequent spectator. "I can think of no one," said Mr. McCutcheon, "better suited to present the Cup than Chancellor Beatty, who was Sir William Mulock's colleague and close personal friend."

Meanwhile, on both sides of the campus, spirit for the big game is running high. Skule promises a huge turnout of supporters, complete with cheerleaders, the Lady Godiva Memorial Band and the Skule Cannon. Classes at SPS have been cancelled from 2 p.m. on. At St. Mike's a pep rally has been scheduled for 12.30 and all classes from noon on are expected to be cancelled.

Both teams seem at top shape: the engineers looked very sharp beating a rugged Forestry crew, that had split two games with the Irish, by a 29-1 count. But St. Mike's was also very impressive as they downed Vic 27-9. Vic had held the unbeaten Engineers to a pair of very close wins 3-1 and 7-1. So comparative scores mean little or nothing in picking a winner.

Skule, of course, features the pinpoint passing of Don Hart. Hart, an all-round performer is also an excellent faker, a good runner and, when necessary, a better-than-average punter. SPS may need his punting since Bruce Day, their regular kicker, suffered an ankle injury in the Forestry game and is a doubtful starter. Guard Earl Ford is the team's defensive star. Ford played last year with Varsity but is eligible since he did not receive his letter. Another versatile player, he also kicks Skule's extra points and is their line-coach. Offensively, George Kelly, Ron Lyons and George Lewis spark their running attack and Cal Weaver, Don Boynton and Lewis are quarterback Hart's favorite receivers. They operate out of a T-formation and use an occasional direct snap to the center half.

St. Mike's were greatly strengthened by the addition of three men from last year's Intermediates: tackle Ed Bruk, end Bill Priestner and fullback Dick Kosterski. The Irish suffered a heavy loss when it was announced that left half Dave Winters would miss the championship game because of a badly-pulled leg muscle. It was Winters who put the Vic game on ice with a 60-yard touchdown run. However, Eddie McKenna, the double Blue's hard-hitting guard will be back in action to help offset the loss. St. Mike's features an exceptionally strong line. Larry Corcoran, Dan Driscoll, Smiley Klix, and McKenna are stand-outs on the front line. The Saints' ground attack is also powerful, led by halfback Jude Fusco and fullback Curt Russell.

Both teams are big, tough and deep. That depth should be very important in a 60-minute, stop-time game. Forestry's lack of reserve power was a major factor in their loss to Skule. St. Mike's, who were finalists last year, have most of their veterans back as well as the three transfers mentioned above. SPS, of course, has strong reserve power due to their combining of their senior and junior teams.

The game is to be played in Varsity Stadium at one-thirty, if weather conditions permit. The field is now protected by a tarpaulin, but rather than let the field be ruined for the Grey Cup game Saturday, the committee has decided to move the interfaculty championship to the back campus in case of bad weather. As a matter of fact, the back campus will probably be in better shape than the stadium if it should rain. Bad weather would be a blessing for St. Mike's since it would minimize Hart's effectiveness in the air and force Skule to run the straight Irish line.

Both teams are ready physically and mentally. Look for long passing early in the game and a terrific defensive battle if both can score in the air. But the Engineers and the Irish are sure to have a trick play or two up their sleeve.

Skule is the favorite, but St. Mike's showing against Vic certainly raised their stock. Neither ball-club will lack a cheering section as the semi-final turnouts proved.

Interfaculty Results

By virtue of a 1-0 win over Sr. Meds yesterday afternoon, the Trinity "A" soccer team advanced into the final against UC for the Arts Faculty Cup on Friday. John Cristofolakos booted the lone Red and Black counter in the second half. While it is rumored that yesterday's tally was the first the Trinity club has scored themselves all season, this does not detract in any way from their power.

In the last week of regular volleyball activity, Sr. UC lost out to a strong Sr. SPS squad 15-11, 15-6, in an early afternoon contest at Hart House.

A Division I play-off saw Meds I edge Dentistry 4-2 in box lacrosse. Gear, McMillan, Sims, and Thomson netted the Doctors' goals, while Latocowiecz and Steele scored for Dentistry. The game was hard-fought, with numerous penalties to both sides, as Meds advanced into the second round of boxla playdowns.

UC Gals Whip Saints, 45-13

There was little element of suspense in the first basketball game at O.C.E. last night as U.C. Sr.-Jr's romped all over St. Hilda's Seniors. Mary Craw with 21 points and Di Conacher with 13 made the greatest contributions to the overwhelming U.C. victory that tallied 45-13 against the Saints.

The Red-and-White squad led, at the end of the first-quarter, due to the sharp shooting of Conacher, Craw and Innis, the spectacular forward line. Jean Martin entered the line in the second-quarter to add four more points to their total. Soon after that, Ann Innis tallied with a beautiful shot from directly under the St's hoop, and Mary Craw scored two more times for the UC squad. Saints tallied from the shots of Nancy McCaslin and Penny Ketchum. However, they weren't nearly strong enough as seen by the 29-5 score at half-time.

Di. Conacher was top scorer in the third quarter with two baskets and one point off Anne Pepall's personal foul in the last seconds of play. The last period in the game saw Jean Martin and Mary Craw giving out with some really action-packed plays that did a lot to test the prowess of St. Hilda's guards. Penny Ketchum came in with a last-minute drive that tallied four quick points for her lagging team. However, it had little effect on the Red-and-White squad, because Mary Craw drove right back to net two lovely shots and end the match with a disastrous 45-13 score in favour of UC Sr.-Jrs.

On the defensive end, Ann Lawson played her usual strong and steady role to keep the smooth UC forwards as far from the St. hoop as possible. Jane Beatty and Di. Walker did a great job in front of UC basket; St. Hilda's forwards found it highly impractical to try to get past the statuesque Miss Walker.

On the whole, it was a fast-moving game, but a little too one-sided to cause excitement. The best part of the match came from the smooth plays of the UC forwards.

Meds A trounced Vic Sr.-Jr. 34-17 in the second game over at OCE. Joan Elliott and Sally Wallace of Meds were high-scorers with six baskets apiece.

The first-quarter was fast and decisive with Elliott starring to put Meds ahead 6-4. Meds, strong forward line, Wallace, Sonley and Kerr went into action in the next period to increase the lead 17-5.

Elliott and Wallace shone again in the second half. There was little the Vic guards could do against the tall accurate Meds forwards. The third-quarter was interpersed with spectacular drives by Vic's Sally McRae, who was aided and abetted by the talented and tiny Olge Mracek. Despite this, Meds still led at the end of the quarter by 24-11.

Janet Barnes scored the opener of the fourth period with a sensational rush shot at the Meds' hoop. (Up until this time, she had been a guard.) Meds continued to score against the hard-working Vicsters and finished far ahead of them in a 34-17 final score.

In the two other matches played last night in the interfaculty b-ball loop, PHE II defeated Vic Sophs 30-14, and POT Jr.-Sr. lost to School of Nursing by a heart-breakingly narrow 26-25.

Hear This! Milt Dunnell Talks Sports

A talk of special interest to sports fans on the campus will be given in Room 8, University College, at 1 p.m. today when Milt Dunnell, sports editor and columnist of the Toronto Daily Star, will speak on the principles of sports writing.

Dunnell is widely known in Canada as the author of "Speaking on Sport", a daily feature in the Star.

He has been sports editor of the Star since 1949, when he succeeded Andy Lytle. Among assignments he has covered for the Star recently have been the 1952 Olympics in Finland, the Walcott-Marciano and Marciano-LaStarza fights and the World Series in October.

Mustangs, Blues Have 5 All-Stars Each

Varsity Blues and Western Mustangs, the teams that clashed in last Saturday's inter-collegiate football final, have placed five men each on the college all-stars as picked by the sports' departments of the five newspapers covering teams in the loop: The Toronto Varsity, The McGill Daily, The Queen's Journal, The McMaster Silhouette and The Western Gazette.

MATTASON

Several positions saw men tied for the honour with the result that 14 players qualified for the first team. Queen's placed three men and McGill one, to round out the first team.

Points were compiled on a basis of two for a first-team selection and one for a second-choice.

There were several almost unanimous choices. Toronto's Phil Muntz received nine points to become all-star fullback in his first year of senior football. Steve Oneschuk was voted first-string halfback by four of the selectors, giving him a total of eight points.

ONESCHUK

Other eight-point men were Western's Jack Wyatt at guard and Ted Roman at tackle.

The other halfback was Ron Stewart of Queen's who picked up seven points. Varsity's Al Haig got the nod as all-star flying wing.

All-star quarterback was Don Getty of Western. Gary Lewis of the Queen's Gaels was chosen at centre, getting seven points from the selectors.

Western's captain, Jack Thompson, tied Toronto's Don Mattason for the other guard position opposite Jack Wyatt. Roy McMurtry of Varsity was the other tackle besides Ted Roman.

Jack Cook of Queen's was a claer-cut choice for end with Western's Don Killinger and McGill's Fred Wilmot tying for the other spot.

Western's Gino Fracas scored five-points to lead the second-team selections with Bill McFarlane getting three to get the other backfield assignment. McMaster's Joe Kosakowski gave Getty a close fight for the quarterback position, trailing the Mustangs by one-trailing the Mustangs by only one-a popular choice at centre, receiving five-points to become runner-up to Lewis.

Our Readers Write:

Well Worth It

Editor,
The Varsity.

On behalf of the alumni who were fortunate enough to attend SKULE NITE 5T4, may I express our appreciation to those who made the show possible. Everyone will agree, I am sure, that it was well worth travelling from points as far as Windsor, Kingston, Ottawa and Montreal to see it.

Some may hesitate to take part in the show because of their studies; if they can possibly spare the time, they will never regret it, for it is functions like Skule Nite, the Auction, LGMB, the Chariot Race and even Daffy-Dil Nite, that give U. of T. the spirit which other universities seem to lack completely.

Carry on, fellows, and continue the good work.

Don G. Currie,

Aqua-Blues Start Well

Varsity's water polo team opened the 1953-54 campaign on an auspicious note last night by dumping their annual rival, Hamilton Aquatic Club, 15-6 in the Hart House pool.

Norm Mortimer pumped home five goals to pace the Blues to their win and Bibi Stipitec fired four. Although these two scored enough between them to beat the Hamiltonians, Wally Plavsic added two more and Bob McKenzie, Gord Hackborne and Larry Rosen netted one each.

The Blues took the lead early and the game was never close. John Bate and Marty Friedland alternated in goal and combined with defencemen Dick Glumac and Barry Tobe to hold the visitors to a minimum of goals. The Park brothers combined for five goals in the Hamilton cause.

The game was spotted by rough play and on several occasions players were ejected from the water. Bob McKenzie, Blue defenceman, suffered a possible broken nose and may be sidelined indefinitely.

This was the first game for the Blues, who are out to capture the intercollegiate championship for the second year-in-a-row. They won the title and the Herschorn cup from McGill last winter. Their first inter-collegiate game this year is against McGill at the first Athletic Night on Dec. 5.

Instability And Uncertainty In Caribbean—Prof. Says

Instability and uncertainty mark the whole Caribbean area. Professor M. P. O'Connell told the Modern History Club, yesterday evening, at Falconer Hall. He suggested that the only possible solution in this period of crises was a West Indian Federation, which British Guiana might be persuaded to join.

Professor O'Connell suggested that a Caribbean Plan, similar in effect to the Colombo plan, might be extended to the area. Canada, the United States, Britain, France, and the Netherlands, would share in the plan as they all have interests in the area. "Canadian interest," said the professor, "depends both on her trade relations (in aluminum) and the sense of responsibility she should have for colonial and commonwealth development."

The background of the present Guianese crisis was given by O'Connell to clarify the situation. He pointed out that British Guiana was only the most outstanding example of a widespread crisis. Rapid economic and social changes have been taking place throughout the whole area in the last few years. This has led to a desire for equal political change.

Professor O'Connell provided a resume of the constitution of British Guiana recently suspended by the British Government. He said that in the government, there was a mixture of elected and appointed officials. However the elected officials predominated. The People's Progressive Party won the recent elections, and embarked on a socialist programme of economy. They advocated a mixture of the American Declaration of Independence and Lenin's State Policy. They also advocated organized violence and absolute control of state power. O'Connell outlined the proposed economic reform; the necessity of dependance on internal labour and capital resources. This could only be achieved with a totalitarian state. Professor O'Connell ended by pointing out the lack of political organization among other groups in British Guiana and the need of unity among different social levels.

A Look Around

A favorite pastime of the older generation is to write and talk about how and what the younger generation thinks. Their findings are usually uncomplimentary.

Things were always better "way back then"; they are generally worse "nowadays".

A survey of students' minds is admittedly difficult, but from what we have heard and seen we think post-war student discussions have been earnest and very intense. We may be going out on a limb, but we think that the student of today is a more serious thinker than his elder.

The war changed things considerably. It was followed by a short period of optimism and hope for rapid solutions to a peaceful world. But there are almost none of the starry-eyed utopians around any more.

Instead we have students who realize that solutions are not simple and wrapped in one little formula. Answers to current problems are complex and detailed. We believe that students in general are more mature to that extent; they realize that the road to their ideals is longer and rougher.

What we are trying to say is that given a chance to discuss and debate, the younger generation will talk seriously, intensely, thoughtfully, and with less self-assurance than students fifteen years ago. They will also be less certain of finding the final solutions than students five years ago.

They have learned that life is not simple and that the solutions to the tougher problems are not contained in any patent formula. They have witnessed the failure of wars, slogans and doctrines to offer ultimate answers. They understand, to a greater extent, that present humanity is just a flash in the infinite story.

Yet with all this "wisdom", it would be tragic if the younger generation had no compelling urge to "make the world over after its own heart's desire".

Open, And Full

Open house in the Engineering faculty tomorrow night will afford arts students and friends of engineers an opportunity to see what makes an engineer and his machines tick.

We hope that the engineers will not only find their faculty open, but full, too.

Are We Cheating?

Education In Society

This article is the result of the conversations and soul-searching of several fourth year arts students at this University. The questions are raised, but remain unanswered.

According to the Massey Report, education is "the progressive development of the individual in all his faculties: physical, intellectual, aesthetic and moral." Is this what the University provides? Is this the path on which we are being trained to walk? An educated citizen body is part of the wealth of the nation. Are we, as students, living up to the opportunities which are here open to us?

THE DEMANDS OF SOCIETY which will be made on University-trained men are exercised over a long period of time and are made presumably in the interest of the good of society. It is ridiculous to suppose that the students should know with finality either what they want or the methods of getting it. No wonder, then, that they find it difficult to respond with decision to the demands of society . . . a term which is itself extremely nebulous.

Students need guidance in their efforts to acquire an understanding of society. When left to their own devices they will be likely to make a disadvantageous choice. A large proportion of students at this university graduate with the firm conviction that they have spent four years in the wrong course, a conviction which has grown every year, but which cannot be remedied because each year represents an investment of $1,200 which in some cases must be refunded as quickly as possible.

SERIOUS STUDENTS are apt to over-stress one aspect of general education at the expense of a balanced programme. If, by any chance, we had more control over curricula this trend would be accentuated and at the same time those of us who came to university seeking a "thin layer of contemporary froth" would find this easier to acquire. If left to our own devices it is conceivable that the honor arts courses would become more specialized and that the General course would deteriorate.

Society has a specific and a general demand to make of its educated citizens. The honor arts courses are not apparently or obviously designed to enable their graduates to make a living. But do they provide the mental furniture for a life which makes living worthwhile?

SOME EDUCATIONAL authorities feel that liberal education killed itself with a continued stress on drill and routine when the thought behind had vanished or altered out of recognition. Once liberal education was dead the sciences rose on the corpse. Can the liberal arts rise from the dead? Would it be in the interests of society if they did? The latter question is usually answered "yes," and the reasons adduced, as above are generally a blind faith in their value. Perhaps this is enough.

"When you reached the end of college you were 22 years old, but because of the length and multiplicity of the units through which you had passed, you had wasted three or four years along the line, and if you had had at any point an interest in getting educated, you lost it and became convinced that you were simply serving time." No wonder that students have been heard to say that they feel cheated. Are we being cheated in fact, or are we cheating ourselves and the society which educated us?

Our Readers Write:

Modern Architectural Atrocity

The Editor,
The Varsity:

After three years of deep consideration we have come to the conclusion that that modern architectural atrocity known as the University of Toronto Book Store is understocked, inefficient and tardy to the point of complete stoppage.

Surely, living in a country as socialistically and democratically advanced as Canada, these fair ladies are paid, are they not, to wait on us? They stand, only to wait, but not upon us. "They also serve" (remember).

Is it not reasonable to suppose that the Calendar's being as stable as it is, these "pillars" of the Bookstore could judge approximately the number of people wanting books. After all, we are not in Oriental Studies; we only expect the standard texts for English, French, History, etc. However, we can "order" — but the books usually arrive just in time for the sups in August (which we wouldn't have had to write if we had had them earlier). Other bookstores seem to have surmounted this apparently insurmountable barrier—i.e., the Vic bookstore.

In summation, sirs, we have reached the conclusion that the only thing in stock is the phrase "out of stock".

Male Suffragette

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I am a male suffragette. I demand that men be given their rights and privileges. Oh yes, we have the vote but we want something far greater — we want freedom from women.

The hallowed halls of Hart House were once consecrated to the specific use of Hart House members — and those members were to be men. Now alas and alack, our ramparts have been overcome. The enemy have surreptitiously infiltrated our ranks, and lead us by our noses into our own Great Hall and indeed into our own cafeteria. Men of Hart House — shall this invasion continue? Shall we submit without a murmur to this feminine onslaught? Members of Hart House — we are men! Let us not flee blindly from the issue. Hart House is our last fort, our last refuge. Rally 'round, men; put your armour on. The battle is not o'er, and victory must be our cy!

Gordon Hurlburt,

Heretic

The Editor,
The Varsity:

H. Wipprecht is a thought-heretic. By this I mean that he is not playing according to the rules of thought, a basic one being that one must not maintain simultaneously one thing and its contradictory. For he asserts as a democratic principle (without an attempt at proof) that one must not tolerate those whom one believes to be intolerants. Logically he must find himself intolerable. I do. Actually, on the issue of self-contradiction, there is little basis for distinction between Wipprecht and the Communists who have upset him emotionally. For the latter argue that the sole cause of social change is economical, and since their argument is not excluded therefrom, they refute themselves. Perhaps the Faculty of Arts should institute a remedial course in Logic. But then The Varsity on the whole might suffer in its entertainment-dimension.

Skulemen Snatch Mulock Cup With 17-0 Shutout Over Irish

Dr. Samuel Beatty (extreme left), Chancellor of the University of Toronto and football fan, has just presented the Mulock Cup to the SPS team, who won the mug yesterday by beating St. Michael's 17-0. The Skulemen become the 60th winners of the cup, the oldest football trophy in Canada. It is the twentieth time the trophy has been won by a team from SPS. Grouped about the background are the happy engineers and peeking over the trophy is coach Jack McFarlane.

By FRED GRAY

Running true to form the S.P.S. "Combines" powered their way to a solid 17-0 win over a fighting St. Mike's club in the 60th outing of the Mulock Cup in Varsity stadium yesterday afternoon. With cheerleaders of both St. Mike's and Skule out to aid the spectators in tainment; the event needed combatting frigid breezes plus a galloping, rule - searching Fred Sgambati and ever-talking, ever-walking Jack McFarlane, coach of the victorious Skule squad, to help provide the entertainment, the event needed only a stronger turn-out by old man sun to be a top-notch affair. The score keeper was handed a definite assist as Skule rolled out their illustrious cannon to signal any and all of their team's scoring efforts.

Capitalizing on the breaks, especially in the first quarter, S.P.S. were able to bottle the Irish in their own end for most of the half as they carried play from the opening kick-off. Only a fighting Double Blue line, led by huskies Ed McKenna and Bill Priestner, held the "Combines" from the score sheet as they drove deep into St. Mike's territory early in the first quarter.

Bruce Day's third-down kick from the 29-yard line was carried out of danger for St. Mike's by Jude Fuscoe, but Skule, regaining possession on the St. Mike's 38, when a Skule kick was fumbled, drove right back into pay-off ter-

Star Editor Discusses 'Journalism'

"Don't go into sportswriting" was the advice given by Milt Dunnell at a meeting yesterday in UC, sponsored by The Varsity to acquaint students with the various aspects of journalism. Dunnell, who is the Sports Editor of The Toronto Star, advised students interested in journalism to first get experience in news reporting and then decide what branch of journalism they want to enter.

Dunnel outlined the two aspects of sportswriting; writing against a deadline and writing with lots of time to spare. The first he said ignores most of the features of good journalism and tries to give a summary of the sports event without embellishment.

In the second type of sports writing the writer can spend more time on the conclusion, colour interest the style of the writing and can devote much less time to facts.

Sportswriting offers the reporter a great opportunity to show his ability, said Dunnell, and with the advent of television, the reporter has to change his style to suit the reader who has probably seen the event on television. This means digging up anecdotes and background stories that the reader is not acquainted with.

House Open To Visitors This Sunday

Students may bring parents, relatives, friends, lady friends, wives, et al to the open house in Hart House this Sunday. The last Sunday of each month is devoted to throwing open the doors for guests between 2:00 and 4:00 p.m. No tickets are required.

Guests and students may view the current exhibition in the Art Gallery by Gustav Weisman as well as the permanent art collection, which is the largest collection of Canadian art outside Ottawa's National Gallery.

The Lee Collection in the Lee Room will also be on view to visitors. This is a collection of mediaeval, Renaissance and earlier objects in metals, stones and literature.

An informal recital will be given in the East Common Room during the afternoon by Miss Patricia L'Heureux, pianist and student at the Conservatory here.

Tea will be served in the Great Hall at 3:00 p.m. to students and their guests, Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, announced last night.

Weekly Workshop

The Varsity is in a bad way. We need reporters to cover the numerous events occurring every day on the campus. Any one interested in writing news stories for The Varsity is invited to the weekly workshop today at 1:00 p.m. in The Varsity office in the basement of the SAC Building. The week's issues will be torn apart and any tyro reporters will be acquainted with the business of reporting.

Exams Mistake—OCE Not True Education

The belief that departmental examinations are detrimental to true education was upheld yesterday afternoon. Students of the Ontario College of Education voted 29 to 29 in favor of the resolution.

"Our present system of educa- has become exam-centred," said Bob Masterson, first speaker for the government. "The acquiring of knowledge is only important because it will be useful in because it will be useful in passing the Departmentals." The government also claimed that examinations are not a true test of the student; they merelly test his ability to memorize the written word.

The opposition defined true education as "the systematic instruction, schooling, or training given to the young in preparation for the work of life." They said that life was a series of tests; therefore examinations, as a rehearsal of constantly recurring situations, were fulfilling the purpose of education. They also said a standard must be set, for the high schools and for entrance into university. The departmental examinations are this standard.

The government did not dispute that a standard must be set. But they claimed that, because of the variability of marks, examinations are not a suitable standard. They also said that examinations are more a test of the teacher than of the student.

Late Lit For Few

The meeting of the University College Literary and Athletic Society did not begin till 4:25 p.m. yesterday afternoon. The meeting was scheduled for 4:00 o'clock. However the required quorum of 20 members (12 of whom were on the executive) did not arrive until nearly 4:30.

The previously announced constitutional amendment was presented at the meeting. It was that the incoming joint executive (of the Lit and Women's Undergraduate Association) should appoint a producer and/or director for the UC musical show. The motion was passed with no questions, and will be brought up for debate at the next meeting of the Lit.

The report of the treasurer, Jack Lewis, aroused some questions. He said that from the UC show there was a deficit and that the LR would be responsible for about $277 of this. The deficit was blamed on the lack of student support for the show. A report on the SHARE campaign was given. For UC, 106 percent of the objective was reached.

John Lee's report of the constitutional committee passed. It suggested that amalgamation with the W U A be considered.

What Women Marry

The Truth About Men

Men are what women marry. They have two feet, two hands and sometimes, two wives, but never more than one idea at a time.

Like Turkish cigarettes they are made of the same material; the only difference is that some men are a little better disguised than other others.

Generally speaking, they may be divided into two classes, husbands and bachelors An eligible bachelor is a man of obstinacy entirely surrounded by suspicion. Husbands are of three varieties: prizes, surprises and consolation prizes.

Making a husband out of a man is one of the highest plastic arts known to civilization. It requires science, sculpture, common sense, faith, hope and charity—especially charity.

It is a psychological marvel that a soft, fluffy, tender, violet-scented thing like a woman would enjoy kissing a big, awkward, stubbly chinned, tobacco and bay rum scented thing like a man.

If you flatter a man, it frightens him to death, and if you don't flatter him, it bores him to death. If you permit him to make love to you he gets tired of you in the end and if you don't he gets tired of you in the beginning.

If you agree with him in everything you soon cease to interest him; if you argue with him you soon cease to charm him. If you believe all he tells you he thinks you are a fool and if you don't he thinks you are a cynic. If you wear gay colours, rouge and a startling hat, he hesitates to take you out. If you wear a little brown beret and a tailored suit he takes you out and spends the evening staring at the women in gay colours, rouge and startling hats.

Varsity Party

The Varsity's having a party where everyone goes to get stewed, beginning with tours of an eminent brewer's where the life-giving liquid is brewed. There's oceans and oceans of Lager, enough to get us all dunked. Jump in in the nude, or, if you're a prude come suitably haltered and trunked. We follow our temperate excursion with something more thoroughly aged at a frat on St. Georgie's, where all the best orgies Have been, from antiquity, staged. Come in and find out how to get there; our staffers are helpful and polite. It's cultured; it's arty; So come to the party, The Varsity Party tonight.

Always Rolling

Five days a week the fourth largest daily newspaper in Toronto (The Varsity, of course! How did you guess!) rolls off these presses. Between six and eight in the morning, 8,000 copies are printed. All-night conducted tours occur at regular intervals for contributors to The Varsity. These free tours cover the complete operations of The Rotary Printing Company in Oshawa, from setting the type to folding the paper eight hours later.

The Varsity How It's Done

By JIM PROUDFOOT

What's behind that little newspaper you pick up each morning at ten o'clock?

Well, that sort of a defeatist attitude never got anybody anywhere. And it certainly never got a feature written. (Did you say 95 lines?)

As a matter of fact, there's quite a bit behind The Varsity, things that few people know about. Of course, the easy way out would be to stop reading right now and join The Varsity staff but, for you cowards who won't join the writing ranks and will never have a chance at the inside information, as it were, herewith an attempt to enlighten you.

Was that 95 lines you said? Wouldn't 90 be okay?

The madness begins early in the morning when the news editors supposedly come down to the office and reputedly write in story ideas in the alleged newsbook. The reason for the nebulousness here is the fact that someone spirited off the newsbook last week. The next step is taken by the reporters who straggle into the day, look at the hypothetical newsbook and sign their names opposite the stories they wish to cover. Then they cover them. Then they write them. It's as simple as that.

It has to be 95, you say? All right. 95 it is.

In the late afternoon, some Varsity person who can operate a typewriter with more than one finger comes to the office to type out the Todays And Comings Up. (There has been a certain amount of dispute whether this should be Comings Up or Coming Ups but it matters very little at this point.) This is a very important stage in producing the paper since, while doubt may exist about other sections of The Varsity, people are bound to read the Todays and Comings Up.

Are you sure 95 will be enough? How about 150?

In the evening, people known as the "person in charge", the "night editor" and the "make up assistants" convene and commence to viciously cut and change stories and to write headlines and to type out Letters to the Editor which have been written in Sanskrit. They also plan the positions of the stories and photos on sheets of paper known as dummies. (Some people attach a certain amount of symbolism to this word.)

The publishers of the Varsity have contrived to have the newspaper published in Oshawa, so all the material must be sent by bus to the Motor City. The final shipment arrives there some time after midnight and, while the Varsity staff sleeps the sleep of the just, the compositors and the printers do their work. The finished copies are loaded onto a truck and driven to Toronto where they are dumped here and there to be picked up by the eager reader.

So you wanted 95 lines? Well, you asked for it.

TD's By Day, Lyons

time inches short of a touchdown. Keeping mainlyl to the ground for these early thrusts SPS backs Ron Lyons and Gord Crandell toted for the bulk of the gains. SPS was finally able to tally a single after a drive starting at the St. Mike's 46. Don Hart hit Cal Weaver with a short pass for 10 and a first followed another short pass to end Arne Fors before being forced to kick. Bruce Day's hoof was gathered in by Olie Babirad who was dropped behing the line for the point, on the first play of the second-quarter. St. Mike's bounced back with their best march of the half but were stalled when John Burn's attempted forward pass was intercepted by Skule's Gord Crandell on his own 30. From here the "Combines" began to roll for their first T.D. Taking to the air Hart found Moulton and Larsen hit Geo. Lewis with a fine 45-yard pass to carry to St. Mike's four where Ron Lyons barged over center two plays later and Earl Ford stepped in to kick the convert.

Down seven points at the outset of the second-half the Double Blue seemed determined to get back in the contest as they roared down to the Skule goal line. Featuring some fine running by Dick Kosterski and a charging, driving run by ever trying Jude Fuscoe, St. Mike's reached the five. Here, quarter John Burns, with an oversized appetite for running, carried three times in succession, crossing the goal line once only to be called back on a offensive holding penalty. Fuscoe tried from the 1-yard line on the third down, but the left side of the SPS line held. It was shortly after this that St. Mike's received the best chance to score as Bill Priestner, playing a fine game throughout, broke in to block a Skule kick behind the line. Recovering the ball St. Mike's were denied by an off-side penalty. Play remained even until SPS moved from the St. Mike's 40 on a march featuring a dazzling run on a reverse by Bruce Day and another deadly Larsen aerial shot to Geo. Lewis for the major. Convert attempt by Ford was blocked.

Skule scored their final touchdown in the last quarter as Bruce Day side-stepped one St. Mike's man and out-raced two other would be tacklers for a 20yard T.D. jaunt. St. Mike's last quarter desperation drive was highlighted by some remarkable play calling featuring a total disregard for thirddown kicking even within their own 25. Even with the inspired running of a never-wearying Jude Fuscoe, who seemed determined to win the game singlen handed if necessary, Skule line held off. Adding insult to injury a long last play pass attempt into Skule's end zone hit the goal post.

Godiva's Knights

The music of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band is credited by some as a potent force in driving Skule yesterday to their first Mulock Cup in eight years. Despite their variety of uniforms and the injured drum, the music was of its usual high standard. The drummer was aided in the really hectic moments by the explosions of the Skule Cannon, a good addition to any bass section. —Staff Photo by Robin Brown.

Interference In Guiana Condemned By Trinity To Defeat Government

Beer was served to the participants of the Trinity-St. Mike's Debate last Wednesday night in the Trinity Common Room. The motion "that Great Britain should not have interfered in British Guiana" was defended by St. Mike's.

F. Scott, I St. Mike's, the first speaker for the government, defined "interference" as acting outside the authority of the constitution. He said, "the suspension of the constitution, urged by the sugar and bauxite interests, was not only unconstitutional but unwise: for it destroyed the confidence in British foreign policy and could have been done within the framework of the constituion. The only justification the British Colonial Office offered for suppressing the four month-old constitution and landing troops was that the Jagan People's Progressive Party government had disrupted the boy scouts and threatened to burn Georgetown."

"We cannot turn the clock back," he said. "If the new construction offers less freedom, it will provide one more rallying point for Jagan, Governor Savage controlled the police, civil service, and foreign policy. He had the power to veto the P P P government — yet he called in troops."

E. Fraser, II Trinity, said that the main industry, the sugar industry, dealt in perishables. Yet the Jagan government had called a strike that would have destroyed much of the economy of the country. He had also advocated aid to the Malayan Communists, Communist youth groups, and abolition of church and company schools. It would be inconsistent for Britain to fight communism in other places, yet support it in Guiana, said Fraser. By acting immediately, they had prevented bloodshed and could proceed with the education of the colony.

J. Weil I St. Mike's, stated that Jagan's government was not Communist; the PPP had only supported, not advocated the sugar strike. The Jagan government has stated that it would aid and respect foreign investments, he said. "The people had voted with their eyes open, and Governor Savage had only called in troops to keep from showing his true colors by vetoing the progressive legislation. The action put, not the PPP or communists, but democracy, on trial," he said.

J. Kirkwood, I Trinity, charged that the youth organizations resembled the Hitler Youth, and that the British action was delayed until the violation of the constitution by the PPP made action imperative. Kirkwood stated that the PPP had organized a people's police and tried to break all economic ties with the empire.

The government was defeated, 16-8.

Saints and Sinners

All This And Godiva Too

Almost every loyal St. Mike's fan turned out yesterday to see the double-Blue lose to the little men with the slide-rules, and a more enthusiastic bunch of rooters you won't find anywhere. Skule also should not be forgotten as they turned out with the Lady Godiva Memorial Band and cheerleaders (feminine variety).

The LGMB was there with its eight pieces and Ukelele and without uniforms. ("[illegible]n, take note.) St. Mike's, not to be outdone, sent a six-piece symphony orchestra into the fray after only two-and-one-half hours of rehearsal. They marched in dignified manner with lecture-gowns as the pride of Skule sported a sign reading, "No parking or stopping in this area".

Five very pretty girls were the feature of the Skule cheering section. In regular cheerleading attire, they had letters on their sweaters. When they arranged themselves in proper order all a true-Blue and yellow-Engineer had to do was to look at the S-K-U-L-E and his life's ambition was realized at last. Imagine, a real SKULE sweater.

The cheerleaders leading Toike Oike were also found to be very useful for enterprising Engineers who wished to show off their broad-jumping skill. The athlete merely stepped on each of the five girls as he courageously vaulted over. Undamaged, they got to their feet and to the "tune" of the LGMB, they did a charleston.

St. Mikes' cheerleaders put on a good effort and had their cheering section really going. The normal size of their squad is six girls and three boys but yesterday one more was added. Wearing long white woollies and slightly confused, "she" really got into the swing of things.

For most of the game it looked like the Engineers had changed their name to "Oakwood". The hooded parkas they were wearing had the name of that Toronto High School lettered on the back. During the last minute of play however, someone came along and took them away; presumably he was an Oakwoodite who had heard of the Engineers' "sourenir-hunting".

The team waited long enough before hoisting coach Jack McFarlane to their shoulders, to receive the Mulock Cup from Chancellor Beatty. This is the sixtieth time the historic symbol of interfaculty football championship has been awarded.

For any unfortunates who missed the game, the highlights will be telecast to-night at 7:00 p.m. on CBLT.

CCF Lecture On Socialism

"The British Labor Party did more towards achieving the welfare state and the just society in eighteen months than other parties did in fifty years," Bob Fenn, I Soc. and Phil. told the UC CCF meeting on The Welfare State in Britain and Scandinavia yesterday. "A National Health Scheme, thousands of school scholarships, increased family allowances, and town and country planning were among the achievements of the first Labor Government."

He said that the nationalization of some of the basic industries (Coal and transport, aviation and power) was an important factor for in the maintainance of full employment and the recovery of their world trade markets, after the war. Fenn said "The Labor Party made the first concentrated attack on the five evils of modern life, want, disease, ignorance, squalor, and unemployment."

"The Social-Democratic Parties in Scandinavia have led the world in legislation for the mixed economy and the welfare state" Fenn concluded..

Southern Negro Student Wins Educational Right

LOUISIANA — (Exchange) — A tall, 17-year-old Negro — son of a New Orleans attorney — last month won the the right to enroll in the combined college of arts and sciences and law at Louisiana State University.

By doing so, the student — A.P. Tureaud, Jr. — became the first of his race to gain admission to any of the South's white undergraduate schools.

Tureaud was admitted only after a series of court battles with the univeristy. LSU argued that Southern University, a Negro school, has equal facilities for young people interested in law. LSU added that "because of the history, traditions, customs and usages of the people of the State of Louisiana, segregation of whites and blacks is necessary to preserve and promote friendly relations and mutual understanding between white and colored persons."

U.S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright upheld Tureaud's contention that Southern facilities did not compare with LSU's and said denial of admission "solely because of race and color" was contrary to a right granted the Negro by the 14th amendment.

Keep It Cleaner

The Editor,
The Varsity:

As one accustomed to walking in the vicinity of the University, may I draw to the attention of those whom it concerns two unpleasant customs which seem to be on the increase. I refer to unsightly garbage and unshovelled snow.

The city by-law calls for all garbage being wrapped and placed in covered containers. There are two regular collections a week, and when there is a public holiday, the change in collection is always published in the press. Surely it is not beyond (educated?) people to consider the appearance of their community, by having their cans as short a time as possible. These containers are easily tipped by pets or children, and loose papers or unwrapped garbage disfigure the streets. This is particularly objectional be when the collections are from the front, but an untidy lane makes a dirty street too. It also creates an unfavorable impression with those using the garages. Let us not have Queen Anne fronts and Mary Anne backs.

Brass plates proudly proclaim a fraternity house, but the uninitiated might think them homes for the aged and infirm. Or perhaps the budget doesn't stretch to a snow shovel.

If every student looked after these two matters themselves, or brought them to the attention of their landlords, or house committees, there would be considerable improvement in the appearance of the district. I trust that this will be attended to before irate neighbors are forced to report to the city authorities.

This does not refer to the University property, or the college residences, which are apparently kept in excellent shape.

Intolerant ?

In "The Varsity" of Nov. 26, Mr. T. J. Enright accuses Mr. Wipprecht of "not tolerating those whom one believes to be intolerants". I read through Mr. Wipprecht's article carefully but could not find any statement to this effect. Obviously there must be some difference between disapproval and intolerance. And is the voicing of your disapproval no longer legitimate in a democracy? Perhaps Mr. Enright would have done better in trying to reply to Mr. Wipprecht's arguments.

Pranksters

(Reprinted from The Vancouver Sun)

It's time certain University of B.C. students did some responsible thinking about where their "high spirits" can lead.

Reports of mass demonstrations, interference with citizens' cars, clashes with police, campus tomato throwing and other prankish disorders could easily hurt UBC and students of today and tomorrow.

UBC desperately needs more money for the permanent buildings it still lacks, to hold its fine faculty together with better salaries, to expand and improve the courses it offers. Most of the money must come from the provincial government.

Education generally is under fire these days by Little Red Schoolhouse enthusiasts. Incredible as it may seem, there are people who think a grasp of the three R's is ample education for the modern world.

Such people will seize all too quickly on UBC student disorders as "evidence" that university students are frivolous and money spent on UBS is wasted.

Students who let "high spirits" give semblance of support to attacks on UBC can impair their own studies there, inflict unfair disadvantages on all other students and heavy damage on students in years to come.

Substitution

Ideals vs Action

Reprinted from THE GEORGIAN

Individual integrity is menaced. Standardized and preconceived attitudes and ideas are rapidly substituting for thought and action.

This new order of things is being realized through the efforts of a powerful machine; a forcible device guided with mechanical precision and with Machiavellian disregard for individual competence.

This engine systematically insinuates itself upon the imagination, the mind, and the will-power. Modern vocabulary calls this contrivance the propaganda machine.

Foremost to be influenced by this device is the imagination, through modern fiction in its various forms. These forms suggest a standard set of characters whose motives are standard reactions geared to exterior happenings; motives which are never the product of the characters' phychological and moral progress or retrogression.

Repeated doses of this type create an individual who is aware as to what reaction is expected of him before a set circumstance, thus relieving him from any imaginative effort.

The magination effectively side-tracked, the propaganda machine disguises itself and attacks the mind from other cardinal points: the newspaper, the radio, and the digest magazines. These modes of relaying information, already "digested" and "coloured" by the author's beliefs encourage the individual to adopt unwittingly the said author's opinion. Personal thinking and brain-exercise in this case becomes superfluous and in time, leads to the withering of the intellect.

The imagination and the mind once atrophied lead to the unco-ordinate use of the will-power. The only remedy to this state of affairs resides in the individual awareness of the imminent danger provided by public opinion and mass thinking.

Stars Boost McGill Fund

Montreal, Nov. 23 — (CUP) — Hollywood stars Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis have contributed to the McGill Combined Charities Appeal.

The following telegram was received.

"We are certain that the students of McGill University will make this year's Combined Charities drive the largest in the history of the school. We are sorry we can't be on hand to lend more active support but Paramount refuses to let us out of our cages at this time." The stars also donated two dollars.

No information is available as to the cost of fifty-seven word telegram from Hollywood to Montreal nor the name of the Martin and Lewis press agent.

DRAMA

OCE Dramatic Society presents a masque and a play, in the OCE Auditorium Thursday through Saturday, Nov. 26-28. The masque is Robertson Davies' Masque of Aesop and the play is Chekhov's The Boor. Hart House Theatre's second production of the season, running for a week starting Saturday, Nov. 28. The Male Animal by Thurber and Nugent is a play about the battle of the sexes and freedom of speech. Direction is as usual by Robert Gill.

INVITATION NIGHT

Milne And Williams

The UC Players' Guild played host to the Victoria College Dramatic Society and the Amateur Dramatic Society from St. Mike's. The plays presented could not have contrasted much more strongly in character; the former group presented Tennessee Williams' Portrait of a Madonna, and the latter Toad of Toad Hall by A. A. Milne.

Portrait of a Madonna, like so many of Tennessee Williams' plays is built around one character, in this case, a faded Southern gentlewoman, Miss Collins, who was ably portrayed by Gigi Nyburg. Unfortunately Williams does not build character into the minor parts and those who played the parts did not realize the necessity of creating character for themselves, so that in contrast to the thoroughly painted lunacy of Miss Collins they appeared as slight pencil drawings.

Toad of Toad Hall is a musical adaptation from the children's classic, The Wind in the Willows, and in addition to some excellent satire includes a humanization of animal life that might easily have been lost by an author less experienced in this type of portrayal than the creator of Winnie the Pooh. This production has seized on the fairy tale quality of the story as the essential basis so that even the rather realistic framework took on a dream quality. Mary McNeil played the part of Marigold, the little girl who believes in the life of the riverbank, and sang the introductory song. Despite considerable cutting in the script Patsy Seguin, Donna Heinman, Mike Davies, and Olivia Lorch consistently po. . ed the riverbank characters cente. ing attention around Mole played by Allan Anderson. This group of players is anxious to give all their members an opportunity to develop in realistic theatrical conditions and hope to produce each of their plays on several stages and for several types of audience.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Conquest Of Everest

A film about the climbing of Everest should, I think, have a double purpose; it should not only give a factual, pictorial account of the expedition, it should also attempt to answer the question "why—why climb mountains?" For only a small minority of this film's viewers will be ardent mountaineers who know why they have to climb mountains even if they cannot explain it.

The Conquest of Everest currently showing at the Odeon Hyland fulfills the first requirement very well. Starting with some shots of the immortal 1924 expedition, which will be of partcular interest to enthusiasts who still carry on the controversy as to whether the use of oxygen is acceptably sporting and whether N. E. Odell might have made the top that last day spent climbing up and down looking for Mallory and Irvine, the photographer takes us from the first testing of equipment in Britain, on to Nepal, through the foothills with some rather magnificent shots of the high mountains beyond, up the glacier, through a tortuous icefall, and up the Lhotse face (evidently the hardest part of the climb) to the South Col at about 26,000 feet. Here the movies stop—indeed this reviewer was amazed that the heavy camera equipment was carried as far as it was and over such terrain. From here on the camera is pointed upwards or airplane shots are used (from the 1928 flight?). Throughout we are aided by neat little diagrams which are interposed whenever confusion as to route might set in.

All this is done with striking photography which portrays the beauty of the scenes (particularly in the trek through the foothills) but also gives an idea of the difficulties involved and the great teamwork which was required to overcome them. Few of us had realized how very hard it is to climb to 29,000 feet.

Now as to the question "why." To this viewer this question was answered not by the narrator's dramatic repetition of Mallory's dictum "Because it is there" nor in the portrayal of the actual surmounting of the almost insurmountable difficulties of the high mountains—the everlasting wind and storm, the incredible bleakness, the agony of high altitude, the awful remoteness—all this is a little too close to the fulfillment of the ideal, indeed to the almost regrettable death of the mountain which turns out to be just the scoffer's "pile of rock" after all, while infinity as usual sits on the next peak as the climber well knows. No, to me this question was answered by the first breath-taking shot of the Himalayas taken from the foothills. This view impressed even the most indifferent observer, that here is a siren something which is incomprehensible, that here indeed are "the ultimate mountains," so that when he returns to the hideous reality of Yonge Street, he will realize that he really has been to another world, a "fantastic universe where the presence of man was not foreseen, perhaps not desired."

My main criticism of the film concerns the narrator; he annoyed me by occasionally being obtrusive. Even if he was perhaps trying to be funny I object to an icefall which is "wrrrrrinkled and rrrravaged . . . crrrrumbling, crrrracking, and rrrroaring."

On the whole, then, The Conquest of Everest is an excellent job especially if viewed only as the straight-forward telling of a story, as perhaps it is meant to be. For although it does try to show the answer to the "why" in mountain climbing, through beautiful photography, it does not raise, as perhaps it should not, the question "What next—What happens after the ideal has been realized?" (I wonder how Marice Brerzog and Marcel Ichac tackle the problem in Victoire sur l'Annapurna. I hope we are given the chance to find out.)

Ruth Pidgeon.

OCE Players Staging Shows Boor, Aesop Run This Week

The OCE dramatic society will present two plays on Thursday through Saturday evenings of this week.

The first play to be presented is Robertson Davies' "The Masque of Aesop". The play was written in 1951 and although suggestive of antiquity in its use of the fable, it is modern in its satire and humor reflecting the customs of our own times.

On the same bill with the Davies play is Anton Chekhov's "The Boor". "The Boor" is a comedy which gives the audience an insight into the lighter side of Russian peasant life.

The play will be presented in the auditorium at OCE. Tickets are now available at OCE or by contacting any member of the student body. The price of the tickets is 50 cents.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

In yesterday morning's Varsity there was a line on the sports page that probably raised the blood pressure of more than a few Interfaculty stalwarts on this campus. The line read 'the game will be played at Varsity Stadium unless it rains, in which case the game (Mulock) would be moved to the back campus'.

You can just imagine the row that the Athletic Office would have found themselves in the middle of, if it had rained and the game had been moved to the back campus. Every man and his dog would have been shouting that since the Stadium does belong to the University, to hell with the Grey Cup game on Saturday.

THE ROW

The row would have centred around our having to move the Mulock, the tops as far as Interfaculty sport is concerned, to the back campus in order to make sure that the rain and the Mulock would not give the Grey Cup a muddy field like the field that the Canadian championship was played on in 1950.

Sure, the stadium belongs to the students of this University. All the more reason why every effort should be made to ensure a good field for the Grey Cup. After all, if you invest hundreds of thousands of dollars in something with an eye to the outside profit you can make on it, it would be very short-sighted to do anything that might endanger the original investment.

THE INVESTMENT

How could a muddy field for the Grey Cup endanger the original investment in the Stadium? Very easily. Before very long, there will be other stadiums in this country that will compare favourably with Varsity as far as seating accommodation and location are concerned. When those stadiums are a reality, the Argos and CRU might get a little snotty about the condition of the field at Varsity. If the field was muddy enough, they might play their games elsewhere. You might think that that wouldn't be such a bad idea. You're wrong.

As soon as the Argo and Grey Cup gates go elsewhere, start looking for a hike in your Athletic fees. At present the rental of the stadium to the Argos and the CRU goes a long way when combined with the gates from the Intercollegiate games, to pay off the debt on the Stadium.

MORE IMPORTANT

More important than paying off the debt of the Stadium is the fact that the gates on Argo, Grey Cup and Intercollegiate football games go a long way in providing an athletic program on this campus. Take for example the year '51-'52. Toronto won some 21 Intercollegiate titles. Of those 21 teams only one plus the basketball team that didn't win a championship could support themselves on their own gates. The basketball team could because there is comparatively little overhead involved. All the others were directly dependent on football gates to pay the freight. That situation still exists.

THE GOOSE

So good show as far as the Athletic Wing is concerned. If it had have rained yesterday the Mulock would have rightly been played on the back campus. After all why kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

END NOTES

It's good news that the Intercollegiate hockey league amended things so that the spare goalie doesn't count as a regular man on the squad. It allows a team to dress another forward. Anybody got a Grey Cup ticket? Congrats to Skule for the 17-0 Mulock win. The Western Gazette gave a six-page spread to the Mustangs for their Yates win. Carabins tonight. They are always good for an entertaining evening of hockey. On December 1, the basketball Blues will play the Harlem Globetrotters in Sudbury.

Premeds Blank Buttery Boys, 2-0

Trinity C Trips UC With 3-2 Game

Yesterday's hockey action in Varsity Arena saw two first division games, with the Trinity 'A' crew dropping a 2-0 contest to Pre-Meds, and the Trinity 'C's edging UC III 32. The first game was marked by several penalties as Pre-Meds pushed aside a Red and Black bid for first place in group II. Murdock and Bateman notched the Doctors' counters, both coming in the second period. Cecutti, in goal for Pre-Meds, kept the Buttery Boys off the score sheet, breaking up many rushes with almost impossible saves.

With Fred Chalk between the pipes, the Trinity C club held off the UC III for most of the second period, to emerge victorious by a close 3-2 score. Cook was a standout for UC, scoring both their goals. Stanton, Coates, and Spencer tallied for Trinity to give them the deciding margin. There were no penalties in this game, which was n indication of the good brand of hockey that will be forthcoming from group IV during the winter.

Pharmacy Wins In Lacrosse, 4-3

In the first game of a best-two-out-of-three Division II box lacrosse final, Pharmacy last night edged Knox 4-3. Pharmacy goal-getters were Bud Gillap with three and Dick Franchesini with one. Graham scored once for Knox along with Kent who was one short of a hat-trick with two tallies.

Surrounded

Skule halfback George Lewis is shown above being brought down by an army of St. Mike's tacklers after one of several long gains in yesterday's Mulock Cup classic in Varsity Stadium. Lewis was a threat all afternoon in an attack that kept the Double Blue defence hopping. He snagged Marv Larsen's forty-five-yard pass on the Irish ten to set up the first SPS touchdown early in the second quarter. The Engineers won the championship for the eleventh time with a 17-0 victory.

Women Swimmers Shoot For Third Title Saturday

By JO RATCLIFFE

The University of Toronto women swimmers will be playing host to their intercollegiate competitors this Saturday evening as they battle it out for the top spot in the swim loop.

McGill, Queen's and Western are contending for the crown with MacMaster out of the running. This year the Mac Gals were overrun with lack of facilities and as a result have been unable to enter a team.

If Toronto wins Saturday it will be their third straight victory. Since the war, this group has managed to retain all intercol records except in breastroke. Last year the gals chalked up a 53-41 lead over the scond place McGill squad who, by the way, appears to be our biggest contender this year.

Queen's was third with a low of 28 and will be missing the assistance of the famed Currie sisters in routine competition. The Toronto medley team chalked up the only record of the meet chopping .5 seconds from the previous year. Bart Gluck is missing from the medlay this year but Claire McMullen and Beryl Lewis will be back in the running.

Kay Miles, of Western is Toronto squad's biggest worry. Kay knocked off 5 seconds in individual medley last year at McGill and is the highest esteemed contender for the 50 yard free style this year. She will be battling it out with Mary Crowther who placed second in this event last season.

McGill is threatening in both synchronized routines and diving. Joan Orser, Dominion Synchronized swimming champion will be competing with Toronto's Nan Peal in this event. Nan has come to us from MacMaster where she swam in duet routines last year. The Lindsay twins, Sheila and Betty are both back to do the honours for McGill in Duet and Synchronized routines. Scoring the Intercol championship in this field last season, the twins will be competing against Toronto's Mary Wingate and Joan Davie.

Heading the list for Toronto divers are Jenny Crawford and Joan Archer. Joan won the interfaculty dive this year closely followed by the other member of the T.O. diving group. Jeannette ... field is McGill's rep in this field and after winning the intercollegiate title last year Jeannette has shown herself a strong threat to the Toronto chances.

Gail Bowker, who attended practises here for the past month will be out of competition due to an unfortunate knee injury. The Toronto squad is being managed by Bev Mothersill, third year PHE.

The most outstanding swimmer in the women's ranks is Beryl Lewis, also a third year gal. Beryl has been with the Lakeshore club for many years and two years ago came through with a 34.4 record in intercollegiate backstroke which is still to be met or broken. Next to Beryl we would put Claire McMullen who has been on the Toronto squad three years in succession. Claire, a third year Physeder was on the big team that crashed the medlay record last season.

For the first time in intercol competition the 100 yard free style will be run. Mary Crowther will be swimming this event for Toronto.

The meet is slated to begin at 8:00 p.m. and will be held in the Hart House pool. It is the first time in five years it has been run off here and a large crowd is expected. — Admission FREE!

The Blues basketball team will be experiencing a thrill that almost every basketball team dreams about but hardly ever expects.

This Tuesday night they meet the world famous "Harlem Globetrotters" in Sudbury . . . The following day they will return to Toronto only to change their socks before they head for Niagara. There they face the strong Niagara University team. Niagara is rated among the top ten teams in the States this year as they open the season with almost the same team that reached the semi-finals of the National Invitational Tournament in New York last March.

The test will give Blues the experience that they will need for the Intercollegiate. They are not expected to defeat either one of these teams but the games should be beneficial to both the coach and the players.

On Saturday night of the same week they will meet another American team when they play host to Buffalo State at Hart House. The outcome of this game should put the Blues on the winning side of the ledger. However if the Buffalo team has any more surprises like the substitute center who scored 42 points against Varsity last year, Bob Masterson and company will have their hands full.

Last Tuesday Dalt White turned over the coaching of the basketball team to Bob Masterson. Bob was pleased with the showing the boys made in their first workout under his eye. . . . . The Blues are still faced with the problem of outside men. With a wealth of big men at his disposal Bob will have to shape one of these boys into a backcourt man. . . . Another problem that he has to cope with is that of shooting. The boys just don't shoot enough. The whole game is putting that ball in the basket and the boys are missing too many chances for shots. Bob was quick to notice this and there should be some changes in the near future.

John McManus the intermediate basketball coach was on the scene this week. He was working his boys Monday night and they have a long way to go before they will be ready. It is a shame that college coaches have to go back to the fundamentals with their ball players. This is why there are so few colorful teams in this part of the country. The college coach should be putting the polish on these boys but, because of improper or insufficient coaching in high school, they have to spend the practice time on first principles.

Intramural Results

Volleyball activity in Hart House yesterday afternoon featured Vic IV slipping by UC V 15-11, 15-13, while St. Mike's O came out on top of Pre-Meds IA 15-13, 13-15, 15-13.

In a Division II semifinal replay, Knox eliminated Emmanuel from the race with a 2-0 win. Knox now enters the second division final against Law on Monday afternoon at 2:00.

Pre-Meds first year crawled into the semi-finals in division I of the box lacrosse play-offs, by virtue of a 7-5 victory over Meds' third year. Sorokolit scored twice for the winners, while Perkin, Robertson, Grose, Loach, and Morin each tallied once. Jones, Kerr, and Bryant kept the older Doctors in the game with goals in the first half, along with Petrovich, who scored twice, Petrovich and Bryant were both penalized twice, leaving the team in weakened condition to face the Pre-Meds onslaught. Pre-Meds will now meet UC I next week to decide one of the final berths.

Veterans Came And Went And Hockey Blues All Set

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The University of Toronto Blues, hockey style, open their intercollegiate season tonight. And they couldn't have picked a tougher opponent. Mons. Therrien and his rip-roaring crew of University of Montreal Carabins, champions of the conference for the last two seasons, barrel into Varsity Arena tonight to open the 1953-54 campaign.

As usual graduations and examinations took their toll of last season's team that finished in fourth and last place in the league, and when stadium manager Harry Griffiths, pinch-hitting for coach Jack Kennedy who was busy assisting Bob Masterson with the football team, opened practices more than a month ago, he found himself minus a number of veterans who had been key men on last year's club. Gone were the wingers off the high-scoring first line, Captain Jack Wheldrake and left-winger Johnny Adams. Gone was centre Bob Primeau, whose studies forced him to the sidelines. Gone were such hard-hitting defencemen as John Addison, Gerry Fitzhenry and Jim Machin.

It all was not lost, for a swarm of veterans and promising newcomers converged on the chockey camp and the coaches were faced with the age-old problem of whom to cut and whom to keep.

A defence, for example, Lou Appleby, who came to Varsity from McGill Redmen last year and played several games toward the end of the season, returned. Also back was Paul Prendergast, who played for the Blues two years ago. An experienced newcomer was Mel Hughes, who has played a few seasons with the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds. Hughes' eligibility hasn't been cleared up yet and veteran Dan Tovey will play in his spot.

Also joining the Varsity rearguard is John Tolton, who has several years of junior hockey behind him, including last season with Toronto Marlboros. Tolton is a steady type of defender, who shows no hesitation at "mixing it up".

The College of Pharmacy still has Jack Ross, the agile and sure-handed goalie, so he returns for his third semester with the Blues. Con Lister will be spare netminder, but under new rules adopted this season, he is not counted on the roster, which gives the teams the right to carry an extra forward or defenceman.

Dave "Red" Stephen is beginning his third season with the seniors and his second as centre of the first line. Stephen is a veteran of hockey, having played with Oshawa Generals and in England, before coming to Toronto. His linemates this winter or for tonight's game at least will be Ernie Bodnar and Jim Wilkes. This is Wilkes' third year with the Blues and Bodnar's second.

The second line is tentatively set as Harry Boyd, Ross Woods and Ken Lawson. Boyd played on two championship Varsity teams, including the 1948 titlists which he captained, and has spent the past few years in England. He will be making the plays for Lawson, a hockey sophomore from Calgary, and Woods, who has just finished a season as kicking specialist for the intermediate football team. Woods was with the intermediate puckster last year.

DAVE STEPHEN

Probable lineup for the third attacking unit will see Don Cossar centring Robin Logie and Joe Akitt. All three are rookies, moving up from the intermediates.

Newcomer Don Avery will probably dress tonight as a spare forward. He played on the line with Logie and Cossar last Saturday. Also trying out for the spots on the team are forward, Joe Walker and Jim Jerome and defencemen Barry Smith and Don Stewart.

Last Saturday night, the Blues played Lymnhurst East Yorks, Canada's representatives in this year's world's championships, and although they lost 3-2 they impressed the coaching staff favorably. They were without Ken Lawson, Harry Boyd and, after the first period, John Tolton, but all three have shaken off their injuries sufficiently to play tonight.

This is the earliest local opening for the intercollegiate season in some years. The Blues have four other games carded before Christmas. They play league games in Quebec on Dec. 4 against Laval and in Verdun on Dec. 5 against the Carabins. Then on Dec. 11 and 12, they make their annual weekend trip to play Michigan and Michigan Sate universities. The trips which were made last season to Colorado and Denver have been cut out this season.

Tonight's opposition, the Carabins, have always been one of the strongest, as well as the most colorful, teams in the league. They've won the title for two straight seasons and, in doing so, have had some of the league's top stars — men like Bernie Quesnel, the Day brothers, Claude Hotte, Vernier, Maurice Lamoureux and Claude Dagenais.

Regarding tonight's game, coach Jack Kennedy said last night: "The Carabins are always a tough team but we've got a good club this year With any kind of a break, we'll surprise a lot of people. The boys will really hustle and will never let up — you can be sure of that."

Exams

From the floor, it was later brought out that only seven percent of Grade Nine students go to university. Yet the examinations are set by university professors for entrance into the university. The point was also made that testing of the teachers should be done by inspectors, not by examinations.

The Old Story

The Prize Is The Thing

One always imagines it would be a fine credit to a lifetime to have donated a scholarship to a University, to be awarded to some well-deserving student. Half of the fun is in knowing the satisfaction that will be the student's pleasure when he picks up his prize, no matter how small it is. But how many students ever see their money?

We are not saying that the student does not appreciate being given credit on his second term fees for the amount he won. He has already had a notice that he won the prize or scholarship. But can the student not be told that he has the option of cashing in on the money himself, or letting the University keep it. Surely the university does not consider its scholarship students such bad risks that they will not trust them to find their own money for their second installment as all other students do.

Most students have much more pressing commitments in the fall at the same time as they are paying their first installment. They may even be counting on the money to help out in such commitments. What a shock it must be when they go to Simcoe Hall and find they have already paid part of their second term fees.

Granted there is provision for a student who really needs the money enabling him to withdraw the cash. But who wants to draw up a year's budget on his personal finances, and get special letters from his faculty, in order to get money that is his anyway. Most students give up as soon as they find the money isn't theirs after all. Completely humbled the scholarship man goes away, and the University is satisfied.

It is just probably as well the interested benefactor never hears of what has become of his prize. He may have stipulated that the money go toward fees, or toward anything else he may have decided the student could use. But if he did not satisfy any particular purpose for the money, is it not possible that he did intend it for the student himself? Our benefactors deserve much more praise than they ever get. But from the bitterness among some of the prize-winners on this campus, they are being blamed for a wrong that is no fault of theirs.

Looking Under The Bed

Accept The Challenge

Reprinted From THE SILHOUETTE

This article is the result of the conversations and soul-searching of several fourth year arts students at this University. The questions are raised, but remain unanswered.

In the last few weeks, a wave of anti-McCarthy demonstrations has been sweeping Canadian Universities, and we, as Canadian University students, should consider the value of such actions.

THESE DEMONSTRATIONS have shown that students are not completely dead to current events, they have attracted attention to the student bodies of the Universities involved, and they have helped to focus attention on an undesirable phenomenon of the current American scene. But are such actions commendable? We think not.

In the first place, they give the nasty little man from Wisconsin far more importance than he deserves. McCarthy does not speak for the United States; much as he would like to. People get the impression that he does so, because he is spectacular. His activities make dramatic reading; so the newspapers report him with disturbing regularity; but this does not mean that he represents the majority of Americans. If the United States produced Joseph McCarthy, it also produced Adlai Stevenson; considered by many to be the greatest American Political Philosopher since William Jennings Bryan. Those who argue that McCarthy does represent America because he is a member of the U.S. federal government, and Stevenson is not, should remember that McCarthy represents only some of the people of his state. He is merely one of two Senators from Wisconsin, whereas the people of Illinois had enough confidence in Stevenson to elect him governor of their state.

SECONDLY, THESE DEMONSTRATIONS are highly emotional, conceived by immature minds and designed to arouse impassioned support for an anti-McCarthy hysteria, rather than reasoned opposition to him. Such an approach is not becoming to students. It is the method used by Senator Joe himself. Our duty is to show that the sane, intelligent approach to the problems of Communism and McCarthyism is the only one befitting mature citizens. McCarthysim, because of its mature, threatens the very freedom it pretends to protect. Hysterical opposition can complete the abandonment of reason, and leave the door wide open to fascism: a greater threat to America today than Communism.

BESIDES, THERE ARE more problems for Canadians to worry about. True, McCarthyism is a threat to us. If it takes hold in the United States it could well spread to Canada, as have soap-operas, give-away programs, and other U.S. contributions to North American culture. But it seems that this is rather on a par with discussing the ramifications of the political unification of Outer and Inner Mongolia; when we should be concerned with the effective unification of French and English speaking Canada. We have domestic dangers that should occupy our energies. Is no one worried about Maurice Duplessis? How much do we know about civil liberties in Alberta? How many people realize that the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada would put our police on a par with the armed forces, and interference with them, during strikes for instance, would become treason. Admittedly, interference with the police in the performance of their duties should be punishable by law. But it should not be an act of treason. That is a characteristic of a Fascist state to which we should be opposed.

FASCISM DOES NOT necessarily come overnight. It is a development that is often gradual; and to thrive requires a certain state of mind, which is cultivated by the use of emotional appeals, and is characterized by the abandonment of reason. Huey Long one said "If fascism ever comes to the United States, it will come in the disguise of one hundred percent Americanism." But it will also come only when the people are mentally ripe for it.

The state of Wisconsin may be no hell; but Senator McCarthy comes from here and he acts like the devil. If we are ever to establish a paradise on earth, we won't do it either by supporting him or by helping to create the state of mind on which his type thrive.

WE CAN BEST PRESERVE and extend our democratic way of life by showing that we are emotionally mature and capable of intelligently accepting the responsibilities and challenges inherent in a democracy. When we prove this, we will have nothing to worry about from Senator McCarthy.

Our Readers Write:

Brassily Blaring To The World

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I find McCarthy disturbing but even more frightening is the ability of the U.S. to produce such monsters such as he. McCarthy is only one of a long succession of power-mad, ruthless amoral monsters. Before McCarthy were Huey Long, William Jennings Bryan and others. It seems a paradox that the country that most brassily blares to the world the benefits of democracy, which sets itself up as and example to the rest of the world can produce such men. May McCarthy meet such an end as his predecessors.

I read with interest H. L. Wipprecht's proofs of Roman Catholic plans for domination. I have read some of the proof cited. It is correctly quoted and states precisely the apparent plan of the Roman Catholic Church. When one believes absolutely he is right then he can not tolerate the presence of any other "truths"; thus the plan of the church is understandable and natural.

This too is the belief of the communist who being frantically and absolutely certain he is right plans the destruction of others who oppose him.

Democracy, or rather our present system of government, is faced then, with dangers political, spiritual and economic. If these dangers are faced squarely with the weapons of justice, freedom and faith in ourselves we can defeat all opponents and thrive on the struggle.

Since the latter methods are obscured in the U.S.A. by the filth of McCarthyism let us in Canada show the world that our methods and way of life are the best on earth — not the best possible, but better than most and point out the error to anyone who would hinder man's right to be himself and think as he wishes.

Be More Careful

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Architectural Atrocity?

Is it not illogical for the young women of III Trinity to call a building atrocious because of some failing among the humans within?

I would like to point out that the building itself is one of the few informal, pleasing buildings on a campus that is swamped with cold mediaeval structures.

I would like to suggest that the young ladeis of III Trinity be more careful in their choice of words regarding architecture.

H. L. King, III Arch.

Who'll Be A Martyr?

We need a hero.

More precisely, a martyr-hero. It is no difficult martyrdom we require; most of the students on this Campus are in a position, at least twice a day, to give their lives for humanity. The supreme service may even be rendered by one of those reluctant heroes who "have greatness thrust upon them" on the way to an overdue lecture.

Follow these instructions. Cross University Avenue by Hart House, as you probably do — frequently. But this time, slip, or look the wrong way, or be in such a hurry that you don't give the car its necessary leeway. You don't have to die. Permanent disability might just be enough to focus a little public attention. But the theory in these cases seems to be: "No place is dangerous until someone gets killed." Better do a good job.

Afraid you won't ever get to that organic Chemistry? Did that Engineer promise to marry you, and now you have no way of proving it? Or maybe it's simply that it's all too much trouble. Don't waste yourself. Don't go to needless trouble getting poison, or cutting your throat in the shaving mirror. Be a boon!

We will get our martyr. He will come, tomorrow, next year, maybe when we have all graduated. And when he has come and gone, something may be done. A stop-light, an overpass (like the one at the Ex, which pays in money), or an underpass. Martyr, in advance we salute you. Who will you be?

Pipe This!

A Fire On One End

Be happy, go lucky, don't smoke. If you have to smoke, do it with a pipe. If that habitual friend, the common cigarette, has a stranglehold on your affections, the chances are one-in-a-dozen that, by the time you are 40, you will have cancer of the lung.

Two famed St. Louis surgeons have induced cancer in mice with the tars of tobacco smoke. Though mice are not usually given to smoking, they have a lot in common with men. Cancer, for instance.

Which brings us to the pipe. The many warm and varied virtues of a facial incinerator have long been recognized by university students. Now another, and perhaps conclusive, argument in its favour has been added. From a pipe, you don't get cancer.

Still, the pipe has never had a fair chance with the public, and we think it deserves an airing.

The first virtue is that a pipe never has to be smoked at all: just stick it in your mouth and chew. It's like chewing gum, only much more distinguished, and it doesn't get you into trouble with people with educated noses.

If you feel that besides having something in your mouth, you have to fill yourself with smoke, there is a long and distinguished list of domestic and foreign brands to chose from. Though all of these ultimately taste alike (and don't ask how) the immediate surroundings become impregnated with varying degrees of aroma (to be kind about it), depending on the price and the endurance of the smoker.

There is also a little matter of p e r s o n a l i t y. The changes wrought in some faces are worth the effort and the price. Some people seem to have been born with a smouldering piece of wood protruding out of the corner of their mouths, like a fiery aside told secretly to everybody. Without it, they feel naked and unprotected.

A pipe may also be used very effectively to soothe the conscience of students who just can't get down to study. The elaborate ritual of filling, lighting, and keeping it lit, takes most of the available time, and sweeping the room out takes the rest. And the conscience is soothed, for, after all, what is more important than smoking to a connoisseur?

There is also a special virtue, stemming from the briar, more romantic, more profitable and less publicized than any the frail pale cigarette can offer. It usually comes from overseas, like messages in floating bottles, and trans-atlantic pigeons. Lately, one of our own sports writers, who goes in for expensive English brands, has profited by this extra treat in a can of tobacco.

Moishe Reiter was opening a can of Scotch Plaid Tobacco, 80 cents an eight of a pound, and made in Ireland. Covering the priceless shag was a tag, covered with dainty feminine handwriting:

"If you're single, drop a line,

If you're married, never mind."

The girl was (and probably still is) sixteen, and she lived in Donegal Pass, Belfast, Ireland. Moishe won't tell her name, nor her address. He wants to use that extra virtue, we guess.

Social Effect Of Tool Development Will Be McIlwraith's TV Subject

The University of Toronto will be the setting for the CBC Television show, Exploring Minds again to-night at 7:30. This week's show, entitled 'The Axe' will be a description of the changes that have taken place as a result of development of certain tools. Mr. Perry Schaltzman will interview Prof. T. F. McIlwraith who will discuss the social conditions associated with different tools.

Items from the Royal Ontario Museum will be on display during the show, illustrating each of the changes to be considered. The main reference point will be the change in the North American Indian who was living in a stone age at the time the white man came.

"The idea of the programme is to suggest that though man was once defenceless to his environment, he is now its master, and he has yet only to master himself," said Mr. B. S. Harris, lecturer in English, and liaison between the CBC and the University.

The forty students who will play host to the University of Montreal students of the Carabin weekend of December 3-6 have been chosen, announced Carabin Committee Co-chairman, Stan Schiff.

The selection committee was composed of Warden McCulley of Hart House, Father Lavery of St. Michael's College, John Stalker and Jennifer Rickard of the Students' Administrative Council, and Stan Schiff and Elizabeth Scroggie, Carabin co-chairmen.

The forty students selected from the various college and faculties on the campus are: Britta Frederikson, Carol Wilbur, PHYSICAL AND OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY; Anne Dillon, Barbara Anne Hewston, Kay Leonard, Janet Fraser, Bob Jarman, ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE; Pat McColl, Lis Marini, Norma McHale, Jane Farquharson, Ron Gould, John Roberts, Robin Mathews, Joan Seymour, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE; Bob Clarette, Joe Bray, Dan Wylie, ENGINEERING; Val Spence, Mary Lou Nash, Ron Price, Basil Moore, Aldwin McCaul, VICTORIA COLLEGE; Anne Clarke, Lorna McDougall, Duncan Gordon, Mary Gimmel, Sheila Middleboro, TRINITY COLLEGE; Annette Salem, HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS; Ruth Hill, NURSING; John LeGallais, Gord Marshall, DENTISTRY; Fred Ceresney, George Case, Robert Martin, Sigmund Vaile, Richard Railton, Jim Bassingthwaighte, MEDICINE. Early in February these students will pay a return visit to the University of Montreal campus.

The Carabin Weekend is designed to promote better understanding between French-speaking and English-speakig university students.

What's Coming Up

CCF Leader Speaks Here

Donald C. MacDonald, newly-elected Provincial Leader of the CCF in Ontario will make one of his first public speeches since his election to the top CCF post before a student audience. He will speak on the campus Tuesday at Alumni Hall. His topic will be "The CCF and Ontario".

Until recently MacDonald has been working as CCF National Organizer. Born in B.C. and raised on a Quebec farm, MacDonald graduated from Queen's with an M.A. degree in 1939.

After graduation MacDonald worked as lecturer, rural school-teacher and newspaperman. During the war he rose from the ranks to become an intelligence officer in the navy, and was later assigned to educational work. On demobilization, he joined the staff of the CCF National Office as Education Director, later becoming National Treasurer and National Organizer of the party. He has been a member of the CCF's Provincial Council in Ontario since 1946.

'The Varsity' Ferrets Out Pencil Talent

Short stories hit a total of three on the literary exchange today. Serious verse still leads with 28. Light verse lags with five, and one lonely little essay is holding its own. Photographs and cartoons as yet are not on the board. The deadline is January 15.

The literary issue of The Varsity has been published annually for many years as an outlet for creative writers on the campus supplementary to the meagrely read crop of college magazines. Prizes are awarded for the best entries in the fields of light verse, serious verse, short stories, essays on any topic chosen by the writer, and photographs and cartoons.

All entries will be critized and prizes awarded by competent judges. If there are not sufficient entries in any of the fields already mentioned, or if the judges feel that no entry merits an award, no prizes will be forthcoming.

The literary issue itself will be published early in February, the intervening time being needed for the judging.

Competition Regulations Announced

The rules for the NFCUS's art competition have been released. The plan for a national art competition was approved at the NFCUS's conference as a method of providing the value of existence of the federation. NFCUS feels that the need for encouragement of Canadian culture is undisputed and thinks there is a possibility of discovering a great artist.

Contributors must be registered undergraduate or graduate students, at a Canadian university during the scholastic year 1953-54. Art college students are not eligible.

The competition is divided into several classes. Class A includes oil paintings and shall not be larger than 24 inches by 20 inches exclusive of the frame.

Class B will be Water Colour paintings, no larger than 16 inches by 20 inches. Water colours will be matted only, with no frames or glass. Class C will include drawings and prints no larger than 16 inches by 20 inches, no frames or glass, matting only. Class D will be caricatures of cartoons. Entries are to be no larger than 9 inches by 12 inches, no frames or glass, just matting.

Entrie will be judged on merits agreed upon by the judges appointed in each case. All works must be original, no copies will be considered. All possible care will be caricatures or cartoons. mitted, but NFCUS will not be responsible for any loss, accident, theft or damage that may occur due to any cause whatever.

SAC Telephone

Central Telephone Placed No Cornerstone Required

"There is a telephone located at the heart of the campus now for the use of both men and women students. Up until now the SAC offices and the Varsity News Office have been plagued with students coming in to use the phone all hours of the day," said E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC.

The new telephone booth is located just inside the side door of the Old Observatory Building now the new home of the SAC and The Varsity.

The building is open from nine o'clock in the morning to far on into the wee hours of the night when The Varsity staff are finished creating the college newspaper.

The need for such a phone has been felt by the students around the centre of the campus for a long time as UC has no phone and the one in Hart House is open to only men. The telephone is of the ten cent variety, but it is hoped that the stampede to the SAC office and The Varsity offices will be detoured to the new conveniences.

The telephone was installed late last week and will go into official operation today. The Bell Telephone Company insures al clients complete privacy, and "the most" in comfort.

Technically, the telephone is the latest thing put out by the Bell Research Laboratories. Accoutrements include a handy phone directory in English for all those who know no other language, a light for phoning by, and convenient slot in which to place your dimes. It is reported that the phone is fool-proof so don't expect to find your dime in the receiving end of the phone.

There will be no opening ceremonies today, as a cornerstone is not a necessary part of every telephone booth.

Expel Seven Students Caught Exam Cheating

Baltimore, Md. — (Exchange) — Seven students were expelled, and three failed and blacklisted, in organized cheating and theft of examinations last spring, John Beever, Honor Commission Chairman at Johns Hopkins University, announced recently.

In connection with this case three additional students were blacklisted for failing to report a violation of the Honor Code. Another three left the University before trial was held and have not yet returned.

The cheating consisted of obtaining final examination papers by devious means. Papers were obtained in General Biology, Freshman Chemistry, and Analytical Geometry.

"The case which the Honor Commission has recently closed," said Beever, "is the most flagrant violation of the Honor System in its 30-year history at the University. The men involved were all freshmen who entertained the mistaken idea that Honor Systems do not work. The violations they planned and carried out were a deliberate and premeditated breach of the ideals of this University The penalties imposed by the Commission were severe but under the circumstances justifiably so."

In reference to those blacklisted for failure to report the violations, Beever explained: "These men knew that the thefts were planned. Reporting of the plans could have resulted in preventive action by the Honor Commission. In this case some of the men subsequently involved would never have become involved, and the others would not have received such severe punishments."

Dr. John Gryder, who taght freshman chemistry last year, stated that this year, as in the past, exams would be kept in secure storage places with special locks. He said that the information stolen last year was obtained from a copy of the exams which he kept in his desk, but Gryder added that this would be avoided in the future.

In summation Beever had this to say:

"The effects of this case upon the Honor System were great. The gravity and magnitude of the violations tested to the fullest the machinery of the Honor System, and I can safely say that the system has emerged stronger than before. Through the diligent cooperation of the student body and the faculty the violation in question was brought to light, and I am again reminded that the Hopkins man is fully conscious of what the word Honor means."

Students' S-Bombs Backfire

A trip into the Hart House "comfort stations" cost three University College students a possible 50 dollars each. The students, Pete Miller II UC, Ed Marzec II UC, and Ted Schaidak I UC, were employed by E. H. Foster Advertising Company to advertise the "Colgate Shave Bomb" in the Grey Cup parade.

The loss of 50 dollars may come about if the students fail to replace three replicas of the Colgate Shave bomb that they were wearing in the parade. They were responsible for the return of the bombs in good condition after the parade but as yet have been unable to locate the stray shave bombs.

After the parade the students made their trip to Hart House and left the cardboard and wire models of the Shave Bombs that they had been wearing outside of the room. On coming out of the room a few minutes later they found that the Shave Bombs had taken a walk.

On inquiry they found that the bombs had been seen making their way towards Victoria College. Later in the day it was reported that several Winnipeg Blue Bomber cheer leaders had their picture taken with the Shave Bombs.

Bruce Cossom of the Foster Advertising agency said on Saturday. "We are glad to see that the fellows took such an interest in the Shave Bombs but we certainly would like to have them back."

They obtained their job through the SAC student employment agency in Hart House, and were simply trying to obtain funds with which to buy certain liquids that most students find to be such an important part of their diet. If the bombs are returned the students may be able to go ahead with their purchases, but if not "Adam's Ale" will be the order of the day.

Igor To Forget

Mike Pearson Kicks Off

Son: "Where are you going this afternoon, Pop?"

Father: "To the Grey Cup game."

Son: "Swell, get a couple more tickets and we'll all go."

Ah to be young and have illusions again. One could say that tickets to Saturday's Canadian championship joust between Winnipeg and Hamilton were as scarce as hen's teeth. However, hen's teeth don't exist and there were 27,328 seats available for the game. Available, that is, at a price or if you knew somebody important.

But the Grey Cup week-end is nothing but an overgrown college football week-end after all and, as such, can stand up on its own merits, with or without the game. It contains the same elements as a college football week-end, only in bigger quantities.

Let us begin at the beginning, in The Varsity's coldly logical way.

The preparations lasted through Friday night as the fans from the four corners of Canada gathered for the gridiron classic, to use the popular phraseology. By Saturday morning, the proper state of elation had been reached and, while no horses had been ridden through the Royal York lobby and no potted palms chopped down, it seemed much like any morning after the night before the Grey Cup game. Only perhaps a little brighter and warmer.

And before long it was game time. All was ready. Miss Grey Cup had been chosen. The Grey Cup parade had completed its tortuous trip to the front campus. Tha fans, 27,328 of them, had flowed into the stadium, Mike Pearson had kicked off the opening kickoff and the game began.

Two hours later, Hamilton Tigers had won the game and the championship, with only the hauds of Lou Kusserow preventing Tom Casey from catching the pass that would have put the match into overtime. The spirits of the Winnipeg rooters must have been daunted for at least five minutes. Then they remembered what they had come to Toronto for.

It seemed a just reward for Hamilton, a town that backs its football team as no other town in the country. While reports had indicated that only slightly more than 3,000 tickets had gone to the Ambitious City for distribution among 12,000 subscribers, there must have been at least 10,000 yellow Tiger-cat helmets in the stands. And, with one mighty "Oskee Wah Wah," which became Toronto's watchword that evening, they celebrated.

All things end, even football games, and, as the fans straggled and staggered away from the scene of combat, the Winnipeg fans sadly bought miniature Grey Cups, muttering something about "melting them down". An enterprising boy sold chips from a goal post segment (probably left over from a college game). The stadium crew set about cleaning up the debris, as they have done dozens of times before and will do dozens of times again. They're all football games, they say.

The Grey Cup game was over. Now the Grey Cup week-end could begin.

Problems Of McCarthyism Get Special McGill Edition

Montreal Nov. 25 — (CUP) — The McGill Daily has put out an "extraordinary edition" devoted to a discussion of Senator Joseph McCarthy. Most Canadian college publications have run articles or editorials on the Wisconsin senator in the past month.

The McGill issue is "an attempt to clarify the issues revolving around the actions of the controversial senator." In a front page editorial there is "a new approach to McCarthy" which has, as its thesis, that the objectives of Communism are being furthered by the actions of McCarthy.

The editorial points out that the aim of communists in a foreign country is to "make the people lose faith in their own system, to weaken it so that at any propitious moment the Communists can take over and create a Communist society ... with the help of the Red army..." The editorial goes on to say that in the US, "due principally to McCarthy" it is not safe to hold any radical views or have a past that has any connection with communism and from this are created fear, doubt and suspicion.

Thus The Daily believes that "this self-proclaimed champion of democracy (McCarthy) could himself be accused of being a Communist," and that it is "interesting to see the objectives of Communism realized by an avowed Anti-Communist".

The Daily also contains a front page story on the effigy burning at the University of Toronto and a composite biography of the senator compiled from MacLeans, The Nation, Look and Time magazines.

Neither the editorial nor the biography offers any solution to McCarthyism. The editorial is not sure there is a problem as it says "perhaps we should ignore McCarthy; perhaps the danger is not there." The news biography calls for student opinion of the senator saying "We leave it up to you. What is your opinion?"

INSPECTORS AND GENERALS

Amateur Duo

Upper Canada College's Little Theatre group chose The Inspector-General by Nikolai Gogal for this year's presentation and made a most interesting evening of it.

Apart from a natural tendency to speak too loudly and too quickly all the actors displayed admirable stage presence and a remarkable ability to remember lines and sustai: a c[illegible]eterization. The performance was amateur theatre in its happiest mood, a general atmosphere of enjoyment pervading both audience and actors.

The sets were not only well-produced by amateur groups. The "ladies' " costumes can only be designed but well-c-onstructed, an all-too-rare occurence with sets all-too-rare occurrence with sets described as delightfully tasteful and most becoming to the "ladies".

David Ross as the hero (or the villain, depending on one's point of vie·v) gave an excellent performance of the foppish young blood from St. Petersburg who finds himself financially embarrassed in a provincial town and cleverly seizes the opportunity of posing as a visiting Inspector-General. As the play progressed and Mr. Ross became more at ease his characterization gained considerably in lightness and humor. Gerald Dawson as a terrified land-owner and Stephen Silverman as the mayor's temperamented wife gave two of the most charming performances of the evening. Both displayed a fine sense of comedy and great good taste in the difficult question of how to ham without carrying it too far. James Colback's performance as the mayor's simpering daughter was most entertaining, too.

Apart from an over-eagerness to draw the curtains so that the final moment of each scene was lost the production was both efficient and enjoyable—an entertaining performance of a very funny play.

ARMS AND THE MAN

On Friday I went to the Norvoc Players' presentation of Shaw's "anti - romantic comedy", Arms [illegible] the Man is the story of Raina an oh-so-nobly patriotic and romantic Bulgarian girl who harbors an enemy fugitive and falls in love with him; for it rapidly becomes apparent that a cowardly chocolat· cream soldier is a much more comfortable companion than the gallant and soulful officer to whom she is engaged. When this epitome of virtue is found to have a certain yearnin for the family maid, Raina is free to pursue her less exalted love and all ends in happy disillusionment.

This is an entertaining piece of theatre and since the production was a capable one, it afforded an amusing and worthwhile evening. The sets, particularly that for the last act, were very good indeed, well-constructed and beautifully designed. The costumes, too, w·e colorful and gaily suitable to the mood of the play.

The most sympathetic performance of the evening was given by Robert Peace as the Swiss fugitive Bluntschli. Although he lost color because the audience was demanding broad comedy his performance was consistently humorous and understanding—he was pathetic in his weariness and amusing in his efficiency. Sharon Acker as Raina, although charming and prettily cos[illegible] put [illegible] much emphasis on running about the stage. Viola Watson a· her mother was trenchan and en[illegible] while Hugh Watson as Major Petkoff, the head-of-the-house, gave an amusing portrait of a pompous old soldier.

NS Painting Disappears After Game

Halifax, Nov. 20—(CUP)—Legal action will be taken against the University Dalhousie University unless a painting is returned to a hotel in Truro, N.S. The painting, "irreplaceable and of great value" was removed from the Truro hotel after a football game between Mount Allison and Acadia.

The owners of the painting feel that Dalhousie students were responsible for the painting's disappearance. There is no verification of this. The Dalhousie student newspaper says that "In view of the great number of Mr. Allison and Acadia students at the game, it is reasonable to point the finger of suspicion elsewhere . . ."

Canadian Music Scores

The old school of music had the last laugh Saturday night in a program of contemporary music presented in Eaton Auditorium by the Canadian League of Composers.

At the end of an evening of music in the modern manner, The Great Lakes Suite by John Beckwith gave a highly entertaining satiric comment on the foibles of the new method. This composition is doubly satirical. The words by James Reaney also have their amusing mockery of people, places and poetry. The music as well as equalling the spirit of the poetry, takes off the short spasms and pauses and the carefree cacophony so often characteristic of modern music. The young Mr. Beckwith does this with such a degree of verisimilitude that when the words were not clear, as was the case in the Lake Ontario section one wondered who was laughing at whom.

The performance profited much from the tasteful histrionic effects and clear enunciation of Glenn Gardiner. He was very superior in Lake Superior. Barbara Franklin was also quite lively but her words were obscure. Leslie Mann, clarinetist; Rowland Pack, cellist, and the composer at the piano completed the ensemble in the general high standard which had been maintained throughout.

Patricia Grant Lewis played two pieces: Aria, Bagatelle, and Rondo from a Suite by Jean Papineau-Couture, and Six Preludes for Piano by Udo Kasemets. She has a brilliant and strong technique quite capable of the demanding rhythmic changes and spasmodic effects of the piece. But her tone became a little harsh in the rapid staccato chords of the Rondo. The movement marked Bagatelle has a mild passage with a Debussy-like melody and chordal progression between two developments of a short figure.

The Six Preludes of Kasemets I found very difficult to appreciate on one hearing. The first seemed quite thoughtful and attained some beauty, but many seemed labored in their attempts to establish a certain pattern and relationship of notes in his 12-tone series. Leo Barkin played in the Sonata for Violin and Piano by Harry Somers and accompanied both groups of songs. Barbara Franklin sang a group of Five Songs to Poems by James Joyce composed by Lorne Betts. Miss Franklin's voice appeared to much better advantage in these songs although the words were still swallowed in tone. Her voice was flexible and clear. The quality of it is pleasant enough to retain its musicality even in unaccompanied passages of the songs. In most of these songs the piano acted more as a comment on and illustration of the vocal part than as an added harmonic structure. The melodic line was often weird but this seems suitable for these Joycean poems. Flood was particularly forceful.

There were also two songs by Oskar Morawetz: The Chimney Sweeper, poem by William Blake, and Grenadier, poem by A. E. Housman. It bodes well for a song to have words of beauty in their own light as a basis. Glenn Gardiner's singing was not as successful as later. Perhaps he was not sufficiently warmed up, for the vibrato was prominent and the tone lacking in color. These songs, while not sunk in the cesspool of tradition did not strive quite so consciously for the original, thus providing a mental relation. There is effective suggestion of atmosphere in the accompaniments.

The Violin Sonata was the longest and perhaps the most advanced work on the program. It is planned as an equal duet for piano and violin, though often it becomes a trio with the piano used for two voices. The feature which gives the work strength is the frequent use of the fugal form. Amid the many discords and freedom of/ from tonality, rigidity of form gives direction. He has increased the effectiveness of his other movements by contrast with the opening of the Largo in A minor before proceeding to what he describes as polytonality and atonality. The Allegro Vivace which closes is again a rough, hammering kind of music which leaves one hanging in a barren land with another of those frustratingly unfinished endings.

John Beckwith called upon the other composers to share in the final applause. It was music alive, alive, ho!

CRITIC IN THE DARK

A Maze On Main Street

Main Street to Broadway, at present situated at the Towne Cinema, is an over - long, undisciplined romp which can only be described, (and that somewhat inaccurately) as the illegitimate off-spring of Stage Door Canteen and Our Town. As evidence to the former, the marquee at the Towne sports such names as Ethel and Lionel Barrymore, Leo Durocher, Helen Hayes, Shirley Booth, John Van Druten, Rodgers and Hammerstein, "and a host of others". As not so mute testimony to the latter, there are Herb Shriner and two new-comers named Mary Murphy and Tom Morton.

The plot which gives cohesion to the intermittent appearances of the luminaries is the usual semi-likely story of small-town girl and budding playwright . . . this time given an added fillip with the girls's corn-fed suitor. In my opinion, Mr. Shriner's contribution tl the film is of such a sterling character that he should have been rewarded with the heroine in the final close-up. No such luck.

The tribulations of the budding playwright, in case you wondered, hinge on his efforts to devise a suitable stage vehicle for one Tallulah Bankhead. Here the film falls into a sort of directorial dichotony—the plot scenes (those which carry forward the main story) are uniformly badly directed, technically dull, and what have you. There are, however, some brilliant inserted scenes, chiefly centering on the boy's troubles with his play, which indicate that director Tay Garnett may have learned much from film-makers like Jean Cocteau and James Broughton. At any rate, he achieves at several points a fine, individual film style. The camera-work of James Wong Howe is unhappily somewhat indifferent, except in the exterior shots of New York City.

The plot scenes referred to above suffer in the main from over-zealous production. Every hair of the girl's coiffure is so carefully arranged, every setting so scrupulously neat, that the occasional felicities of Samson Raphaelson's dialogue are quite lost. Only in the scenes with Shriner, with Gertrude Berg as a kindly landlady, and Agnes Moorhead (trading "dahlings" with Tallulah) as an acid-tongued agent does the film achieve its best moments, attributable I suppose, to the personalities of the actors.

Main Street to Broadway might conceivably have been a far better movie minus half-an-hour, and plus a good-pruning for the often uncontrollable plot. It is still, however, interesting entertainment for anyone who doesn't live within commuting distance of New York. The sincerity of such scenes as the one of Shirley Booth and the autograph hunters is perhaps questionable, but such satisfying bits as the wordless inserts of bearded cartoonist Al Hirschfeld at work are worth the price of admission.

AT OCE

Aesop & The Boor

The O.C.E. Dramatic Society last week produced, under the direction of Fred Haire, two appropriate and creditable one-act plays: "The Boor", by Chekhov, and "A Masque of Aesop", by Robertson Davies. The moral to the Chekhov comedy is essentially "never underestimate the power of a woman". The pretty widow, Helena Popov, languishing contentedly in her weeds, is stormed down to earth by her thoroughly irate and frustrated creditor, Grigori Smirnov, who, although he has already fought three duels, jilted nine women, and been jilted by twelve, and although he is finished with "philosophers in petticoats" forever, nevertheless falls victim to the charms of his coy and insipid debtor. A sprig of parsley embellishes the eternal plot in the character of Lukas, an antique butler, well played by Gordon Stewart. The rage of Smirnov was effectively done by Andrew Hossack, and the difficulty of his continued state of fury excuses some of the weakness of his transition from bill-collector to lover. On the whole, "The Boor", though not completely efective, was certainly enjoyable.

"A Masque of Aesop" is a unique and interesting comedy, with a judicious blend of humor and significance especially suited to our day and age. In it, the god, Apollo, descends from his throne of boredom to amuse himself among the mortals; the first diversion he encounters is a crowd of citizens from Delphi, out to exterminate Aesop, the writer of fables. Apollo grants him a trial, and in his defense Aesop presents a dramatic portrayal of three of his fables: the Belly and Its Members, the Town Mouse and the Country Mouse, and the Chicks and the Pearl.

The Belly scene was presented on a black-out stage with luminous symbols for the various parts of the body, and was extremely effective. The Chicks scene was also well done, in particular by the Cock (John Atkin) and the Pearl (Nancy Affleck). Dave Pattison was a convincingly godlike Apollo, and Don Lentz, an appealing Aesop. A delightfully gruesome touch was added by Apollo's insufferable aunts, the three Fates — Glotho, Lachesis, and Atropos. In general, the "Masque" was cleverly portrayed and appropriately chosen. It is hoped that the audience did not neglect its underlying purport for the charm of its humour.

Considering the difficulties — financial and otherwise — under which O.C.E. laboured in the production of these plays, their effort and achievement are commendable. With few exceptions, the quality of their dramatic and directorial ability was mediocre; but again with few exceptions, the over-all impresson created was favourable. Congratulations are especially deserved for the excellent settings and costuming — the most outstanding qualities of the whole production.

THE MALE ANIMAL

Good Solid Comedy

Professional theatre in Toronto is alive but barely, barely kicking. In contrast to the muddy money theatre that has been dimly running, Bob Gill's thoroughly practised amateur productions have had a sparkle, a dramatic flair, an aliveness that not only contrasts remarkably with the professionals but also with his own shows of last year. In my opinion Antigone has been the best drama of the season so far and The Male Animal the best comedy. This is the kind of theatre that no one on the campus should miss.

The Male Animal by James Thurber and Elliott Nugent is a gentle satire on rugby players, McCarthyism, intellectuals and the battle of the sexes. It takes place at a Midwestern University and is concerned with a professor, Tommy Turner (Robert Shirriff), his wife, Ellen (Paisley Maxwell), and a certain number of events that happen or are about to happen, including the return of Ellen's old beau and great football star, Joe Ferguson (Reg Southgate), a football game with Michigan, and the possible firing of Turner if he reads to his class the last words of Vanzetti of the famous Sacco-Vanzetti case.

It is a good comedy with excellent verbal wit, comic situations and characters. The comedy is exploited to the full by a cast which is remarkably strong throughout its length. Although every character has at one time or another a nicely-executed bit of comedy the medals of honour must go to Bob Shirriff and Reg Southgate who occupied the centre of the play with sharp characterizations that changed subtly as the play developed. Shirriff ran a progression from confused absent-mindedness, to vague and outraged drunkenness, to a stronger, more emotional and decisive character at the end. Not only was his voice suitably vague and confused but the movements of his body had a kind of thought-out character, as if his physical apparatus had never quite become automatic, that was very effective. Reg Southgate, acting the football player, struck a confident, aggressive tone that avoided monotony and which shaded subtly in response to each new situation. Both did excellent jobs.

Paisley Maxwell as Ellen Turner was at her best in the quiet, tender scenes; the more emotional and stormy bits seemed to be more thought out than felt. Ellen is a difficult art because the premises on which Ellen acts are not so much stated in words as they are conveyed by physical gesture, by the creation of an emotional relationship between herself and Tommy. The difficult task of subtle pantomime, of active stage presence, was not completely carried out. However, this same kind of inarticulate acting was executed delightfully by Donald Sutherland as the young football player who dogged the steps of Joe Ferguson with a relaxed mixture of awe, shyness, and egotism which was the highlight of the first act.

Of the other characters Joel Wagman looked the part of Ed Keller, was very funny at times, but employed too much brass for credulity; a slight drop in voice and body movement would cure this. Norman Griesdorf as Dean Frederick Damon, on the other hand, appeared a bit young but slipped in his comments with a nice wry twist. Annette Oelbaum as Keller's wife struck a single, pure, and memorable brassy roar. Long live the pure brass section in the American play. Michael Spivak as Michael Barnes (the young intellectual) did an excellent job in act two in the drunk scene. He was the perfect foil to Shirriff and gave a neat illustration of a drunk man's efforts to correlate lack of balance on his feet with an almost equally strong desire for balance.

Charlotte Holmes, Jeniva Berger, Elizabeth Endicott made good secondary characters each of which had the odd sparkling moment. The play was an excellent comedy. The serious emotional concern behind the play, however, was only touched once by Shirriff in his reading of Vanzetti's letter. Part of the fault lies with the authors who never quite settled on the theme of the play — McCarthyism or Tommy's trouble with Ellen. The other part belongs to the actors who did not always combine at the same time a character that was true and yet funny. This is a standard of acting beyond most undergraduates and is meant not so much as criticism as incidental comment.

Needless to say, the blocking, the lighting, the sound effects, were all handled with that thoroughness for which Gill is known. The set designed by Patricia Corcoran was also excellent. On the whole this is a good solid comedy spiked with some very fine acting. It is interesting to note that Robert Shirriff and Paisley Maxwell are graduates of the University called back because of a lack of actors and actresses on the campus. This shortage is regrettable. I urge anyone who has the slightest interest, experience or no experience, to drop in for an interview with Bob Gill at Hart House. Casting for The Merchant of Venice begins Tuesday.

...A Critic's Complaint

We have noticed this year, while attending concerts, two practices or rather two distortions of practices which may soon entirely drive away that percent of the audience which does pay to have a seat.

Is it really too much to ask that a program be given to each holder of a ticket? We do not expect a personalized gilt copy complete with biographical material, pictures and adds. We only ask for a simple sheet indicating who is doing what, with which and by whom.

The tendency to charge for programs might be excused were it due to some striking shortage of paper. But this hardly seems likely in view of the fact that the brochures on sale usually have more pages made out of better quality paper.

The seond abuse consists not in a scarcity but in a superabundance. It is the eternal encore. There was, almost without exception, an encore at every concert we have attended this season. And in many cases there were more than three encores.

If there is any applause at all for the scheduled program, the coyly blushing artist pulls a few more rabbits from the hat.

This is not only highly inconvenient but also dishonest. The audience is obliged to strain to hear the title of an encore which was obviously just as planned as the rest of the program. If the artist intends to sing, play, dance, recite further selections why does he not honestly say so? Maybe he does not wish to discourage the audience by seeming to present a lengthy program? Maybe he would be ashamed to have such a poor piece appear on the printed program? In either case it is deception, and unfair to the audience.

The artist might also consider that he also does himself harm in his desire to captivate his now captive audience just once more. The contrast and balance of the program are upset by tacking on another gem at the end. Also there is a risk of giving the listener too much of a good thing when they may have already had enough of a bad thing.

For it is rare that any audience is so fond of a performer as to wish to keep him any considerable length of time beyond the normal two-hour program.

CARABINS STILL CHAMPIONS

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Those Carabins are still the champs. They have held the Intercollegiate hockey championship for the last two years and from what the slim gathering of 500 saw Friday night last, they will be the team to beat this year as well.

Of course the University of Montreal always comes up with a hockey team that is worth watching. If the team wasn't worth watching their showman coach, Mons Therrien would be. When the bell to end the game rang, Therrien and the other Carabins on the bench raced onto the ice to give a victory cheer.

THE EMPTY SEATS

There were 3,000 empty seats at the Arena on Friday night, which means that 3,000 Varsity students missed a pretty fair hockey game. The empty seats were a little symbolic of the general drop in attendance at Intercollegiate sports events. During the football season, not a single Intercollegiate game at the Stadium was seen by more than 15,000 fans.

It's hard to understand the fans not turning out to Varsity sports events and particularly the hockey game. The brand of football played in the Intercollegiate is improving from year to year and so should draw crowds which at least equal the crowds of other years. True that the big football games have given the college games some strong competition for attention. But it is a shame since Varsity football is the only really Canadian senior-calibre football left in the country.

EVEN HARDER

It's even harder to understand the small crowd that sat in on the Carabin game. The seats at the Arena go to the students who will show the attendants their ATL cards. There is no money involved.

You couldn't say that the type of hockey played in the Intercollegiate was responsible for driving the students away from Friday night's game. There was time that you had to get to the arena early or you wouldn't get a seat. That was particularly true of Carabin games. But chances are, the absence of some 3,000 students from the game the other night is just another example of student apathy.

THE LEADERS

Usually, students are just as apathetic as their campus leader. This is particularly true as far as the Blue and White is concerned. It was only a week ago that the Blue and White threw a Roam-around as a celebration for the Yates playoff. A Roam-around, when they had two weeks to plan something better. What can you expect then of the students, in view of the pathetic leadership given by the Blue and White.

THE TEAM

The Blues looked good losing 7-5 to the Carabins. Harry Boyd and John Tolton looked like they will prove to be valuable men to have around this year. Probably the most improved player over last year was Lou Appleby who played a great two-way game from his defence spot while assisting in two Blue goals. Don't sell the Blues down the river on their first loss of the season. After all, the season is yet a pup.

END NOTES

Grey Cup tickets for '53 go on sale this morning at 10 in the Athletic Office. 'Hoop Shots' appeared for the first time on the sports page last Friday and will likely continue as a weekly feature. Leo Madden who writes the column is well known over at St. Mike's as a stalwart of the Blue B-ball team last year and as a member of this year's edition of Tri-Bells. To Moishe Reiter who takes over the job of Sports Editor of the Varsity and to Jim Proudfoot who will be writing 'Speaking of Sport', go good wishes. It's been a pleasure.

Blues Dumped 7-5 In Opener Despite 3 Goal First Period

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The University of Montreal Carabins are the Montreal Canadiens of intercollegiate hockey. They thump and bump, they debate everything debatable and they also win championships. They've won the college title the last two seasons and got a good start towards number three last Friday night at Varsity Arena by dumping Varsity Blues 7-5.

Stopped!

Varsity Blues' goalie, Jack Ross, comes out of his nets to stop a scoring drive by two Montreal Carabins in Friday evening's intercollegiate game at Varsity Arena. Unfortunately, the Carabins made enough such scoring drives to win the game 7-5.

The loss was a disappointing setback for the locals. They started with a three-goal outburst in the first period and it looked as though they were going to either skate or bodycheck the Carabins right out of the rink. Mons. Arthur Therrien must have talked the Montrealers out of their lethargy during the intermission because they played better hockey, and tied the score at 5-5 at the end of two frames. That set the stage for Captain Bernie Quesnel, a veteran of the hockey wars, to blast two long shots past Toronto's Jack Ross to win the game.

Long shots and penalties were Varsity's undoing. At least four of the Carabin goals were scored on shots from just inside the blue line as Ross was being screened out on almost every play. Both of Quesnel's goals came with the Blues shorthanded as the officials called the game very strictly. They doled out 11 minor penalties, four majors and two misconducts.

Besides Quesnel, Carabin scorers were Guimond Hebert, Jean Desrochers, Vic Marchessault, Pierre Leblanc and Pierre Landry. Desrochers and Marchessault each assisted on two of their team's goals. Peppery little Claude Hotte, playing his third season of senior hockey, was everywhere at once, serving as a self-styled protector of his team-mates. Desrochers and Leblanc were strong on the Carabin defence, with Leblanc serving more time in the cooler than any other player. He had two fights, one with Jim Wilkes and one with John Tolton, each of which earned him a minor and a major penalty. The two majors tacked on an automatic misconduct.

Rookie Johnny Akitt scored twice for the Blues, once in the first period and once in the second. Ken Lawson and Dave Stephen also scored in the initial frame with Harry Boyd adding the other. Stephen's was the neatest, as he flipped home a nifty pass-out from Ernie Bodnar. Bodnar skated miles to turn in a top-notch effort. Stephen was stick-handling cleverly to lead up-the-ice charges every time he got the puck.

Varsity's new defence brigade was impressive with Lou Appleby starring both ways. He picked up two assists and was the fly in the Carabin ointment time-after-time. The addition of Mal Hughes, whose eligibility certificate hasn't come through yet, will probably give Varsity the best defence corps they've had in years.

Blue Notes: The Blues go to Quebec Friday night to play Laval and, on the way, stop off in Verdun to tackle the Carabins again . . . The other misconduct went to Robin Logie, who piled into the Montreal goalie in the third period after a whistle had stopped play. . . . Only about 500 fans sat in on the game which was as fast and hard-played a college game as there is likely to be all season.

McGill Mermaids Shade Toronto In Swim Meet

McGill University's women's swimming team shaded the Toronto gals 59-50 in the annual intercollegiate women's swim meet held at Hart House Saturday night. McGill who sent out their strongest squad in years completely dominated the meet, though Toronto's Beryl Lewis was the only record setter of the evening. Beryl not only matched her previous 44.4 mark but set a new all time high both in and out of competition at 33.8.

The first event in the programme was the fifty yard free style won as was expected by Kay Miles of Western. Kay who won the same event last season was followed by Toronto's Mary Crowther whose time was 30.3. Claire McMullen missed taking the breast-stroke by a small four second margin as a McGill swimmer battled it out in 41.3 timing.

Joan Orser, Canadian synchronized swimming champion, registered first place in the figures with a total score of 173.6 to her credit. A Queen's contender followed far behind with 128.05. Toronto registered a fourth place.

Western's Kay Miles who chopped five seconds from the individual medley last year was outdone by Dorothy Greesham of McGill who finished at 56.2. Kay trailed with 57 followed by Toronto's Pat Craig at 64.8.

Joan Orser again headed the list in the solo event finishing with a 209.5 total. Teammates Sheila and Betty (they're twins) Lindsay came out of the duet with a score of 184. Toronto's Joan Davie and Mary Wingate tallied 173.

One of the three events won by the Toronto squad was the Medley Relay finished in one minute 45.9 seconds. Heading the Toronto squad were Beryl Lewis and Claire McMullen third PHE and Mary Elinor Ridell. Second was McGill with one minute 54.2 seconds.

The compulsory dive was won by Joan McClure of Western who chalked up a score of 54.5. Joan was followed by McGill's Burleigh Valentin and Toronto's Jenny Crawford who tallied 52.25.

The optional dive was won by Jeanette Hatfield of McGill who won this event in intercollegiate competition last season. Joan McClure ranked second trailing by 8.5 seconds.

Final event of the evening was the free style relay won by a Toronto group of Mary Crowther, Mary Eleanor Ridell and Beryl Lewis in 2 minutes, 5.7 seconds.

Held earlier in the evening, the backstroke was Toronto's most outstanding showing in the past three years of intercol competition. Beryl Lewis who is swimming for her last year with the U of T group knocked 10.6 seconds from her backstroke record of 33.8 set two years ago. According to Beryl it was her fastest time ever and certainly it will take a top notch swimmer to reach this mark in future.

It was the first time in five years to have the meet here and the first time in three that the gals have not brought home the award. There is no trophy for winning the meet though it is one of the most controversial intercollegiate events seconded only by basketball.

McMaster was unable to furnish a team this year due to a sad lack of facilities. Mac has produced some top ranking swimmers in past years and it seems a shame that with so much potential talent about they could not make use of it.

Final Standings: McGill, 59; Toronto 50; Western, 43; Queen's 34.

Blues Take Rugger Pennant By Beating Wanderers 8-0

The University of Toronto rugger team established themselves as champions of the Toronto league on Saturday by beating the Wanderers 8-0. The University team continually out-played their opponents, and during the first-half they were pressing the Wanderers' line repeatedly, but were unable to touch down for some time. William Chadwick, playing at stand-off, showed a talent for long runs, but he was invariably brought down in possession at the last moment. Towards the end of the half Toronto's full-back Phil Sacre, who had not seen much of the play so far, caught a clearance kick from the Wanderers and bowled his way through four tackles to score the first try, which was not converted. Half-time score was, Toronto—3, Wanderers—.

The second-half was played before a tremendous crowd of Grey Cup fans who stopped on their way home from the game. As in the first-half Toronto had much the better of the play. William Chadwick, Stan Lepper and Mike Laughton thrilled the fans with spectacular runs, but they each tried too often to do it alone, and failed. About half-way through the second-half, a fine passing

Soccer Cup Goes To Trinity, Beat UC 3-1

On Friday afternnon the Trinity College 'A' soccer team won the Arts Faculty Cup for the fourth time since their federation with the University in 1952 by a score of 3-1. The Arts Cup, given annually for Interfaculty Soccer supremacy, was first contested in 1895, and has been up for competition every year since except the war years of 1917 and 1918. S.P.S. have won it the most times, thirteen in all, while UC, the other half of Friday's game have won it seven times. However the Trinity club have been finalists in six of the last seven years, and have proved themselves well able to hold their own on the soccer field.

The game opened with a surprise as Trinity forward John Cristofolakos beat the UC goalie with an unexpected shot in the first minute of play. Taking this setback in their stride the UC attack became organized and spent most of the rest of the game in Trinity territory. Spafked by Jim Treliving and Jerry Petrasek time and time again they drove in on the Red and Black goal, only to be frustrated by the brilliant goaltending of Bill Crossin. Eight minutes after their first goal, Trinity were awarded a penalty shot when a UC defender haplessly caught the ball in the unguarded Red and White g almouth. The advantage of a penalty shot is that the team may select any player to take the shot from almost point-blank hange. Stan Cater, the Trinity captain and easily the best man on the field, put the ball behind UC goalie Mike Temple to make the score 2-0 in Trinity's favour. After fifteen minutes of the second half UC finally connected as Jim Treliving, left unmarked on the edge of the penalty area, blistered a shot at the upraised hands of the Trinity goalie with such force that it knocked him flat on his back. UC pressed again to even the count but were constantly turned aside by a stout defence composed of John Revell and Gus Ivory. Late in the half Cater salted it away with a low curving shot to make a final score of 3-1 for the Trinity crew.

Both teams were fairly even defensively and taking advantage of the breaks created the win for the Red and Black, Petrasek, Sandstrom and Rintoul played well for UC, along with their captain and lone goal-getter, Jim Treliving. Cater and Revell were best for Trinity as well as Bill Crossin in goal, whose outstanding performance was a major factor in helping the Red and Black squad carry the Arts Faculty Cup home.

St. Mike's A took UC 7-1 in a rough lacrosse game at Hart House on Friday during the noon hour. At half-time in the Intramural quarter final, the Irish had taken a comfortable lead of 3-1 over the loose University College Redmen. During the game several fights broke out. St. Mike's were a power house defensively and offensively.

Rugger

movement of the three quarters put the ball out to Bob Trillia on the wing. Trillia sprinted away, hotly pursued by two Wanderers. As he crossed the line ahead of them they slowed down, allowing him to touch down between the posts. This try was easily converted by Dave Fayle, bringing the University's score to 8 points. The score at full time: U of T—8; Wanderers—0.

Irish, Skule, Forestry Win

In two-second division Interfaculty hockey games on Friday, SPS VI shared Dents B 3-1, while a strong Forestry A squad blanked the Pharmacy A team 3-0. In the first game Kinoshita tallied for Dents and Skule goal-getters were Taylor, with one, and Cooper with two.

Forestry goalie Woody McBride held off a determined Pharmacy attack for his first shutout of the young season, while team-mates Jim Wadell, Ross and Naylor potted goals for the deciding edge. Bob Lang and John Francy were best for the Druggists.

In the lone first division game St. Mike's C powered their way over the Vic IV 9-1, Struthers scored for Vic in the one-sided contest, while McDougall and Jerome picked up hat-tricks for the Double Blue. Metinier also tallied for St. Mike's, with two goals, along with Peart who scored once. The victory gave St. Mike's possession of first place in Group Five of the first division.

Blues Ready for Busy time Play Five Pre-Xmas Games

The University of Toronto basketball team will have a busy time before Christmas and it won't all be caused by term exams. The Blues leave either Monday night of early Tuesday morning to take on the famous Harlem Globetrotters on Tuesday night in an exhibition game in Sudbury.

On Wednesday afternoon, the Blues will get back to Toronto in time to catch a bus headed for Niagara University in Niagara Falls, New York and a game with the Purple Eagles. Next Saturday they play host to Albion College in the first Athletic Night feature of the season at Hart House. The following Wednesday evening Panzer College will be here and Buffalo State is scheduled for the Saturday night of December 12.

Trends Behind Education

One day last week an article appeared in this paper on the surprising topic of philosophy in education. It was attributed to "the conversations and soul-searching of several fourth-year arts students".

While the students raised several pertinent questions in the article, they also managed to raise some disagreeable ones.

The article declares: "It is ridiculous to suppose that the students should know with finality either what they want or the methods of getting it." We partly agree that it is impossible for students to "know with finality" what they want. But then who does?

The serious flaw in the argument of the arts students can be best brought up with a question. If the student does not know what he wants and how to get it—then who does? We think the individual student is the best judge of this.

Students could use guidance—we agree; but we cannot accept the contention that "when left to their own devices they will be likely to make a disadvantageous choice" of subjects.

At this university there are many graduates who feel they had spent their four years in the "wrong" course. But this is a result of faulty preparation, not because of the innate inability of the student to choose the right subjects.

Courses here are planned. We do not necessarily take what we want to take. On too many occasions we are "forced" to take certain subjects we actually dislike. Why? Because a committee of professors feels we need balance in the course—their ideas of "balance".

How can we get the best out of a student if he is not studying the subjects he likes or those in which he is interested?

If students over-stress one aspect of a general education at the expense of a balanced program, it is a loss to the students as well as to society. We cannot accept the belief that students consciously work to their disadvantage. The article further states that "if left on their own" students would abandon the general arts courses and concentrate on specialization.

This may be so, but is it a result of the students' inability to choose or is it a result of the pressures of society? Has society placed a demand on education for specialists which has, in turn, become reflected in the subjects taken?

The Massey Report defines education as "the progressive development of the individual in all his faculties: physical, intellectual, aesthetic and moral." This is what the university can provide.

Is this, in fact, the path on which students are being trained to walk? No. Society, today, imposes a drill and routine upon its members that appears to bring success only to the specialist. Can we blame the student for wanting to "overstress"?

It does little good to ask if we are cheating the society which educated us. We are giving society what it is asking of us.

The problem, therefore, does not rest with student inability to balance, but rather with society's narrow and warped change of that outlook which inevitably outlook. What is needed is a drastic will be reflected in the students' attitude toward education.

Girls — Occasionally?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I do not agree entirely with the poor "male suffragette" of the November 26 issue of The Varsity.

Just because members of Hart House have been allowed, on several occasions, to bring female guests into the Great Hall for a single meal, this misogynist gets excited about women infiltrating into the "Hallowed Halls". Perhaps our friend would also like to bar women from Hart House dances. I know he must be a charming fellow but I personally prefer to dance with young ladies. I think that allowing ladies to come to pre-game luncheons in Hart House has added to the enjoyment of the football weekends and thus increased the usefulness of Hart House for its members.

Of course it would be inadvisable to let women have the run of Hart House at all times (for obvious reasons) but on certain occasions I see no reason to exclude them.

Less Sex

The Editor,
The Varsity:

There was quite a bit of talking about sex in the last week's Varsity editions. What are the results? Is there anything undertaken to resolve the problem? I guess there can be something done about it. What is corrupting our thoughts? My answer is: the dirty magazines, pictures with slightly-dressed women. Some time ago I saw a boy-student and a girl-student looking at some dirty pictures of some so-called Beauty Magazine.

If you go to the JCR lunch room you can see there students playing cards on the back of which are pictures of half-naked girls. There are also girls sitting around, but nobody would blush looking at these pictures.

Well, that's how far we have already got. There are sometimes pictures even in The Varsity, I myself wouldn't agree with either.

I think if we would try to do away with any kinds of indecent pictures and literature which corrupt our minds and would soon be able to realize the real values of love.

Siegfried Neukirch,
I Arts.

Party Poopers

The Editor,
The Varsity:

To the Liar Who Wrote "The Truth About Men."

To begin with we should like to redefine the three varieties of husbands: trial size (love 'em and leave 'em — Hollywood Style), family size (need we say more), and the giant, economy (???) size (yachts, furs, diamonds and Cadillacs).

Making a husband out of the first and last types may be a plastic art. However, these types are only a drop in the bucket compared to the great number of "family size" men.

Accordingly to Mr. Le Chateliers Principle, the reaction is reversible: the woman not only makes a husband out of the man, but the man makes a wife out of the woman.

"Kissing a big awkward, stubby chinned, tobacco and bay rum scented thing" sounds much more enjoyable than bidding a nocturnal farewell by shaking the clammy hand of a delicate specimen of humanity.

In general we violently disagree with the remarks made by this apparently frustrated "party pooper".

Our Own Cat Week

As members of humanity (and every fee-paying Varsity Student is a member of Humanity, whether he knows it or not) we cannot be too grateful to the cats. Without them, we would lack one of our few excuses, if not our only excuse, for continued existence. Animals (and every Varsity student is also an animal) are arbitrarill grouped in two categories: useful and useless. Pigs are useful. They supply pork, bacon, gloves, pigsfeet, a convenient epithet, and an antiquated form of toothbrush. Arvaarks, rhinosceri and the pathogenic organisms have relatively little utility. And we? To the pig, we are the god who giveth, and who taketh away. Useless. To the mosquito we are a source of supply, but a dangerous and disingenuous one. To the others, and even to our gullible friend, the dog, we are unjust, condescending despots. But to the cat, no man's friend and no woman's sycophant, we are truly noble, truly dignified. We give selflessly to the cat's comfort and well-being with no thought of recompense or reward. Toward the cat, do we show the Divine attribute of genuine charity.

So, at least for this week, The Varsity's own national Cat Week, be good to all cats. We owe them our self-respect.

Cold Facts

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In regard to your editorial of Nov. 24, we submit that you have misconstrued the meaning of our policy regarding Canadian independence. Also, when you say that our programme maintains that we should "keep Canada independent you are not entirely correct. We go further than that and maintain that there is now an urgent need to regain our independence from American domination.

Why do we say this? It is because the cold facts point to that conclusion. American monopoly interests have gained control over much of our rich natural recources. U.S. investments control our key industries —pulp and paper, auto, electrical, etc. Allowing the invasion of U.S. "comic book" culture into Canada hinders the development of a truly Canadian culture. American pressure is behind the dangerous McCarthyite amendments to the criminal code. These are a few examples which the Gouzenko incident (where the Government has acquiesced and will allow McCarthyites into Canada) does not disprove.

An article in the Financial Post some months ago raises the question as to whether it will be possible to stop the US drive to take over all of Canada's Northland. The LPP says we can and must stop this drive to take over not only our Northland, but the whole of Canada. This can be done by a national policy which put the interest of Canada first.

Such a made-in-Canada policy would see to it that we build up and expand Canadian industries by processing more of our raw materials at home; that we break the U.S. shackles on Canadian trade; that we build the St. Lawrence Seaway, the all-Canadian gas pipeline now; that we enact a Bill of Rights to protect the civil rights of all Canadians.

This is the kind of independence we are talking about, founded on a new national policy to Put Canada First.

Debate Winners Get UTDU Nod In First Retrial

The University of Toronto Debating Union has announced the winners of the Open Competition held last Friday afternoon. They are John Roberts, III UC, Dave Gauthier IV UC, Leo Gray II SPS, Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds, Bill Morris, IV Vic, and Harriet Thompson IV UC. Winners of the Women's Competition were Harriet Thompson IV UC and Elaine Newton.

If Harriet Thompson goes into the open completion, then Scotty Mathews, IV Trinity, will debate for the women.

The teams have not been made up as yet, because the organizing committee has not been able to decide who can leave when and where.

Judges of the competition were Carmen Guild, Professor Field of Victoria College, and Professor Lynch of St. Mike's. Winners of the Open Competition will go to Pittsburg, Montreal and also a tour of the North-Eastern Seaboard.

The women will be representing the university in an inter-collegiate debating tournament sometime in the early part of February. Details concerning dates and constitution are now being prepared.

Earl Berger, III UC, chairman of the UTDU said, "Last Friday's debates were a great improvement over those given on the 20th of November, and I feel sure that the debaters we have chosen will prove themselves excellent representatives of the University of Toronto."

The topic of the debates was "Resolved that the idea of a world Federation is unrealistic". The debators also were judged on a three-minute impromptu speech.

No debaters were picked at the first competition because the judges did not feel that the calibre of the material presented was sufficient to warrant choosing the contestants as representatives of the university.

"It is hoped that the tours will include the universities of Harvard, West Point, Boston, Boston College, and New York, as well as several universities in Eastern Canada," said Berger.

Want Back 3 Smuggled 'Ad-Bombs'

Have you seen anybody looking for a bomb in your residence, if you live in one? If you have'nt, you may yet. According to Mr. Bruce Easson the police are posting up notices.

The bombs are not explosive, and not expensive. They only cost fifty dollars each, and there are three of them.

"We want them back," said Easson, who is a representative of the Harry E. Foster Advertising Agency, who owns the bombs. The bombs which advertised "Colgate Shaving Cream" in the Grey Cup parade, were last seen vanishing in the direction of Victoria College shortly after the parade. They had been smuggled out of Hart House while the three students in charge of them were in another room. The three, Pete Miller, II UC, Ed Marzec, II UC, and Ted Schaidak, I UC, had been employed to advertise them in the parade.

"We hope the fellows enjoyed having them and if they bring them back, we'll part good friends," said Easson. He added that the Agency would be glad to donate the bombs at any future date for campus shows, but that they are needed this week for further promotion. "Whether or not they are returned," Easson said, "the students from whom they were taken will not be asked to pay for them."

Competition Celebrates Cat Week

A cat will be the prize for the best "Champus Cat" column in a competition sponsored by The Varsity. Elinor Bernstein, Managing Editor of The Varsity said "the competition is part of our own Cat Week and is open to all students. The cat will be given to the best entry and the prize-winning column will be printed in one of next week's issues."

Entries are to be in by Monday at five o'clock, and the judges will be Rich Anco and Orie Louks, the editors of The Varsity. All entries are to be signed by a pseudonym, along with the real name and phone number of the author.

The "Champus Cat" is the humorous column that appears almost daily on the editorial page of The Varsity. All entries should try to maintain the high standard that has persisted throughout "The Cat's" long literary history.

No Bacon Sun. Nite After All

Have you ever eaten breakfast in the Great Hall after a Sunday Evening Concert? In spite of the statement to that effect at the very bottom of yesterday's Hart House bulletin board, don't try it. The Hall won't be open.

The line, "Breakfast will be served afterwards in the Great Hall (50 cents)" appeared in the 9:00 p.m. slot which told of the coming Sunday Evening Concert. It's proper spot is in the place above, (9:00 a.m.) where the Holy Communion service in the chapel is posted.

Should anyone wish to follow the suggestion put forth in the bulletin they are welcome to have breakfast at the close of the concert. However, you will either have to bring the necessary materials with you or find a suitable restaurant.

Burn McCormick Effigy UBCers Back Pearson

Vancouver, Nov. 30—(CUP)—Colonel "Bertie" McCormick was burned in effigy at the University of British Columbia Sunday night.

The students were protesting against the charges of "pinkoism" leveled at the Minister of External Affairs, Lester B. Pearson by McCormick and his Chicago Tribune.

A medal and a citation reading "Order of Lenin for Hero McCormick" were placed on the effigy. The students used copies of the Tribune, considered by many as the most influential publication in the American middlewest, as fuel for their fire.

The effigy was stuffed with copies of The Tribune, the newspaper which had recently charged Pearson with "pinkoism".

Following the burning, a telegram was sent to McCormick protesting "against the efforts of McCormick to brand Canadians as tending toward Communism when they disapprove of some of the actions of men like Senators Jenner and McCarthy." The telegram also accused McCormick of doing more to further the "Russian attempt to drive a wedge between the Western allies than the Russians themselves have been able to do in the . . . cold war."

Rumors that the burning would take place had been circulating since the campus newspaper, The Ubyssey printed an article stating that UBC students might burn effigies of both McCormick and McCarthy. The rumors had intensified and were definite that the burning would be held Sunday night. As a result every copy of the Chicago Tribune was bought by the students before Saturday night.

Colonel McCormick has championed the controversial Senator McCarthy.

Liberals Win At U Of M

Winnipeg, Nov. 20—(CUP)—The Student Liberal party has captured a plurality of the seats in the University of Manitoba Student Parliament. The Liberals won 28 seats, the Progressive Conservatives 17, the CCF nine and the LPP three seats.

Approximately 52.5 percent of the eligible voters cast ballots.

3T6 Grad To Address Sociologists

A former editor of The Varsity will be coming back to the University this week, but not in the capacity of student Mr. Martin Loeb, 3T6 will be visiting the campus this week and while he is here he will address several campus functions.

Today, in the Economics Building he will address the Honour Sociology students in Room 151 at 4:00 p.m. The subject of his address will be "Sociology of the Aged".

Tonight in the Common Room at St. Hilda's, he will address the Sociology Club at 8:15, on "the Current Status of Sociology." It will be an open meeting.

Loeb graduated from Toronto in Philosophy in 1936, he then studied Anthropology in Toronto and Chicago. He taught at the School of Social Welfare at the University of California for 10 years; now he is Director of the Kansas City Study of Middle Age and Aging.

He has written several books on Sociological problems and is considered an authority on the problems of the Aged in our society.

Cape Coppers For Small Minds

(This letter is reprinted at the suggestion of the Students' Administrative Council.)

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I am trying this letter as a University of Western Ontario Band member who will suffer a financial loss if some action is not taken.

Immediately following the football game (between Toronto and Western) I was accosted in Hart House by several Varsity students, one of whom proceeded to tear the cape off my uniform from my back and flee with it. I am sure that this student thought this to be a very suitable souvenir, but if he will look at it from any point of view to keep the cape.

Each band member is held responsible for his unuform which, of course, means that I must pay for the stolen cape. As the cape has absolutely no value to its holder I am willing to pay a reward for its immediate return.

Meds, Arts Even End In 2-2 Tie

By JOHN WILSON

Staving off a determined second period rally by Jr. UC, PreMeds yesterday salvaged a 2-2 tie, leaving both clubs in first place in Group II of the Interfaculty Hockey League. PreMeds waltzed into a 2-0 lead in the early minutes of the first stanza, and then settled back while UC carried the balance of the play from there in. UC notched their first tally two minutes after the second Pre-Meds goal and another at 12:03 of the second period. Only brilliant net-minding by goalie Al Cecutti, kept the UC crew from scoring the winner in the latter part of the game.

The opening minutes saw little action around the nets, except when Agget took the puck out of the corner and unassisted put it behind goalie Folke of UC at the :55 second mark. UC kept play in the Pre-Meds end but their attack lacked finesse, and the Doctors were able to take advantage of the breaks when they came. Bull carried over the line, slapping a shot at the UC goal and Paul picked up the rebound to tally the second Pre-Meds counter. Play returned to the Meds end and after everybody else had tried, Passmore finally pushed the disc past Cecutti for the Red and White's first goal.

The second period saw UC in complete control of the puck but unable to crack the Pre-Meds defence. Paul went off at 6:45 for hooking and the Red and White ganged around the Pre-Meds goal. In this particular instance Cecutti shone, and robbed Williams and Riley on several occasions. At 12:03 UC were rewarded as Tom Riley took a pass from Williams at centre ice and, deking the Doctors' defence, beat Cecutti on a backhand shot. The game ended with UC pressing the Medsmen back against the wall in a vain effort to score again. Both teams are now tied for first place in Group II with three points each.

In other hockey action in the Arena yesterday afternoon, Forestry A smothered Architecture 8-1, while Meds' III edged SPSW 2-1. O'Connor and Moffat supplied the winning margin for Meds and Bishop accounted for Skule's lone tally. The Forestry onslaught was led by Hall and Ross with two goals each, while McBride, McMullen, Wadell and Scully scored oneapiece. Park netted the Architects' counter. The Woodsmen's victory gave them undisputed possession of first place in the first group of Division II.

Law Champs Face Trinity

The Legal Beagles from the School of Law over on St. George St. yesterday won the Division II soccer championship, whipping Knox College 2-0. Having showed as a strong team all season in their first year of Interfaculty soccer competition, they have challenged the Division I winners, Trinity College, to a game to be played on Wednesday, December 2, at 2:00 p.m. This contest will have no title significance, but should be a very interesting game. Red Andison and Giraudy were goalgetters in yesterday's final.

A volleyball group playoff, yesterday found PreMeds II B gaining a victory over the Vic IV 15-7, 5-15, 15-1, to take their group championship. They now enter the playoffs against Junior UC today.

St. Hilda's Beat Vic Take B-Ball 29-9

Inspired by the unaccustomed presence of male "cheerleaders" on their sideline, St. Hilda's Freshies whipped Vic Freshies B 29-9 in the first of last night's interfaculty matches in the women's b-ball schedule.

Cecil Phillip starred for St. Hilda's, giving them a slight 4-3 edge at the end of the first quarter. Vic trailed considerably further behind at half time after Joan Lander had tallied more for the Saints.

The general procedure continued in the last half of the badly dragging game. Joan Lander tallied early in the quarter, and was immediately backed up by two of the best set shots of the match when Trinity's Pat Arthur rushed in to up the Saints' total to 18 against 7 at three-quarter time.

The same two gals shone in the fourth to tally ten points between them. This put Vic Fr. 'B' on the tail end of a very decisive 29-9 score at the end of the game.

The second match was, if anything, less exciting than the first. St. Mike's 'B' bested a diminished Vic Freshies 'A' squad 12-8 in a close almost non-scoring battle. The Viesters were at a disadvantage in that they had only six players present and so the glas played full time.

St. Mike's Eileen Dillon tallied half of the Irish points. Ruth Drisdale and Phyirs Ostry did the shooting for Vic to end the quarter 6-4 in their opponents' favour.

Mary Forrester had a chaince to tie the score early in the next period when she had free shots on two personal fouls. Only one of the shots was true however, and this gave Kathy Hawkins an opportunity to display her talents with a beautiful side shot into the Vicsters' hoop. In a last minute surge, Phil Ostry tied up the game in perfect style to end the half 8-8.

Despite the best efforts of the short-handed Vic squad, they could do little to prevent the 12-8 victory of St. Mike's 'B'.

ART REVIEW

Royal Canadians

Closely followed by our pet beaver, Igor, we padded down to the Toronto Art Gallery for a look at the seventy-fourth annual exhibition of the Royal Canadian Academy. The Academy, as its name suggests, consists of Canadian painters, and the best ones. The present showing includes the work of 88 painters, six architects and twelve sculptors.

Counter clockwise, the exhibition begins with several galleries of paintings by James Wilson Morrice, pioneer of the Academy. His scenes are relatively cautious in style, suggestive rather than sketchy, and pleasantly unperturbed. Influenced (the program tells us) by Whistler, Gauguin, the Sienese Primitives and the Persian Miniaturists he none theless has a style distinctly his own, and vaguely "Canadian."

From the unruffled West galleries we move North into a Canadian Art rocked with every hot and cold wind that ever blew out of Europe, or anywhere. A figure, not fat enough to be emaciated, toots thinly on a flageolet. Behind him, Jack Bush's expectant abstract, "Before Spring" screams its invitation to the sun. Nearby, two dimensional seagulls contemplate gently bobbing dinghies in Sydney Watson's apparently simple "Harbour".

It is delightfully impossible to generalize about these paintings. Either they are in no rut at all, or in so many different and interesting ruts that the general effect is one of great originality and freshness. Even the landscapes in this selection have escaped formalization. The pellucid, colloidal light-patterns of L.A.C. Panton, the massive, immovable objects of Charles Comfort, and the sun-washed rocks of A. J. Casson, all are very personal and unique expressions of the feelings in natural phenomena.

There is lots of action. Doris McCarthy's wiggly, impasto "Point St. Peter" threatens to splash out of its frame at the next gust of wind. Rockets explode convincingly in Bernard McLoughlin's "Fiesta Fireworks". Fred Finley's Crees whoop around their praying Sachem on angular horses. And even the still scenes refuse to keep quiet.

This is not just an exhibition of those safe Canadians who have made the grade. A number of young, non-members share billing with the letter men, and their work shows that there is still news to be made in the R.C.A. Amateurs and unknowns have been honored by inclusion, but only those who deserve it. The current crop of young hopefuls includes William Ronald, whose audacity alone should ensure a large measure of success, and Robert Bruce Cowan, whose amazingly understanding portrait "Catharine" is cheap at $200. This should be a good time to buy it.

The eighty-eight painters, six architects and twelve sculptors are all worth going to see. No one will appreciate them all equally, but the chances against anyone finding nothing to appeal to his own specialized taste are fantastic. Only one more thing. Most of these works are for sale, so don't come without your wallet.

Peter Grant.

The Clannish Type

By TREVOR J. PHILLIPS
From The McGill Daily

I spent a miserable summer.

It was not only miserable but dangerous too.

During the past four months I had managed to gain myself the unenviable reputation of being a you-know-what.

And it's not even true.

It started in a drugstore, last April, just prior to the final exams. While I was sipping my malted, star-wise, some female became curious as to the title of the library work I had placed on the counter. Now this book happened to be for my father who delights in a good biography, especially one concerned with a political figure. This particular book, was entitled — plain and simply — "Lenin".

And so it went on.

Mind you, mere talk, mere petty gossip never fazed me, and I pray it never will. But things went just a little too far. Neighbours withdrew their children when I took the occasional strole down the street. "Contamination" was what they called it, I understood. Contamination! At this point I decided to retaliate wih no punches barred.

My plan of campaign — designed to proclaim and uphold my views as a Disciple of Democracy—were straight-forward: I took to reading Pogo in public, Superman in Steinberg's, and Mandrake the Magician in Morgan's. As a final and sincere gesture of my good faith—and political innocence—I discarded the Jack that flies from my bedroom window and substituted the Maple Leaf and Fleur de Lis.

These tactics appeared to have done the trick, for I was not molested for several weeks. Children were even allowed to approach me and say "Hi." But the relapse was short-lived. One evening I was listening to a piece of music by Prokofiev—purely by coincidence, I assure you—when some hoodlum threw a stone through the window,

Club Loses Executives

Montreal, Nov. 24—(CUP)—The president of the Sir G. Williams Evening Undergraduate Society was ousted from his position by a vote of no confidence. It was reported that the EUS publicity chairman, secretary and vice-president will resign in protest.

If the resignations go through there will be a lack of a quorum and the society will not be able to function constitutionally until replacements are re-elected.

The ex-president was charged with neglect of his duties.

To See The Queen

—Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

Are We Being Jobbed?

We often wonder how much human beings must tamper with the natural development of society. It has been said that man would forget the differences between the races on earth if he had a model who would forget them. The perfect example would of course be Royalty.

But what example do they set? The royal entourage, months in advance, plans racial discrimination almost more today than they would have a century ago. When a party of Bermuda society includes no colored people whatsoever, even though the population might be sixty percent colored, the only result is that white people in general start thinking discrimination is the thing to do.

Of course, the royal tour does not ignore the colored races. They make them a special occasion. In South Africa special receptions were held for the colored society. But is this the answer? Obviously the royal family does not care when they meet their subjects, as long as they meet all of them. It just seems that Royalty will not be permitted to make up its mind for itself.

Though discrimination may be the worst sin being committed, the same senseless regimentation of the royal tour applies to practically any function the public would look forward to. Children in Jamaica are restrained from cheering. Surely the officials must be sadists. How far must this take us from reality? History has led us to believe steps like this are a sure fire indication of untempered anarchy.

The Varsity does not say that such regimentation as is evidencing itself in the present tour is, unquestionably, the idea of the officials behind the scene. Some of the unusual features of the tours may be the personal request of the Royal Family. We hope not, and will give them the benefit of the doubt.

University of Toronto students of third and fourth years will remember the Royal visit to our Toronto campus. Protective measures were adequate to say the least. Some of these were almost ritualistic, while others seemed almost necessary. But in no way was there any attempt at suppression of natural feelings of the students. This is all the more reason why students here should follow the present tour and wonder wheather the Commonwealth is getting a value on the tour or, as you might put it, are they being 'jobbed'.

What Do You Know, Joe?

Just what does "Joe Public" know?

If the Gallup Poll is any indication he doesn't know very much when it comes to important political questions. A weekend poll shows that only about 13 per cent of the Canadian public know anything very accurate about a controversial United States Senator.

An astounding 35 per cent have not even heard of him. The senator in question must have been in the papers at least every day for the last fifteen days, yet there are over one in three Canadians who have never heard of him.

By the same token we wonder just what per cent of Canadians do know who won the Grey Cup game. We suggest it is far less than 35 per cent.

Asked if they had heard of the US Senator, 65 per cent said yes. Then they were asked in what connection they had heard of him. The answers, though partly true, were very humorous.

"In connection with his marriage"; "saw him on TV"; "he's anti-British"; "political troublemaker"; "has something to do with Communism"; "an American politician"; "connected with Un-American Activities Committee". Only ten per cent were of the last opinion. But 22 per cent of the 65 that had heard of him did not know in what connection at all.

Those who did know of the Senator split evenly on whether to approve or disapprove of him. But that is not the point. Regardless of whether they were for or against him, a much greater percentage of Canadians should have known about him. He has been front-page news.

We believe it is dangerous not to know and understand communism and anti-communism. An informed public is the best safeguard against people who might use either for their own political ends. And an informed public must read the news as well as the comics or the sports page.

Until such spirit "ambitions" the public, the Gallup pollsters will continue to ask:

"What do you know, Joe?"

And Mr. Public will continue to answer: "I don't know nuttin'."

Our Readers Write:

Straight To It

The Editor,
The Varsity:

H. L. Wipprecht — you will not have to ignore this letter, since I will come straight to the point.

The deceit with which you wrote your letter can no longer go unanswered. How dare you, Wipprecht, condemn the Catholic Church because of the presupposedly wrong actions of one member of it re: Val D'Or, Quebec. Do you claim to know the underlying reasons for his actions? How, then, can you condemn the man or even less the Religion without knowing and studying the full facts of the case? You should be ashamed of youself for so wickedly twisting the facts.

It seems, Wipprecht, that having no facts backing up your spiteful letter you resort to distortions of the truth. If you had carefully read the report of the so-called persecution of Protestants in Colombia, you would have discovered that the Pastoral Letter from the Roman Catholic Bishop denounced those who had caused any harm to come to the Protestant minorities. Read, Wipprecht, before you slander innocent people.

As for your sarcastic inferences concerning the action of the Church with regard to the freedom of worship in Catholic countries, you should realize that the policy of the Catholic Church does not vary from country to country, except in the depraved minds of those who make such arrogant and unfounded attacks on an institution about which they know little.

The arbitrary and illogical conclusions which you draw from quotations out of context and present as "evidence", by which you seek to poison the minds of those who read your letters against the Church, will not succeed in their malicious purpose. "You can't fool all of the people all of the time."

Bullying

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It would be utterly useless to start a religious controversy over Mr. Wipprecht's continual puerile bullying. As a student from the "other Catholic college" I disapprove of any intolerance, whether it be exhibited by a Catholic or a non-Catholic group.

Let me, however, cite one little example: The Irish people have undergone centuries of persecution for the practice of their faith. Yet the citizens of the predominantly Catholic Republic of Eire elected one of their Protestant brethren, Douglas Hyde (1938-1945), to the presidency. (Would the corresponding ever happen in the six Protestant counties of North Ireland?)

The example of Eire certainly proves that the Catholic faith and religious intolerance do not necessarily go in pairs.

More Thinking Needed

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I have gathered from Mr. Wipprecht's second letter to The Varsity that he has done a little observing and thinking before writing. This was obviously not the case with his first letter, and, although his observation and thught are very limited in the second, they deserve some reply.

Mr. Wipprecht seems to think that the Catholic Church is intolerant. That depends on what conception one has of freedom of the mind. Does Mr. Wipprecht think that liberty for the mind consists in the ability to entertain any view whatsoever, however wrong it may be, or does he think it consists in being unhindered by error in its pursuit of truth?

Anyone may think two plus two makes five. But that is not freedom of thought, that is stupidity. Naturally Mr. Wipprecht will think the church intolerant if he holds liberty as the ability to think whatever one pleases. However, the Church, in its defense of man's right to pursue truth, is intolerant only of error, not of persons in error.

Mr. Wipprecht should keep in mind that while the Catholic Church firmly holds that she guards the deposit of faith entrusted to her by Christ himself, no one knows greater respect than she does for the conscience of the individual.

As we read in "Radio Replies" p. 213: "If a man does not know the true religion and is erroneously convinced that it is right to be a member of any non-Catholic Church, then Catholic moral theology so respects his conscience that it will not allow him to be received into the Church as long as he has this conviction." St. Thomas Aquinas also says that if a man's reason judged that it is evil to have faith in Christ, then it would be sinful for the man to believe.

I regret that Mr. Wipprecht is laboring under difficulties regarding the Catholic position and invite him to enquire more closely into the question considered in this letter.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In support of my "Male Suffragette" article, November 26th in The Varsity:

Perhaps this shrewd member of Hart House has not been in the cavernous depths of the Hart House basement recently, but this frequenter of the "hallowed Halls" has seen, on repeated occasions members of the female fraternity in the tuck shop, unescorted. This prompted my letter referred to in yesterday's Varsity. I think it unfair that this fair-haired casanova should associate my name with Hart House dances in a derogatory sense, for my only complaint in that respect is that there are so few dances.

Incidentally, this sophomore seems to agree with me in that women should not be invited into the House unescorted, but are more than welcome when escorted by a member of the House.

Literally stewing in his own juice is Colonel McCormick of Chicago Tribune fame, or an effigy of the same. By stewing in his own juice we mean that the effigy is stuffed with copies of the Tribune, of which the colonel is publisher. Ardent McCormick-haters of the University of British Columbia spent last Saturday night gleefully burning the famous American rabble-rouser, while chanting praises of Victoria College's Mike Pearson. A heavy rainfall failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the 300 students taking part in the demonstration; also a plentiful supply of gasoline was needed to keep the colonel from passing out. The story of the burning appears on page three of this issue.

Football Attendance Lower Due to Graduates, Weather

By CAROL HOFFMAN

Attendance at Varsity football games went down this year. About 25,000 less people watched the home games, according to the figures of the Athletic office. The official total attendance at the games this year (excluding the play-offs) was 51,226.

"The number of students attending the games has not greatly changed," said Mr. J. P. Loosemore, financial secretary of the University of Toronto Athletic Association. "The decline is among the graduates who buy season's tickets."

Several reasons were suggested by Loosemore for the decline. Bad weather kept an approximate 5,000 away from the Western game. (You may remember it snowed that day.) "However the play-off attracted a surprisingly small number," Loosemore said, "and the weather was good." In fact, less people attended the play-o-ff than the Queen's or McMaster game, or the Western exhibition game.

"Television has perhaps had some effect on attendance at the games," said Loosemore. Only the games played at the University of Toronto were on the spot this year. However the subject of the television of inter-collegiate games is to be discussed by all the colleges.

The inclusion of a fifth team means an unbalanced schedule. The students will continue to go the the games, but the general public may not appreciate this, said Loosemore. This year we lost the McGill game; next year we will lose the Western game.

Professional football has had some effect on attendance figures. Prices for the professional games have gone up. As a result, people attend only some of the games at Varsity Stadium, and the Varsity games are the ones sometimes left out. "The professional league puts on a wonderful show of a game," said Loosemore. "It's popular and we can't do much about it." However he also added that the inter-collegiate league provided a very good show. "I don't think college football games will ever lose their popularity," he said.

MacDonald Claims CCF Logical Opposition To Liberals, Conservatives

Donald C. MacDonald, the new leader of the Ontario CCF made his first public address, yesterday in Vic Alumni Hall. MacDonald devoted his talk to a review of possibilities of the CCF gaining power in Ontario in the next few years.

He gave a brief outline of the rise of the CCF in Ontario, and especially the fluctuations that it has suffered at the hands of the tributed to the immaturity of the Ontario electorate, then he at- party. The spectacular gains of the CCF in 1943, he attributed to as people were still dissatisfied with the government.

MacDonald said that it takes at least two generations to build a democratic socialist movement. He also pointed out that there were more constituencies in Ontario than in all the Western Provinces put together, and also that Ontario is as large in area as the British Isles and Scandinavia put togehter. The rise of the Socialist movements in Britain, Scandinavia, Australia, New Zealand, Western Europe, all took considerable time, and their history is similar to the rise in importance of the CCF in Canada, he said.

With the boom period that has followed the last war, said MacDonald, there has come a peculiar period of political lethargy, so it has been very difficult for the CCF to make any progress in Canadian politics. "But," said MacDonald, "the Canadian Government has betrayed the Canadian farmers, costs have increased by 85 percent, whereas income has increased by only 34 percent. Depression seems inevitable," he said, "in agriculture, and with another election, the policy of the CCF may be accepted by the Canadian people."

He said that we cannot rebuild with two parties that are almost our two party system in Ontario exactly the same. The CCF is the logical party of oppose the parties of the right, he said. "In Ontario we need an effective opposition, that provides an alternative to the government in power, a party that is able to meet the needs of the people; one that will do it better than any in the past."

HH Recital Wednesday

Hart House again opens its doors to women (and males) this afternoon for the Wednesday five o'clock Recital, this week featuring the Conservatory of Music Chamber Ensemble and the current Art Gallery show.

The painting of Gustav Weisman are hanging this week in the Hart House Art Gallery. It is open to women from 4:00. to 6:00 p.m. today, during which time Mr. Weisman will give an art talk in the Gallery.

The members of the Conservatory Ensemble are Dale Childs, Ronald Lawrie, cello; and Norman Gick, clarinet.

Members of the female sex may come escorted by male Hart House members or with "gal-friends". All members of the University community are welcome.

In addition, the Art Gallery will be open to all members, beginning tomorrow, at 10:00 a.m., instead of the previous 11:30 a.m. opening.

Groups On Bible Discuss Creation

Every week the SCM holds discussion and Bible study groups. One of these, The Drama of Creation, deals with what the Christian faith has to say about such universal problems as the purpose behind the creation of the universe and man and whether God forces man to co-operate with him or whether man really does have a free will.

At the last meeting the topic of discussion was "God's purpose in entering the world as a man, Jesus Christ, and what was accomplished for man in the life, death, and resurrection of Christ." Many diverse opinions were brought forth and new light was cast on the subject.

The members of the group are of various faiths but they have the common desire to seek the truth of the Christian religion. Anyone would be welcome at this study group. It is held on Wednesdays at 4:15 in the SCM House at 143 Bloor Street West.

Lutherans' Conference Successful

Only sincere study qualifies one to accept or condemn in any field, decided the Lutheran Student Conference at Waterloo College over the week-end. Students from McGill, Queen's, UC, Western, McMaster, and Waterloo College met for the Annual Conference of the Lutheran Student Association of Eastern Canada.

The Seminar Leader, the Rev. Herb, counsellor to students at Columbia University, said that the student has a responsibility to his God, his community, and school. To fulfill his office as a student his studies must be broad: they should not stop at one subject but should include religious literature. There is too much condemnation of religion as an unknown.

Approximately 50 students attended the four study-sessions, the Banquet, the Industrial Tour, and the Church Service at St. Peter's Church, Kitchener, Ont.

Two Toronto students were elected to office: Miss H. Behling I UC, vice-Pres., and R. Langen, Grad. Studies, Regional Advisor. Lillian Summerfeldt of Western was chosen President.

On Saturday night the banquet speaker, Ira Needles, Pres. the Dominion Rubber Company, said that people are not aware of the unique and necessary services rendered humanity by big business. Big business requires a sacrificial devotion by its managers: it is not the ogre it is often made out to be.

Next year's conference will be held at Toronto University.

Real Gone Cathedral

This Is Gothic?

Basil Spence, celebrated British architect held a packed auditorium spellbound for more than an hour yesterday as he told the story behind the design for the new Coventry cathedral.

100 years have passed since a traditional cathedral, one which displays faith in its times and is not an unsure copy of a previous style, has been built in England. This is so much the case that a modern piece of ecclesiastical architecture cannot help but raise eyebrows.

Of the old cathedral only the hollow shell and the high spire remain. However, it retains its beauty to such an extent that Spence felt it should remain and become an integral part of the new building. He said that he was profoundly influenced in his new design by the style of Durham cathedral, the use of glass by Gloucester, the freeness of Pisa and the concentration on the interior as seen at Sant' Apollinare in Classe.

The design has been described as Gothic carried to its logical conclusion. It represents what the earlier Gothic church builders were struggling toward but due to lack of modern methods and materials, never attained. It is extremely light, profoundly modern and unorthodox and yet designed so that one goes in as a visitor and comes out as a worshipper. An intricate system of vaulting carries the weight of the two-inch-thick vault through pillars that are 62 feet high and taper from eighteen inches in width at the top to ten inches at the bottom. The side walls are zig-zag shape with windows on the zig so that they are visible from the East end not from the West. The windows are stained glass in pastel colours which flood the chancel with light. The west end is made entirely of glass from floor to ceiling and on the east end, behind the altar, is a tapestry measuring 80 feet by 50.

The whole aspect is one of beauty. From a covered porch, 80 feet high, resting on delicate columns the visitor enters the cathedral through doors in the glass facade. On the left he sees the inter-denominational "Chapel of Unity", a circular, almost separate, building. On the right, the font, with its towering, skeletonic font cover. Down the nave, between the needle-like columns, shine rays of coloured light falling on the intricate mosaic pattern of the floor. At the far end is the altar, bathed in yellow light, and behind it, the immense expanse of the tapestry.

Mr. Spence won the contest for the best design of the new Cathedral and is touring Canada with the model, plans and lantern slides.

How many Canadians work for Inco?

"Well, in the city of Sudbury there are upwards of 50,000 people, and 20,000 more in the mining communities around Sudbury. A large proportion of them work for Inco or have jobs that wouldn't exist if it weren't for the nickel mines and plants. Many more work at the great nickel refinery at Port Colborne, Ontario."

"It must cost a lot for wages?"

"Yes, dear, in 1952 the International Nickel Company paid over $65,000,000 in wages and salaries to Canadian workers. And of course thousands more people earned a living producing the food, clothing, furniture and other things bought by nickel employees, and the machinery, equipment, lumber and power used in the nickel mines and plants. So Inco really helps to create employment all over Canada."

"The Romance of Nickel" a 72 page book fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

Freud would probably have something very interesting to say about this. According to some of the males on the campus, such a situation would be seventh heaven, however, if the look on the young thing's face is any indication, the condition would not persist very long.

UBC Students Support Burning Of McCormick

Vancouver, Nov. 30 — (CUP) — University of British Columbia students have expressed overwhelming support of the Sunday night effigy burning of Colonel Robert J. McCormick, editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune.

A Ubyssey poll drew comments from dozens of students on the campus Monday morning while workmen hauled away the charred remains of the gallows from the site of the effigy burning.

UBC student Council President, Ivan Feltman said, there would probably b no official action by the Student Council "unless university property "as involved"."

Asked for further comment Student Council President Feltham grinned and said, "too bad they didn't have the real goods."

Other students expressed a wide range of opinion, nearly all strongly supporting the action. UBC President, Dr. N. A. M. Madkenzie declined comment in an interview after the affair. "I would prefer to make no comment on the matter. Anything I might say would only disturb feeling or endanger the feeling between our respective countries."

Clippings from daily newspapers which carried pictures and stories of the effigy burning brought the following comment from students.

Ann Roger, III Arts, "It was a rainy night and I am glad to see so many turned out. Canadian politics have been pretty dull."

Monte McKay, III Applied Science, "Witch Hunting has got to stay out of Canada. Who's next?"

Bill Soloway, II Law, "The burning was an unnecessary invasion of American politics. Let's stay out of their dirty politics."

Ray Logie II Arts, "This is not a very constructive criticism of McCarthy and McCormick, but the fact that 300 people were there indicates the terrific feeling on the campus."

Mike Ames, II Arts, "Too bad he didn't burn longer."

Sandy Manson, II Arts, "I didn't want to be one of the sheep so I stayed home and stuck pins in dolls."

Owen Nelmes, IV Pharmacy, "That will teach McCormack to smear Pearson."

Allan Goldsmith, III Law, "I am glad to see that students, as well as other people in the country, are backing the decision of the Canadian Government to withold gouzenko."

American Consul-General in Vancouver, Robert Smythe had this to say, "I have no comment on anything, except possibly the world series in October."

Comments were heard from Eric Nicol, Vancouver Province columnist, who wrote an article recently supporting university freedom and suggesting burning of McCormack. Nicol, a graduate of UBS, said, "It was worthwhile and harmless since it's the first time I've ever succeeded in writing flammable material. I wasted the evening playing chess and got there too late to see the fun."

"Hang him! Burn him!," students yelled as McCormick's effigy was dragged through the crowd, and hoisted onto the gallows. The effigy was stuffed with copies of the Chicago Tribune, and it held a copy ot the Tribune in its hand. It was set afire by a torch made of another rolled-up Chicago Tribune. The Order of Lenin for Hero McCormick was pinned on the effigy's chest.

The Universe Is Full Of Blintz, Apfelstrudel Says Rimsky Korsakov

The Varsity is offering a free course in Journalism for anybody interested in newspaper writing. The course will consist of writing news stores, reporting on news events, meetings, debates, and speeches.

This provides an opportunity for students to become acquainted with the numerous activities taking place on the campus, and becoming acquainted with some of the important people on the campus.

Other than reporting lectures and the like, the course will consist of learning to write, in lucid form, some of the scintillating blurbs you see every day in The Varsity. This is especially designed for anyone in the Remedial English Course.

The Varsity is also offering a course in Make-Up. This consists of putting the paper together each night, duties consisting of the delightful job of writing headlines, plus a host of other equally stimulating jobs.

For anybody taken with the job of helping The Varsity, we would suggest you come down to The Varsity Office in the basement of the SAC Building any time during the day and speak to any one that looks responsible, or otherwise.

IRC Sees All, Hears All, Visits International House On New York Weekend

If you were at the United Nations, would you rather see the General Assembly, the committee on South Africa, forced labor, or trusteeship? Last weekend members of the International Relations Club (IRC) attended all of these. There were 43 of them, guests of the Canadian delegation, seeing the UN at work

While the IRC was there the General Assembly discussed a resolution paving the way for amendment of the UN charter. The US delegate, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr, spoke in favor of the resolution, while the Russian delegate, Andrei Vishinsky, and the Polish delegate said what was needed was not revision, but strict adherence to the principles of the present charter.

Canadian Ambassador to the UN, D. M. Johnson, spoke to the group on the problems which have been discussed at the UN at this session. He mentioned racial strife in South Africa, the Palestine dispute, Tunisia and Morocco. He said that all the debates except that on Palestine were mainly on the competence of the UN. The big colonial powers such as Britain and France, on the other hand, claimed that the problems were internal matters of the countries involved, and did not concern the UN

On Sunday afternoon the IRC was invited to tea at the Columbia International House. Graduate students from all over the world studying in New York live here. It has similar facilities to Hart House. There is a library, music room, rooms for meetings and dances, and a cafeteria.

HH Exhibit Art Works Due Dec. 7

Monday is the deadline for undergraduate artists who wish to have their works of art show in the Hart House Art Gallery. Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, announced last night.

The annual exhibiton of art . . . water-colors, oils, drawings, and black and white . . . is open to all undergraduate members of Hart House. Entries will be hung in the Art Gallery from Monday, Dec. 7 to the 21st of December.

"We would like to encourage all potential artists to enter their work of art in the art show," Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden, said last night. Members are asked to submit their work to the Undergraduate Activities Office, Hart House, by next Monday.

From the pictures submitted by undergrads to the show, some entries for the Inter-University Canadian Art Show in Ontario and Quebec will be chosen.

McCarthyism Canada Style Is LP Topic

McCarthyism has been a topic of much debate and discussion on the Toronto campus this year. The Labor Progressive Club agrees with this sentiment but feels that in the discussion the various expressions of McCarthyism in Canada have been either ignored or rarely mentioned.

The LPP believes that it is of great importance for the students to know the degree of penetration of McCarthyism in Canada. Norman Freed, former Toronto alderman, therefore will speak on "The Threat of McCarthyism to Canada". He will speak today, room 4 at 1:00 p.m.

Venegas Speaks Tonight Club Hears Bilingual Talk

The Consul-General of Colombia, Dr. Alberto Venegas, will speak this evening to the University of Toronto Spanish Club. The first meeting of the club for this year will be held in the Women's Union Theatre at 8:15 p.m. Dr. Venegas will speak to the club in English and Spanish, on the subject of Colombia, and perhaps on the celebration of Christmas in South America.

Dr. Venegas, was born and raised in Colombia. In 1943, he received his doctor's degree from Javeriana University (located in Bogota, capital of Colombia). He was a member of the Colombian diplomatic corps in New Orleans, until last year when he was appointed Consul-General in Toronto.

A short film on Colombia will be shown by Dr. Venegas. After this there will be a Spanish sing-song and a social half-hour. Refreshments will be served. Three more meetings of the club will be held in the New Year, as well as the regular Thursday afternoon informal gatherings.

VIRGINIA WOOLF

A Writer's Diary

A WRITER'S DIARY, by Virginia Woolf, ed. Leonard Woolf, Clarke Irwin, $3.75.

To Virginia Woolf a diary was not only a confidante of her impressions and feelings but also an exercise-book for practising the art of writing. From the 26 volumes of diary written from the year 1915 to 1941 her husband, Leonard Woolf, has selected all the passages relating to her own writing, including as well some of these stylistic exercises and the very illuminating critical comments on books she was reading.

In the prefatory remarks Leonard Woolf writes that this book "give an unusual psychological picture of artistic production from within". The relief at the completion of a book, the dreadful "season of depression" which followed, the sense of failure expressed so often in these pages, and the agonizing suspense while waiting for the first review recur in regular sequence throughout the diary. Hence, although a book of this type may sometimes by unorganized, spasmodic, and without an aesthetic unity, the diary of Virginia Woolf has a definite rhythmical pattern which ebbs and flows with the writing of each book.

A charming and imaginative touch is lent to the work by her continual references throughout the diary to the old Virginia Woolf of 1940 "who will be a woman who can see, old V., everything—more than I can, I think." She loved to think of herself at 50 sitting down to "build her memoirs out of these books" and envied this elderly lady the task she was preparing for her.

One of the chief interests of this diary is the pen sketches of famous contemporaries and the criticisms offered of their works. Her descriptions of having tea with the "little puffy-cheeked cheerful old man", Thomas Hardy, the interview with Arnold Bennett, and the encounter with G. B. Shaw with his "dwindled shanks and white beard" on their way to the Serpentine are portrayed with amazing realism and vividness. Names of close friends of the Woolfs such as Lord Keynes, Roger Fry, and Lytton Strachey occur frequently in her diaries. Her impressions of Katherine Mansfield's stories, James Joyce's Ulysseas and classics such as War and Peace, Paradise Lost and David Copperfield make this book a fascinating source of contemporary criticism.

The danger in a diary is that it tends to give a casual reader a one-sided and hence entirely wrong impression of the writer. Virginia Woolf realised the fact and wrote, "I only record the dumps and the dismals." In these pages we glean probably a completely exaggerated picture of her extreme sensitivity to praise and criticism. She appears to be at the mercy of all her literary reviewers who bat her back and forth between them like a tired tennis-ball. Being interested in the strangeness of her death I noticed the continual references to suicide, the interest she had in the approach of old age, and her morbid reflections on death, although in her high moments of happiness she was infected with a spiritual ecstacy and feverish passion for life.

In the pages of Virginia Woolf's diary are the secrets of the writer's craft. Her plans for new novels such as the study of the four dimensions in human life, and the combination of dialogue, poetry and prose in the same book though quite distinct provide an engrossing study.

Virginia Woolf considered that her diary greatly helped her style and "loosened the ligatures". Certainly the writing is, on the whole, very fluent and lucid, although of necessity it occasionally lapses into "diary shorthand". Although as time went on, reviews seemed to Virginia Woolf "more and more frivolous", the pleasure of reading her diary and appraising such a remarkable work impresses this reviewer as being far from an empty pastime but rather a rich and inspiring experience.

UNREST IN LAOS

A Single Pilgrim

A SINGLE PILGRIM by Norman Lewis, Clarke Irwin $2.50.

Norman Lewis's last two books A Dragon Apparent and Golden Earth have both been travel books. His new novel, A Single Pilgrim, seems more like a travel book than anything else, and it is very interesting as such.

The setting is the ancient kingdom of Laos, in a city which has become part of Siam. The descriptions of this city, Luang Nakon, and its inhabitants make up the largest and most memorable part of the book. Against this is set the rather dull and inconspicuous story of John Crane, the manager of a timber company, who is the single pilgrim of the title.

For the first part of the book, as the growing signs of nationalist feeling in Luang Nakon seem to be working up to a climax, I kept expecting something violent to happen. But finally I became resigned to the book's being the story of what happens within John Crane's mind. The only trouble seems to be that nothing very much happens there. These two themes, the situation in Luang Nakon and Crane's character, do not seem to have much bearing on each other, and so the reader is often left puzzled as to just where the book is going.

John Crane has made his own world that he is satisfied with in Luang Nakon, in a somewhat mystic way that is not quite clear, at least to me, which is disturbe first when he is told that his company will have to leave labos in two years because the timer industry will be nationalized. He refuses an offer to stay which he feels is tempting but unscrupulous, and finally, because his wife comes and disrupts his way of life, he goes to French Laos on business, and is killed by the Viet Minh.

The progress of the nationalist discontent is shown as it flares up here and there. There is the native doctor who was blackballed by the English club for chaeting at golf; he has acquired a new dignity since he has become a communist. There is the policeman who is blown up by the hand-grenade at the New Year's celebrations; there is the timber thief who is put in the boxing ring with a professional, a traditional punishment. There is Richards, a man who is not quite made of the stuff the company wants, with his dreadful inferiority complex; he finally goes to join the communist guerrillas with his Laotian mistress when he is fired for writing a description of the situation in Laos.

The vivid natural description is perhaps the most impressive part to the branches: hordes of donkeys come out on the lawns; you have to pick your way through them to go inside, and they make a soft squish as you throw them out the door. The cranes bounce down to the branches; hordes of onkeys call; the rice paddies are green with the bright animal green of peacocks, not the green of vegetation.

Seen as a description of a city in Laos becoming westernized in a way, this book is pleasant reading. As the story of an Englishman in the East, it calls to mind other sharper and more memorable stories—personally I prefer Somerset Maugham.

SOFT RAINBOW HUES

Cowboy On A Wooden Horse

by Yuri Suhl, The MacMillan Co. $3.75.

Cowboy On A Wooden Horse by Yuri Suhl is an example of light fiction, with no purpose but to amuse. It is a bubble: here, then not here. It should be appreciated criticized for its unsubstantiality.

Yuri Suhl has written a charmingly humorous narrative of an 18-year-old Jewish immigrant in America, and his various relationships with people, each on a slightly different plane, and each important in its own way: His family, Beatrice, his steady girlfriend, and Sam, his respected fellow upholsterer.

Problems of love and problems of union organization enter his life, but all are solved satisfactorily. These quandaries are probed not for the whys and wherefores, but as vehicles of warm humour in a narrative concerning the life of Sol Kenner.

It is almost impossible to get seriously involved in the story, for each character seems to treat all the other characters in an almost disinterested way.

In spite of the lightness of touch, there may be a basic theme in the story—a quote from the sages by Mr. Kenner, "A good name is better than riches". And indeed, all those involved seem to be rich in happiness although poor in material wealth. The only noticeably unhappy creature is Moish, a snivelling obsequious upholsterer on the side of his monied boss in the strike situation.

The author is extraordinary in possessing the ability to depict ordinary human beings in ordinary situations and still make his story interesting; perhaps because the author sees American customs thourgh the eyes of a newcomer they become revivified.

The main reason for the book's success is it charming humour. Such character-building scenes as the one in which Sol has tea with Beatrice and her mother at their house are made humorous by Sollie's mental asides to the conversation of the pathetically comic figure which is his future mother-in-law. She must have her glass of tea, which is a fine excuse to rest her tired feet.

"Sitting down just for the sake of sitting down was inconceivable to her."

The Yiddish-American dialect makes the story even more charming.

Plot, as such, does not exist n Cowboy On A Wooden Horse. The book consists of a fragment frm the life of Sol Kenner from the moment he finds that he is going steady, to the event of his engagement. The story merely ambles from one incident to another within this framework in a loosely strung fashion. Sol gains more experience in living during the time period, but does not change, and his relationships with the people in his life remain about the same. The story resembles a few chapters torn from an autobiography.

Elizabeth Beattie.

SELF-REVELATION

Stars Over China

Five Stars Over China, by Mary Endicott, published by the author, $2.00.

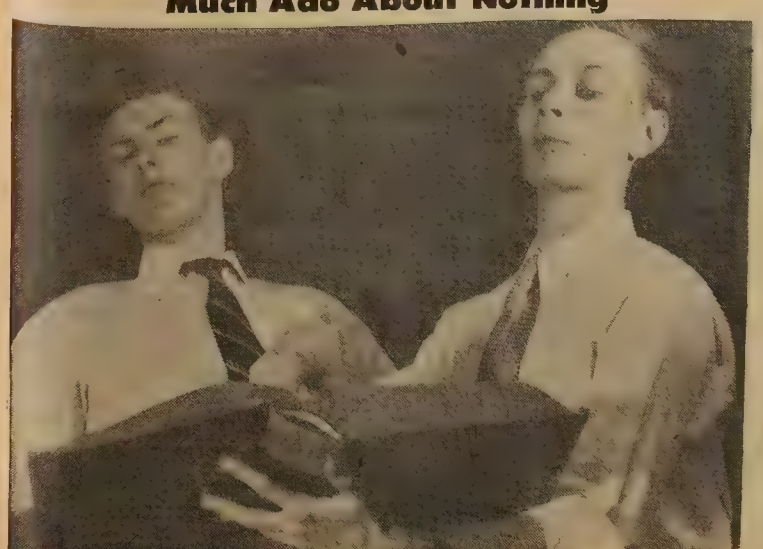
Five Stars Over China by Mary Austin Endicott, wife of Dr. James Endicott, is, queerly enough, subtitled The Story of Our Return to New China. This, let prospective buyers be informed, by no means adequately describes the contents of the book.

Large sections of the book, it is true, do describe what the Endicotts saw and heard and were told (esecially the latter) during a lengthy visit to China during the winter of 1952. But by far the most interesting portions of this self-revelation of a "Christian progressive" are those others which betray every degree of Communist influence from mere gullibility to sheer fatuousness.

It is true that Mrs. Endicott is not a trained journalist—as the singular verbs trailing plural subjects and the numerous dangling pronouns soon make you aware. People like Theodore White or Edgar Snow (from whose Red Star Over China the title, descriptive of the new Chinese flag, has been adapted) would probably have done a smoother job, and have concealed their sources with more skill.

Yet the result is quite a revelation. Prominent among the choicer bits are those sections which sound like literal transcripts of Radio Moscow transmissions—such as the detailed report of steps taken by the Health authorities to check the spread of epidemics caused by "insects, rodents and articles dropped from American planes." In this same category belongs the explanation that a pair of beggars seen in Shanghai were probably disguised landlords, trying to escape the day of reckoning.

A prime example of writing from government hand-outs occurs in the story about the wealthy Liu brothers, in the chapter entitled The Way Ahead for Capitalists, where the sorry tale is concluded with the revelation that the brothers are now, for the first time, "doing honest labour—in prison."



It is in the same chapter that we meet one of the most unforgettable characters in all fiction, the "enlightened capitalist," who, while directing affairs in his publishing house (in which government money is invested) looks forward eagerly to his replacement "when all productive enterprise becomes socialist." This ability to exhibit character is given full play in the book—perhaps the best example being the young British missionary who, during the process of self-criticism, "was astonished to have brought to light certain anti-social tendencies carried over from the imperialistic influence of his youth."

Among other things that gritted in the book were the use of Liberation, Volunteers (Korea), The Great Injustice and other such terms ad nauseam, and the assurance that, "We have not heard of any person in China who has been persecuted by the Communists today because of his Christian principles." And among the evidences of lack of revision that disturbed me was the constant repetition of a few cherished stories—such as the one about the 3,000,000 conscripts in the Kuomintang army who died of starvation because their officers sold their rations on the black market. And let me add that my goose-flesh was there for all to see when I read about the Thought Reform movement and the "purification" of Chinese literature (Big Brother, are you listening?).

Yet it must be admitted that the book has a talking-point—the tremendous improvement in the standards of living, the rates of literacy, and the distribution of sanitary and medical facilities in the "People's Republic of China" since 1949. When divested of the tinted verbiage which surrounds them in every case, the facts on these and similar topics make interesting reading and will certainly repay a study of the book by any who are sufficiently interested in current affairs to buy it.

Harvey Kerpneck.

Much Ado About Nothing

Dogberry, a pompous constable, and Verges, his decrepit partner, engage in a bit of Shakespearean jiggery-pokery in "Much Ado About Nothing," appearing at Hart House, December 8-12. The play is put on by Trinity and Victoria Colleges, and is directed by Herbert Whittaker.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

Fall has left us. I first began to suspect that autumn was going two weeks ago, when the Yates Cup came looking for a winter resting place, and after Saturday's game, the last of the year, I know for sure that fall is past. Varsity Stadium has suddenly become a big and awfully dull place. It's like a big mausoleum in the centre of our so lively University, standing empty and locked, useless, just taking up space. Interest has shifted to areas about it. To the east the Hockey Blues are flying over the ice of Varsity Arena, while to the south, in the lower gym of Hart House, Varsity's basketball Blues are giving the hoops a real workout.

The Hockey Blues opened their season against the Montreal Carabins last Friday night with a 7-5 loss. But don't let's go betting against our men, or count them out. Jack Kennedy has produced a club that showed great power against the defending champs from Montreal, and with a few breaks, or a lesser man than Lachance tending the Carabin nets, Varsity might easily have won. It was the Blues' misfortune however that Lachance was in the nets, and try as they did the Varsitys couldn't get past him often enough. Some satisfaction for Varsity is in the thought that there were no better men on the ice than Blues Red Stephen and Lou Appleby.

Looking At The Stars

. . . . is no way to cross an intersection. Also it's no way to play football, but for sportswriters it's natural behaviour. Every year these boys go on a stargazing jag, usually at the end of a season, and pick a team which they declare a unit of All-Stars. The "Dream-Team" is one squad that seldom gathers on a gridiron or is put to the test of actual play. So the writers are pretty safe in their selecting, as no one is ever going to prove them wrong. There is no league in the country whose All-Stars are harder to pick than the Intramural League, still the Varsity Stargazers have done a fine job of selection for the Interfaculty dream team.

Our staff neglected one very important part of the All-Star ritual — they picked no Coach of the Year. That may have been their diplomatic instinct showing through as they might have had to snub their own coaches. Still the coaches deserve mention. They trained strong teams and formed a good League. While it is true that Skule had almost a runaway, with the rest of the pack far behind, the teams were really much closer than the scores show. In the Skule-Forestry match, for example, the Engineers dominated the scoring as they pushed every break for points but on the day's play the two squads were nearly even. When Vic and St. Mike's met in the other half of that playoff series it was the same story all over again. Vic led 9-5 going into the final quarter, but before the quarter ended darkness came on and the Irish were able to capitalize on it by scoring 22 points in the final minutes. It wasn't a matter of the better team winning but of the breaks going the way of that squad while ignoring their opponents completely. Lest the St. Mike's players feel that we are making light of their hard-earned victory, we should make it clear that we feel they were a good club.

Small Stuff

. . . . Intramural Hockey is under way up at the Arena and is a daily proposition for anyone interested in the rink sport. There is no admission charge and the hockey it something to watch. Don't sneer at the quality of play there. Remember that in last year's League there were players like Don Rope and Lou Appleby.

. . . . George Stulac must be really concentrating on basketball this year — he's even shooting in practice. Stulac was the only Blue of the '53 crew that wasn't eager to throw the ball up at the hoop, and by some coincidence he had the best average of the lot. Hesh Rotman is another Blue who's coming along fast and should be good this year. With the Seconds in '53, Rotman is a tall laddie who moves very well around the basket. . . . Who knows? Maybe Varsity can regain lost prestige on the hoop court this year. We'll tag along and see.

Women Entering Arena Skates Replacing Heels

By JO RATCLIFFE

When Varsity Arena starts to ring with joyous feminine voices you may be assured that the hockey season in on. No, we don't mean men's hockey cause feminine voices usually get drowned out in such instances. The season is here — the noon-hour spectacles are about to be presented. We mean—women's hockey.

Last week a few ladies ventured to the rink to begin annual practises for the events which are slated to get into operation the first week back after Christmas

Twelve teams are expected to be entering the ranks of interfaculty competition representing all colleges and a few of the faculties. PHE will be entering two teams as last year when their first string squad walked, rather skated off with the honours. Saint Hilda's came close but missed in the final meet by a one-goal margin.

The league . . . will comprise three leagues as last year with the same teams in each. Weekly games will be matched off for each squad with the meets being held daily at noon.

UC, Irish In Hockey Deadlock Jr Skules Decision Vics 7-2

By JOHN WILSON

In a game marked by constant disagreements, and several out and out fights, St. Mike's 'A's and Senior UC battled to a 2-2 tie in yesterday's hockey action in the Arena. Rugged play was a feature, with UC holding a first period edge to take a 2-1 lead on goals by Ted George and Yakimoff. However the Double Blue gave promise of a run for top spot in Group 1, showing up with a fast-skating, rough squad.

UC hit the scoreboard at 9:30 of the first as Ted George took a pass in front of the St. Mike's net to beat goalie Gerry Young. The Blue attack became somewhat organised at this point and after several rushes Shepherd, who played a tremendous game grabbed a loose puck at the Red and White blue line and wnet in on Monty Harris, left unprotected in the UC net. With the score now knotted at 1-1, UC put on a drive into the St. Mike's zone, which was shabbily rewarded when a weak, off the mark shot from Yakimoff got deflected into the mesh by a Double Blue defenceman.

The second period opened with UC in control for about three minutes and then St. Mike's took over. Catching the Red and White off guard with one man back, Barrett, Godin and Fiaschetti moved in, and Fiaschetti culminated a nice passing play at 11:15 taking the disc from Barrett at the goalmouth. At 13:45 Wheeler and Nichols went off for five minutes, after wrestling each other to the ice. Half a minute later, Fullerton got the gate for charging and the Mikemen pressed the one man advantage. However the Red and White's strong defensive unit held them at bay for the remaining five minutes. Nichols was a standout on the UC blue line, while Yakimoff, Tilson, and Teddy George bolstered a loose front wall. Fiaschetti and Godin were definite threats at forward for St. Mike's along with Evans and Bergerom in front of Gerry Young.

In a Group II contest, Junior S.P.S. established themselves as contenders in the loop with a 7-2 win over Junior Vic. Opening with a four-goal onslaught against one answer from Vic in the first stanza, they went on to pile up three more inside of three minutes in the second, walking away with the victory. Wright was the big gun, picking up a hat trick in the opener, while Thompson slammed home the other. The first Vic tally came late in the period when Sampson scored on a breakaway, duping the lone Skule defenceman to slip the puck past goaltender Bentham of S. P. S.

For the first ten minutes of the second period, Vic got the puck out of their own end once, and the Blue and Gold capitalized on their ineffectiveness to score three quickies in succession. Wilson took a pass from Weir at 5:55 and Mc. Quat potted two more at 7:35 and 8:25 leaving the Scarlet and Gold trailing by six, 7-1. To take some of the finish off the S.P.S. effort, Burrows broke away for Vic and blistered the puck past the Skule goalie late in the period. The whole Vic crew appeared shabby in all departments, in dropping their second contest of the young season. However Bob Burrows and Bill Money were good up front along with Norm Alban on defence. Junior S.P.S. were working well as a team, for their first game, something new in Interfaculty play. Wright was a threat with his three goal effort as was Pollock on defence.

In the other game, S.P.S. VI white-washed Trinity C's 8-0 to take over first place in Group V. Payne and Brown scored twice, while Stephenson, Moroy, Shannon and McCashon each tallied once. Trinity goalie Fred Chalk left the game with a two-inch gash below his left eye, after stopping a puck in the opening period. This left the Red and Black squad relatively helpless for the balance of the game, with a substitute taking the crease, and allowing seven of the eight Skule goals.

Calling Staff

There will be a meeting for all Varsity Sports Staffers in The Varsity Office at 1:05 to-day. If unable to attend Staffers should notify the editor. Any persons interested in writing Sports are invited. There are still openings for good men and women.

Mural All-Star Team

By RIM

Its easy to pick an All-Star team. It's just like playing "pin the tail" only you don't pin the tail on the donkey. In this case it's usually the donkey who does the pinning. Down in The Varsity Office a bunch of 'donkeys' have just finished their pinning game and have selected an All-Star Football Team for the Intramural League.

Unanimous choice for the team with the League's outstanding line was the Forestry club who rode to glory on the play of their front wall. We've put three Woodchoppers on the first team. The work of Tackles 'Bing Crosbie', Bob Burgar and end Jim Wadell was largely responsible for the success of the Forestry boys in the Intramural this year.

Skule was the only club to produce a line that was the match of the Woodies. In fact when the two clubs met their lines played each other to a standstill. With stalwarts the like of former Blue Earl Ford along the Skule front wall it was a small wonder that the slide rule chappies had such strength. Another top man for the Engineers was end Cal Weaver who along with Ford was our selection for first squad.

Engineering Combines' great quarterback, Don Hart, deserves a special mention for brilliant play-calling combined with magnificent passing. On occasion through the schedule Hart produced kicking that was quite the match of the rest in the loop.

Highlight of the Forestry season was their victory over St. Mike's when full back Ed. Marcus went off tackle for an 80-yard-run and a touchdown. The bulky Marcus as speedy-stepping a swifty as showed in the League was the best we saw ineither division. The Irish came up with another great back in Jude Fuscoe who is our selection for one of the half-spots. The other half is Jerry Hugo of UC. Flying Wing is the all-purpose star of the Skule Combines—Bruce Day. Day kicked, ran and caught passes, as well as going strongly on defence.

St. Mike's had an All-Star lineman in guard Dan Driscoll and

Although inter-collegiate competition has been suggested in women's hockey it has been constantly hampered by lack of funds both here and at other points in the province.

Heather MacPherson has taken over scheduling the meets from Kay Leggate last year's convenor. Lists should now be up in all colleges for those interested in participating in this activity and a schedule of daily practises may be found in the Arena entrance.

B-Ball Blues Brave Niagara Play Top U.S. College Cagers

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Last year, it was the Varsity hockey team that did all the travelling before its season opened. This year, the basketball squad is dong something similar.

The new Blues—one of the tallest basketball outfits Varsity has ever had—were away up north in Sudbury last night for a game with, of all teams, the Harlem Globetrotters. And tonight, they'll be in Niagara Falls, N.Y., to tangle with the Niagara University Purple Eagles. The intermediate team makes the trip, too.

In Niagara, the Blues are facing one of the top four college hoop squads in the United States. The Purpe Eagles were in the NCAA national tournament at Madison Square Gardens last year and went to the semi-finals before being eliminated by the great Seton Hall team, led by Walter Dukes, the seven-foot All-American.

Last year, in a December exhibition game, Niagara whipped the Blues 95-54. Varsity's George Stulac was best man on the floor in that particular encounter as he sank 17 points. However, the Purple Eagles had four men who scored more than 10 points.

The team the Blues played at Sudbury last night was not the number one Harlem Globetrotters team but a sort of farm team, which plays in smaller centres. Toronto's Nortown Tri-Bells lost close decisions to them last week and some of the Bells felt that this team, made up largely of college and high school grads, has the edge on Goose Tatum and company in actual cage skill.

From last year's team, the Blues have lost high-scorers; Leo Madden, Pette Potter, Don Fawcett, Gary Glover and Bill Huycke. However, veterans Jim Russell, George Stulac, Lou Lukenda, Bill Corcoran, and Marv Tile have returned. Up from the intermediates are; Harold Rotman, Doug Scott, Dave McCuaig and perhaps Mike Baida. Two impressive newcomers from the high school ranks are John Shepherd and Florian Matsalla.

Climaxing a busy week for the Blues will be a game with Albion College at Saturday's Athletic Night in Hart House.

Athletic Night For Weekend Albion Visits

In these days of high prices, something economical is big news. That's why it's worthy of note that the season's first Athletic Night is set for Saturday evening in Hart House.

—The price of admission to an Athletic Night is fifty cents (50 cents) and here is what that stipend generally covers: a basketball doubleheader, a swimming meet and one-or-two interfaculty tournaments, plus an hour or more of dancing in the gymnasium.

This Saturday's basketball feature sees the Varsity Blues playing Albion College, a team from upstate New York. A preliminary game at seven o'clock will see the intermediates facing a team yet to be obtained.

In the pool, Varsity Blues will be defending the Hershorn Cup, symbol of inter-collegiate water polo championship, against the McGill team.

The junior interfaculty wrestling meet fills out the evening's bill.

Gustav Weisman

"And who in their tomorrows," asks a dark, patiently biblical young woman in Hart House Art Gallery, "can be free of th leaven of their yesteryears?"

The girl, silently enduring on her canvas, is the work of Gustav Weisman, graduate of OCA whose current exhibition answers the rhetorical question with a resounding "Nobody, that's who!" The leaven of Mr. Weisman's yesteryears includes such active enzymes as Cubism, a strongly religious and despondent tradition, and study in Mexico; they have raised him to a most promising stature.

Most of the paintings are done in a low key, and consist of furiously intersecting planes. These resemble each other rather closely, but the differences are pointed by titles, which, on further inspection, see to have a surprising amount of connection with their respective pictures. This is a dangerous statement, as the Hart House people may have put the wrong labels on the more incomprehensible patterns, but any work of art that allows the public to interpret it in terms of its title, and to suspect that the subject is by no means exhausted, would be a success, even with the wrong tag on it.

"Willow trees" is a departure from the prevailing style of his abstracts, with its cheerful colours and whirling curves. But perhaps the most impressive of the works is the one with the most obvious Mexican derivation and the most personal significance. "The Wanderer" is lost in a wilderness of the hottest, most unmerciful red imaginable. He hunches in his own shade, examining his toes. Mr. Weisman has not learned to give toes, fingers, and odd ligaments the same concentrated agony his Mexican sources have mastered, but, in "The Wanderer" he comes close to their own tangible expressions of suffering.

THE PRINT ROOM

A restful contrast, Sylvia Hahn's woodcuts are clean, accurate, and easily comprehensible. With the sullen Cubistries in the larger gallery, they contribute to a well-rounded show.

Sunday Concert

The St. Mary Magdalene Singers, conducted by Dr. Healey Willan, will give the last Hart House Sunday Evening Concert before Chistmas.

Their program will include works by Bach, Weelkes, Tallis, Palestrina, Byrd, Holst, Rubbra, and Dr. Willan. It has become a tradition for the audience to join in The First Nowell at this concert.

The concert starts at 9:00 on Sunday, Dec. 6. Free tickets are available at the Hall Porter's desk upon presentation of membership cards, and members are allowed to bring a guest who may be a lady.

Jose Greco

If the stage of the Royal Alexandra Theatre survives the stampede, it will be possible to see there this week the dashing Jose Greco and his kaleidoscopic company of Spanish Dancers.

To music supplied by piano, two guitars, a flamenco singer and hand-clapping they performed a program varying from the wildest gypsy dances to the stately castilliannones. It's not a full orchestra, but combined with castinettes and the beat of feet it could rival any Dixieland band for rhythm.

Every member of the company danced well, and some danced outstandingly, although the same cannot be said for their singing, which was audible but strident still, it takes a deal of breath control to sing and dance simultaneously. Chinin de Triana, the company's Chimin de Triana, the company's Flamenco singer, has good rhythm and flexibility of voice.

Jose Greco did two solo dances which indicated the reason for his renown. He might be called a foot-virtuoso. In addition he has a commanding stance, and elegance and authority of presence.

Among the twelve dances on the first half, I particularly liked that of "The Bronze Gypsies" in Seville Flamenco. They had both the savage passion and sentiment of the fiery, yet fickle gypsy temperament. Also attractive was Mujeres de Aragon danced by Lola de Ronda, Malena Vargas, Tina Velez, with precision and light grace. Nila Amparo in Petenera displayed supple arm and wrist movements combined with an extraordinary co-ordination of movement necessary to dancing combined with the playing of castinettes.

In the two ballets, Madrid, 1890 and Rincon Flamenco of the last portion, there was considerable imagination in arrangements, humor of mime and that semi-spontaneous atmosphere provided by cries of encouragement from the onlookers.

Space does not allow me to mention the other numbers, even the most pleasing, but I would like to mention the excellent guitar playing of Ricardo Blasco and the mime-burlesque of Salome de Cordoba.

As well as a generally good standard there were excellent costumes, including fans, frills, petticoats and shawls for the women and the close-fitting pants and brocaded vests of the men.

You Had Fun

It seems that bandsmen's capes have become the suitable trophies to take home as spoil from a football game. This is about as bright as the panty raids were. More and more students are becoming unable to think anything is a joke unless there has been material loss to someone who will really feel it in the neck.

No student has so much money that he or she can replace stolen articles at random. If the "jokes" were a play on feelings most of the students played on could well call it a joke. There are two bandsmen's capes missing now. Though The Varsity hopes the pseudo-owners are happy with them, we are still open to any information on their immediate location.

No More Of It

Now we have two effigy burnings on two Canadian campi in just over one month. Admittedly this is better than the thought going around last week: two burnings on one campus.

The Varsity agrees that many Canadians did not know who the Publisher of a Chicago Daily was, and we believe they do now. We admit there is room to question the method of introduction. But we are afraid too few Canadians realized the strong anti-British influence at work south of the border.

Students at the University of British Columbia indicated Sunday night what the opinion of Canadian students was. We also believe they were aware of the principle they were forced to disregard in carrying out what they felt to be their duty. We hope, as we feel the UBC students do, that there will be no further need of burned effigies on Canadian campi.

What Happened?

It is surprising that in a University the size of Toronto, no debaters could be found in the first debate trials to represent us in intercollegiate competition. Even though debaters were chosen at the retrials they still carry the shadow of their failure of the week before.

We would hate to think that the poor quality of the speeches the week before was due to lack of interest in competing for the intercollegiate position. But from the judges' comments ("These men can do better"), we are given no other alternative. The men and women they have selected now may have come up to the speaking quality required for intercollegiate debaters, but if they were not enough interested in it last week should they have been chosen this week?

It may have been only an off-day for them all. The Varsity hopes so, and that there will be no recurrence of it while they are on tour.

More Indulgent Approach

An Inside Story

By LOUIS BEAUPRE, III Arch., B.A., B.Ph.

After reading Mr. Wipprecht's letters to the editor, I have thought that time had come for a whole article on the subject, and not merely a few lines in the "Our Readers Write" section, in order to clarify certain points.

THIS ARTICLE MIGHT make you "mettre de l'eau dans votre vin," an old French proverb that has come to mean, God knows how, "to have a more indulgent approach to a problem." If I give any advice in this article, please consider it in as good a spirit as I have had in writing it, take it as coming from a friend, a friend of Peace, a friend of Good Understanding, and above all as coming from one of the BEST FRIENDS that English-Canadians can ever find among the French-Canadians.

The members of the U.C.-V.C. parliament might also be interested in what I have to say. Please note that I have no hard feelings whatever against that parliament. Its last discussion about the Roman Catholic Church has always been carried on in a very good spirit. I am pleased to acknowledge the fact and to thank you for it.

Totalitarianism & The Roman Catholic Church

Mr. Wipprecht has pointed out in one of his last letters concerning his attitude towards the Roman Catholic Church, that all replies were directed to the person and not to the point. I think that it is quite so and that it is a wrong attitude. I will try to do better.

I do not believe that Mr. Wipprecht got up one morning having decided that he disliked the Roman Catholic Church and had to tell Varsity about it. However I interpreted his tone as being extremely aggressive, and his first letter on the subject seemed to me quite prejudiced. I think his words went beyond his thoughts; it is the privilege of so few writers, if any, to be able to convey their ideas through written words without going beyond their meaning.

I DO NOT FEEL CAPABLE of discussing in particular any of the evidence-proofs brought up by Mr. Wipprecht; I have not enough space for it in this article, and I am not enough aware of the facts, and the quotations alone are often misleading if not put in their context. What I can say about it, then, is that the picture that those quotations give of the ideas of the Roman Catholic Church about the freedom of thought and expression, is quite different from the one I have been given at the Catholic university where I have received part of my education. This seems to show that there are divergent opinions about certain problems within the Church itself and that the Church is not as dogmatic and totalitarian as it is often thought to be.

I have always been taught, ever since I was a child, to believe that the Roman Catholic Church was right and possessed the truth. (Later on, I was given what I consider a rational basis for my beliefs.) But at the same time I was also taught to have the greatest respect for other people's beliefs, and to try and understand that others could see the same questions from another angle, come to different conclusions and believe themselves to be as right as I am. For that matter a single Protestant, Jew or Buddhist who is convinced of his own faith is worth an INFINITE number of Catholics who are not so convinced. Hence, one concludes that a Catholic that does not do, BY PERSONAL CONVICTION, what the Church tells him he should do is not worthy "de delier la courroie de la sandale" of some one who does what HE thinks is good.

If this is a leading principle in the Roman Catholic Church, then, how can the Church be trying to force its own doctrine into other people's mind?

I HAVE NO ANSWER to this but that the quotations given by Mr. Wipprecht do not mean what they seem to mean, or if they do, those who wrote them must have been wrong. In any case they are not truly representative of the actual Roman Catholic attitude on the subject, as I have personally experienced it.

I must admit that sometimes there are facts that seem to contradict my statements. If the Church has performed those persecutions referred to by Mr. Wipprecht, the Church has gone beyond its power. But in most cases one will find that mobs or governments are responsible and not the Church as such. If it is possible to be more royalist than the King, it is also possible to be more Catholic than the Pope.

I suppose it is right to say that the Roman Catholic Church has a definition of civil liberties that differs from that of most people in Ontario, or at least it has a different conception of how this definition should be applied. Considered absolutely, however, there is no such thing as civil liberties in our modern societies. All that exists is a more or less extensive degree of freedom. Otherwise no law would be "legal." Therefore what usually happens is that in a given society the will of the majority of its members or of its leaders forms the basis of the civil rights of this society. (Maybe this principle should be discussed before discussing its effects on the Roman Catholic Church or on any society.) For instance in Ontario there are laws against Sunday sports or the selling of liquor in restaurants on Sunday. No one ever complains that these laws are an infringement on our liberty, (although they might inconvenience some of us) because we understand that these laws are thought to be good, by the majority of the people of Ontario or our leaders. Moreover, other provinces or countries, that do not have such laws, never think of criticising us.

Then, who can prove that our definition of civil liberties is better to any great extent than that of any other democratic country of the world. Le us not be too DOGMATIC about it, and let us try to see other people's points of view.

IF WE CRITICIZE the Roman Catholic Church, and we have the right to do so, let us be more cautious and not so harsh. Let us bear in mind that beyond the Roman Catholic Church, the society of men liable to mistakes and errors, lies the Roman Catholic Doctrine. It has nothing subversive as Communism and Fascism have. Its wonderfully high standards of morals could be summarized in those simple yet deep-meaning words: "Be good and charitable, my brethren." (From a humble country parish priest's sermon.) But, moreover, the Roman Catholic Doctrine is not merely a moral code; it is, I would say PRIMARILY, a religion of sublime mysticism that suits the human nature to the utmost, that has never been achieved but by a few other religions all through the course of history, and that stands as a beacon in this materialistic and mechanized world than we live in. For all this, the Roman Catholic Church should be highly praised, greatly admired and respected, and treated with care, as a precious gem.

Our Readers Write:

Who Decides What?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Miss Heineman's letter of December 1st raises a problem. She states that the Roman Catholic Church is intolerant of error and defends man's right to pursue truth. We do not want to attack the Roman Catholic Church, but what we do want to know is who decides what is truth. The only way we can discover the truth is not to suppress what we or any other human organization believes to be error, but to allow it to continue. For if it is truth it will be able to withstand opposition, but if it is error it will not last. In Acts 5, one wise man of the Jews, who belonged to the group of men who tried to suppress what they thought was error (Christianity), said: "If this plan is of men it will fail, but if it is of God you will not be able to overthrow it." Therefore why should the Roman Church try to suppress "error" unless it is afraid that the "error" will turn out to be the truth?

Bilious

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I must write my appreciation for your kind consideration of my welfare in sponsoring your own "cat week". It seems otherwise to have slipped by unheeded.

Also, I would like to thank you for the Cat Contest which will undoubtedly give me new life. I have been feeling rather bilious lately.

The Cat.

Owed To A Cat

"I want to give a week to cats."
I heard somebody say,
"We put aside a week for health,
And one for the Navy;
Let's honour our dear feline friend
And have a kitty day.
Why should we make an effort to Exist without the cat?
To them we're noble, dignified,
(Now all take off your hat).
Please do not act like rats.

To them we show our charity,
We give, and do not take.
Their comfort is our only thought,
This love we cannot fake.
Our self respect is up on trial,
Let's give the cat a break.

And so dear cat, for you this week,
Your children, and your missus,
We honour, praise and even bring
The daintiest of fishes.
This is your week, and we will grant.
You any of your wishes.

VARSITY GETS TYPEWRITER

No Sex Mag Torontonensis Starts Sales

The NEW Torontonensis goes on sale today, with no sex. Editor Reggie Mori (III Vic) denied yesterday that the yearbook would be filled with cheesecake pictures of campus shows as previously rumoured. "There has been too much sex emphasized on campus this year," said Mori in an interview on the pre-Christmas sale.

The pre-Christmas sale is to allow students to place their orders of Torontonensis '54 early with their faculty reps. "In previous years students have been disappointed in not being able to get their copy of the University Yearbook," said Sales Manager Mike Hare (III C and F). As the exact number ordered is printed, sale is by advance order only, explained Hare.

"More coverage of campus activities featuring campus life, initiations and the students themselves will make this a radically different yearbook," said Mori. Featured this year will be the faculties' and colleges' songs, their crests highlighting their individual sections and a completely new format. Technical improvements will incude a higher grade glossy paper and the finest screen copper engravings to ensure snappier pictures.

Torontonensis '54 is on pre-Christmas sale today. Displays in various colleges as shown here in St. Mike's, illustrate the attractions of the official U. of T. Yearbook, to be completely streamlined this year.

Xmas Spirit Started 'Journal' Sends Gift

The Queen's Journal, in sending The Varsity a shiny new (rented) typewriter, has hit a new high in inter-university newspaper co-operation. The machine which arrived yesterday resembled the genuine article in every respect except in the position of the letter keys and plattens.

An accompanying letter addressed "To the Editor, The Farsity, University of Tranta," pointed out the need for a good typewriter in The Varsity office.

"After carefully examining all the errors in a typocal copy of the Farsity (a tremendous job in itself) we analysed them employing the crystal ball method, (a successful method employed by all Engineers) and Cooke's variable constant. The resalting croctions to your typo-writer now make it possible for an idiot with two left hands to successfully operate this machine."

While fondly caressing the generous gift, the editors of The Varsity said, "We're glad The Varsity is read that closely at Queen's. We appreciate the typewriter, we need it."

"At last our articles will make sense," sighed one reporter on seeing the typewriter. Another mommented, "At least Queen's engineers can put their minds to work in trying to improve The Varsity, whereas Toronto's engineers can only think of brute force and kidnapping short-skirted innocents."

The totally unexpected act of charity came at first as a welcome surprise to the typewriter-shy Varsity office After trying it out however, tears were to be seen under the eyes of the disappointed staff.

The heads of the keys were switched so anyone not able to use the touch system would be completely confused. Also assuming that there were some people in the office who could use the system the letter plattens (the metal fingers which make the impressions) were also liberally switched around.

The accompanying letter which was signed "Queen's Enigineers" was post-scripted, "We were going to sent you the Journal Editor's typewriter but it writes so many long windy editorials that we felt we couldn't sub jekt the Tranta Students to such a orrible fate."

Suggestions for the possible fate of the "Pride of Underwood" range from its donation to the Salvation Army to its use in writing clear and legible quotes of visiting dignitaries. Right now it is being pressed into service as a paperweight and is doing an admirable job.

Scholarship For Pussy? Asks WUA

There will be a very importat open meeting of the WUA this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the Women's Union Theatre. The primary item on the agenda is the allocation of a $150 scholarship to be established by the WUA. A report on the recent UC show will be given, and a constitutional amendment referring to next year's show will be discussed. Plans for the Arts Ball will be presented as we.

The WUA is very conscious of its equality with the "Lit.," and consequently will have it known that it too has felt student "apathy"; it too is not assured of a quorum. "However the WUA differs from the 'Lit' in that the executive do care, at least for this meeting. The establishment of a scholarship is a serious matter, and the executive, when confromted with the importance of deciding where the scholarship should go would like the opinions of the members. If no one turns up, they could always settle it upon the Cat to insure his return in future years," said Joan Seymour of UC.

felines awake

Do dogs bark at you? Do mice run the other way when they see you coming" Do people look down on you just because you're a cat? Well, cats, this is your week to yowl, so pad noiselessly down to The Varsity office with your views and mews on life. The most laughable effort will earn its author a cat of his very own. In case of a tie, there will be kittens.

Grand Scale Reception Carabins Arrive Tonight

"When the Carabins from the University of Montreal arrive tonight, they will get a reception at the Union Station which they won't forget for a long, long time," said Ron Gould, Carabin publicity director.

"When they step off the Montreal train at 9:45 p.m. they will be greeted by many University of Toronto students, including Stan Schiff and Elizabeth Scroggie, Carabin co-chairmen, the Toronto hosts, the Blue and White cheerleaders, Shirley Eckel, Varsity's drum majorette, the Victoria College Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band (SGLIRPB), and as many other Varsity students who wish to attend. The Varsity, the three Toronto daily papers, and CBC Television will be on hand to record the arrival of the Carabins," said Gould.

From the Union Station the group will return to Brennan Hall. St. Michael's College, where Principal Jeanneret of University College will welcome the visitors at a sherry party.

"We hope that many U of T students besides those who are official hosts, will come down to welcome the Montrealers at the station. Also, we need at least eight cars to transport the Carabins to Brennan Hall," Gould added.

A large group of students will leave Brennan Hall at 9:15 p.m. this evening to go down to meet the train.

Besides the reception at the station, other activities of the Carabin Weekend (Dec. 3 to 6), which are open to all Varsity students, are the Banquet in the Great Hall, Hart House, at 7:00 p.m. on Friday evening and the discussion groups on Friday at 2 p.m. in Falconer Hall, and Saturday at 2:30 p.m. at the Victoria College Union.

Psychologists Discuss Thai

Dr W. M Line, who has recently visited Thailand will give an outline of education in Thailand. He will inform his audience about the Thai people who are visiting Toronto, their purpose here on our campus, and what their future in Thailand will be.

The Thailanders present will hold a general discussion regarding the conditions in Thailand. The meeting will be held in the Croft Chapter House under the auspices of the Psychology Club. at 8:00 today.

Graduates Have Fireside View Notre Dame On TV

FROLIC

An evening of fun and relaxation is promised for Friday from 8-30 until midnight at the graduate students lounge, 44 Hoskin Avenue, Thomas Dolley, president of the Graduate Students' Union stated today.

Soft music, firelight, refreshments, and a convivial atmosphere will highlight the Union's first Social evening of the year.

Graduate students, their families and friends are invited to attend the affair.

FOOTBALL

Graduate students, their families and friends may view the Notre Dame-Southern Methodist football clash over television this Saturday at the graduates lounge, 44 Hoskin Avenue, it was announced today.

Following the attendaance of a capacity crowd at last Saturday's viewing of the Grey Cup Classic, it was decided to have a television set available for this week's game, a traditional encounter in United States football.

The lounge will be open from 1 p.m.

Princesses and Snails

By MIKE ERDEI

When the haze lifted, we were on our way home with many memories and no money. The IRC New York trip was over once again. There were the United Nations, International House, shows, Greenwich Village and parties.

We heard speeches. The Sirdar of Fattehabad, Colonel Shan-I-Iftikhar, Sirdar Karam Singh Bahr Ahluwalia, made one in the Savanah Club. He said, "My grandfather had 200 wives."

The Colonel was in military princess, the hostess, but later uniform complete with black mustache, monocle, and plenty of liquor. At first he had just one princess, the hostess, but later he had another, from Toronto.

In Greenwich Village there was Joe King's Rathskeller, which is the meeting place of all university students in New York. Here we heard the songs of several American colleges, and sang our own "O Toronto", and "Lady Godiva, mother ever dear". Here Mike Brewsker of the University of Virginia said to us, "I like Ballantines beer".

There was the Balalaika, with Russian folk-dancing in colorful traditional dress and the Moscow Mule. Chinatown [illegible] little bamboo fan [illegible] suey, and rice [illegible] restaurant serve

UN in action and actuality, they call it.

We looked down on the air-conditioning units and elevator penthouses of New York from the top of the Empire State building Some of us danced a Virginia reel on Fifth Avenue in the middle of the night. None of us got any sleep, which is only natural.

The train home almost left with out us. We scrambled aboard, one minute to spare, with a little black dog called Moshut. He was a present for the princess from the Colonel. Basil Moore, III Vic, joined us fifteen minutes later. He had caught up with us in a local train when we stopped for a few minutes.

Gosh I'm tired.

'All You Need Is Urge' Quartets Compete Again

Here's a musical contest which requires no musical training.

All you need to enter is the urge . . . . to have fun in four-part harmony. No trained voice necessary to enter.

The annual Quartet Contest in Hart House has grown by leaps and bounds to become a very popular and famous thing for members of the House.

"It is hoped that this year's contest will be the biggest and best so far," Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, said last night.

Al Hart House members, both graduate and undergraduate, are eligible for entry and are encouraged to have a go at it.

Heads of societies, student organizations, residences and fraternities have all been told of the event, and with their co-operation, McDowell said, "it can be great fun."

The contest has been in existence since 1949 and has proven very popular in the past. The event is sponsored annually by the House Committee of Hart House.

The quartets will be judged not only on musical ability, but on presentation and entertainment value. The entries in the past have included great varieties of costume and choice of song. Guest quartets from other universities have also been known to contribute.

The judging will be in series as in past years with semi-finals and finals.

An informal meeting will be held on Wednesday, 9th of December, at 5:00 p.m. in the East Common Room of Hart House. There, members who wish to enter and/or wish to find out more about the event, may ask questions. Rules and regulations will also be discussed.

Skule And Pre-Meds On Top In Volleyball

Tuesday's volleyball activity saw Pre-Meds II B down Junior UC 15-9, 11-15, 15-5, and SPS VI whip UC 85 Grenville St. 15-10, 15 - 8. In Wednesday Skule VI played Trinity A's and dropped a toughie 7-15, 15-6, 15-11. Pre-Meds II B were up against Dent A and came out on top 15-13, 12-15, 15-5 to advance into the semi-finals. SPS V were victorious over Vic III 9-15, 15-9, 15-8. In second division action Law took Forestry B 15-3, 11-15, 15-8 to move into the semi-finals.

The UC Firsts walloped Pre-Meds First Year 22-3 on Tuesday to enter the box lacrosse finals starting on Friday against Meds I. Watson and Eagleson were very high men with seven goals each. Carrol scored three, Mackie two, and Brown, Patterson and King one apiece. Sorokolit, Evans and Harris tallied for Pre-Meds. In yesterday's semi-fial Meds I won the right to meet UC I in the finals by thumping St. Mike's A 10-6. Gear potted four goals for the Doctors, while Kerr with three and Kilty, Walsh and Thomson with one each accounted for the rest. McKinnon was a hat-trick man for the Double Blue, along with Wheeler who scored twice and Stratt with one. The first game of the box lacrosse finals will be played on Friday at 2:00 p.m. in Hart House.

SPS, Wycliffe Take Double Hockey Wins

In interfaculty hockey action yesterday in Varsity Arena, Skule VII whipped Vic IV 7-3, while Wycliffe downed Forestry B 6-2. Ubick was the big gun for the theologs with a hat trick, and Mort Sargent, Ralph McKim, and Moffat each picked up a goal. Bob Briggs and Stacy supplied the Forestry cause with their goals Wycliffe and Knox are now tied for first place in Group II of the second division.

SPS VII rode into a first place tie with St. Mike's C's with their win in Group VI. Dick Slater scored three for the winners. Ron Heron, Paul Henderson, Beck and Fisher tallying the others. Kehorup, Wass and Chamandy were Scarlet and Gold goal - getters.

St. Hilda's Outplays Meds Physed Downs UC Sophs

St. Hilda's Freshies, although dominating the play in the first at last night's intramural basketball games, managed only 19 points against Med's B's. During the first quarter all of the play was centred around Med's basket, but because of inaccurate shooting and the superior checking of little Nancy Tutile of Med's, the St. Hildian's ended the quarter leading by the slim margin of 4 points.

By far the best player for the Saints in the second quarter was Penny Linnell who connected with a beautiful left-handed hook shot. St. Hilda's led 9-2 at the half. The third and fourth quarters were marked by play which was much less one-sided than in the first half, but Pam Miles and Florence Middleton playing steady and closepchecking ball held the Med's second half, Cecil Phillips tallied six points as she and Jane Kelly worked well together in some good passing plays. The game ended with a final score of 19-6 which was hardly indicative of the heads-up ball played throughout by the Saints. High scorer in the game was Cecil Phillips with eight points while Marg Mitchell hooped in four in a losing cause for Med's. Starring for St. Hilda's in this

In the second game of the evening PHE III emerged the victors in a close, fast game. Fighting back in the closing minutes of the contest UC Sophs kept the play in their end, but time ran out with the score at 14-12.

Students Making More Money In Civil Service Summer Work

More than 900 summer positions will be open in the various federal government departments, for graduates and undergraduates from Canada's universities. Representatives of the Civil Service Commission are visiting universities now and the Commission has made details available on the wide variety of positions, and how to apply for them.

A general salary increase announced late in November provides for increased salaries for students and graduates in summer employment.

Most of the Civil Service summer openings are for field work, including students registered in engineering, geology, and forestry. For example, the Geological Survey of Canada will require 221 graduates and undergraduates; federal forestry service will have openings for approximately 100, mainly to do field studies working from established stations across Canada. Another 160 will be required by the Survey and Mapping Branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

There are openings in various fields: mathematics and physics, commerce, economic, and chemistry. Details of the positions, and application forms can be obtained from the University Placement Service, at 5 Willcocks.

Thousands or graduates and undergraduates who spent their summer vacations working with federal government departments made the most of the opportunities. Some students returned each year and on graduation continued in the work they had been doing. In some cases, graduates joined the Civil Service continued their studies, took post-graduate degrees, and consequently improved their positions and incomes considerably.

Professional classes in the Civil Service received generous increases in the 1953 salary revisions. For example, the increase for Engineers at the entrance level was $400 a year.

Students engaged in field work during the summer are provided with transportation to and from the jobs as well as subsistence while on the job; all this, of course, in addition to the basic salary.

Speaks On Palestine, Shows Colored Slides

Over 100 colored slides showing the limestone hills of the central part of the Jordan Valley, the Shiloh to Jacob's well, and other historic sites of the Holy Land were shown at last night's meeting of the Near East Club. Dr. D. K. Andrew spoke on Palestine and exhibited his slides which "followed in the very footsteps of Christ who walked there nearly 2,000 years ago".

Palestine is a beautiful country, with its red earth, and snowy white limestone hills on which man has grown green trees, said Dr. Andrews. But it is a land in which, according to the inhabitants, "only mad dogs and Englishmen wander about at midday."

He showed a series of slides which depicted the places associated with Christ, the Jordan river in which he was baptized, and even the Garden of Gethsemane at the foot of the Mount of Olives.

Dr. Andrew stated that Palestine is a scenic wonder and he hoped that he had awakened in all his audience the desire to visit that country.

Last Lecture Of UC Story Is Tonight

At five o'clock tonight, Principal Jeanneret will give the last Centennial lecture in the West Hall of University College. He will speak on the topic, "The Last Fifty Years", in the history of UC. Principal Jeanneret's lecture will be the last in a series of centennial lectures.

Five professors from the College have spoken on the subject of literature as it applies to Philosophy, Religion, Education, Science and Society. The first lecture was given by Principal Emeritus Wallace on the first fifty years of UC history.

Patterson Discusses Asia, Africa

Professor Patterson of the Department of History will speak at Socialism I A today at 1 p.m., in Room Four, UC. His topic is: Asia and Africa; Continents in Ferment. Mr. Patterson will deal with the problems involved in the freeing of the colonies from Imperialism. He will assess the importance of the revolution in China and its influence on developments elsewhere in Asia, the role of India in the liberation movements, and the ferment in the Middle East. The racial problem in Africa will also be included in Professor Patterson's talk. The lecture is one of a series sponsored weekly by the UC CCF Club.

LPPer Sees McCarthyism Making Way Into Canada

Defining McCarthyism as "a social disease", former city alderman Norman Freed addressed th LPP club's noon meeting yesterday at UC. "Some people like to dismiss McCarthyism as just a matter of lunacy. I don't agree with that," said Freed."I think that McCarthyism is a social disease."

Mentioning the "big lie", referred to in a recent speech by Harry S. Truman he interpreted it as "The 'big lie' of so-called communist aggression". Every time there are any fundamental changes in history, bogies and scapegoats must be created in order to divert the attention of the people away from the real things at hand."

"It is a little difficult," said Freed, "to understand that the gentleman who gives this definition of McCarthyism actually fostered McCarthyism." He was here referring to former president Truman's definition against the Wisconsin Senator made in his speech of Nov. 16.

"The soil of Canada breeds McCarthyism," charged Freed. "The new amendment to the Criminal Code seeks to legalize McCarthyism in Canada."

Freed cautioned his audience not to be quiet on the issue for "we are now at the point where Robin Hood is being burned". "In order to fight McCarthyism effectively one must speak up," said Freed. "It cannot be fought by silence and indifference."

Feudin' and Fightin'

That Story Again

The present feud between the University of Toronto School of Law and Osgoode Hall has received much recent publicity. This is the first of two articles, by the President of the Law Club, Toronto School of Law, presenting a new aspect of the situation.

By R. A. F. MONTGOMERY

A week ago last Thursday, five lawyers from the British Columbia Bar were called to the Ontario Bar by the Law Society of Upper Canada. Not unusual in itself, as the only requirement is the payment of $1,500.00 to the above named Society. However, these five men were graduated from the University of Toronto Law School in June, 1952. Following their graduation they proceeded to British Columbia to serve their term of apprenticeship with a lawyer. (The time required under articles in B.C., is one year.) They received their call to the B.C. Bar during this past summer and returned to Ontario in September, at which time they petitioned the Law Society of Upper Canada for admission to the Ontario Bar. The Law Society have finally granted their petitions.

AS A RESULT, the Law Society, which advocates that a graduate from the University of Toronto Law School must spend two years under articles, as well as taking the lectures as given in the last year at Osgoode Hall before one can be admitted to the Bar, has put itself in a most anomalous position. Yet, because of the existing pecuniary comity between provincial Law Societies, readmission of lawyers to the Bar, the Law Society was forced to recognize the five from B.C. or to eliminate the possibility of any lawyer in the future transferring from any foreign jurisdiction to Ontario. Thus the anomoly arises: the five who have been called are now members of two Bars, while their former classmates at the University of Toronto who remained in Ontario will not be called to the Ontario Bar until next June at the earliest, and then only after completing another full set of examinations at Osgoode Hall.

NOW LET US RE-EXAMINE what the whole problem is. To practise law in Ontario one must be called to the Bar, that is one recognized by the Law Society to be eligible to practise. The study of law may be pursued either at Osgoode Hall or the University of Toronto. What are the requirements before one may enter either of these two schools? At Osgoode Hall one must have obtained a university dgeree at some university recognized by the Law Society, before entry into the four-year course is granted.

AT THE UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL one must have a prior university degree, although applicants who have only two years prior university training may be admitted. A person who attends the course at Osgoode Hall (the first two years are academic, the third is an articling year, and the last year is divided between articling and two lectures a day) is called to the Bar on the completion of his fourth year. Thus he can fulfil the requirements in a minimum of seven years. However, the university graduate, provided he has a prior degree before entering the University Law School, enters the third year of the Osgoode course upon completion of the University Law course. Thus he can only fulfil the requirements in a minimum of eight years. Note: the person who enters the University Law School with two years prior university study is given no recognition at all by the Law Society, although for example this person is given full recognition in B.C. It can be readily seen that the university law graduate is penalized one year added to the fact that the the most part a repetition of courses already taken lectures in the fourth year at Osgoode Hall are for Is it fair that this inequality should exist?

Teapot Tempest

While some still look at it as a tempest in a teapot, the stresses and strains throughout mid-Africa are shaping up to be another trouble spot for Britain.

In the past Britain has done much toward the social development of these African natives, but such development has now reached a point where political independence and self-rule are in demand. The bloody campaign of the Mau Mau in Kenya, the anti-British election results in the Sudan, and the Buganda crisis, have one underlying theme—a desire by the natives to do things by themselves and for themselves without the "white rulers".

A rising tide of colored discontent is spreading itself over Africa. Colonialism cannot continue to be a political actuality in the modern world. And realizing this, Britain should take the initiative and not invite bloody massacre and revolt.

Economically Africa has a very important role to play in international commerce, but she must do it in a spirit of co-operation and not as the "second fiddle".

The leader in Buganda, Edward William Frederick Walugembe Mutebi Luwangula Mutesa—dubbed "Lulu" by his colleagues at Harvard—was dismissed by the British when he spoke out in favor of his country's independence. This incident, added to the others that have preceded it, cannot be considered as tempests in teapots. To do so, is outright blindness.

True To Form, Joe

The reaction of Eisenhower and Dulles to McCarthy's attacks on American foreign policy are "welcomed by the world" (the Toronto Star says). But this one major rebuff is not all that is needed to dispose of the witch-hunters and smear brigade led by the Wisconsin senator.

The US President spoke in very encouraging terms. He insisted that America could not exist in isolation and called for closer co-operation with the western allies. And he sought to mend this very weak spot in the western alliance.

Quite often differences in the West find the United States on one side and the governments of Western Europe and the British Commonwealth on the other. This result gives no comfort except to a potential aggressor.

Eisenhower recognizes that the West must work together—and in compromise and confidence. Decisions cannot be made only one way. They must entail close consultation.

McCarthy's attitude of forcing American foreign policy on the allies through economic pressure can only destroy any links of confidence in and loyalty to American leadership of the western world. Ike has met the challenge in a heartening manner but his battle will not end there—not if McCarthyism runs true to form.

Are 1600 Wrong?

Editor,
The Varsity:

Up to the present time I have watched from the sidelines the senseless mudslinging contest that raged across the campus as the result of Mr. Wipprecht's letter. But when I noticed Miss Donna Heineman's answer the other day I realized that I cannot stand by any longer without voicing my opinions; which, I hope, will offend none; which, cause a little bit of thought in all of us.

Miss A's letter seems to suggest that all non-Catholic religions and basic misapprehension of God's truth, which only a fool cannot see. She thinks, and I assume that so does the Catholic church that their teachings are as erroneous as the well known absurdity that two and two makes five. While the Catholic church is in the only and undisputed possession of the truth.

This is the part of her letter which makes me voice this criticism.

The modern man has developed a tendency to reduce ideas which are above his head to ones which h ecan comprehend. In some case this may bring acceptable results, but this is one of the exceptions. It would take a man from Mars to determine which religion is based on truth, or perhaps even he would fail, since all religions contain in a large part intangible beliefs and faith. Certainly no mortal from this earth could shake off his prejudices and determine the true religion. Until the time when we shall have an undisputed answer to the truth in all religions let us treat them all alike.

There are perhaps 1600 million non-Catholics on this globe, who according to Miss A. are "erroneously convinced that it is right to be the member of any non-Catholic church". These kind of statements contribute greatly to religious hatred and racial discrimination, which is certainly a far cry from Christ's teachings.

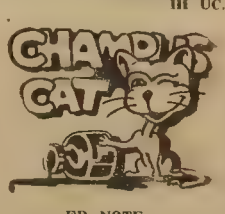
More Capes

Editor,
The Varsity:



To the fellow who "took" a Varsity Band cape from the Drill Hall during the tea dance following the final Varsity-Western game.

While I was dancing, (with a Varsity cheerleader, no less) you "took" my cape which was on a chair under my instrument and hat. Why didn't you take the instrument instead? It's worth a lot and hardly as useless as the cape alone.

You no doubt realize that I will have to replace it and so, trusting in your faith in your fellow man and your heavy conscience regarding your useless prize, I hope you will return it.

Please hand it into the SAC office or to the proper authorities.

Sheldon Schiller,
III UC.

ED. NOTE

The Champus Cat contest is still on but time is running out. Final deadline is Monday at 5:00 p.m. Remember, there's a pussy prize.

Mistake

Editor,
The Varsity:

Students of Toronto! Arise in righteous indignation against the make-up editors of The Varsity! It is not hard to pick up today's Varsity and find practically nothing of current ifiterest in it (which is demonstrated by the number of Varsitys lying discarded around the campus by noon. But when make-up editors are forced to fill a "hole" with something two or three weeks old and thus inflict on their readers (if anyone does more than just glance through and toss it away) something which was of little interest when new, let alone for the second time a few weeks later, it is an insult to out intelligence. If there is a paucity of original material, at least go back far enough into the past so that we will not remember the article. But to so affront us as to drag back the martyr story (on page eight of Friday's Varsity) which was word for word the same as a letter published about three weeks ago, indeed shows the editors' low opinion of the intelligence of their eaders. Nobody needs a hero that badly.

ILS SONT ARRIVES A TORONTO LE BON

Bienvenue

At 9:45 p.m. yesterday evening, a group of Varsity students waited breathlessly for the arrival of the Carabin special at Union Station. Amid usual train puffing and tooting were heard the puffing and tooting of the welcoming committee to the tune of the Old Toronto Mother Ever Dear and the response of the Carabins to the tune of "Le Chant des Carabins." Peeping from behind the smiling fedora may be seen Jack Pinns, head of the Carabins, and on the right Elizabeth Scroggie, co-chairman of Carabin week-end committee. Just out of the picture on the right is also, standing, Stan Schiff, the other half of the chairmanship of Carabin week-end committee. On the left is Norma McHale, IV UC, a member of the welcoming committee, who will help to show the Carabins around Toronto le Bon.

Les Francais font comme-ci Les Anglais font comme-ca!

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

Shouts of "Bienvenue" and "How ees eet weeth you?" touched off another Carabin weekend as Toronto students fought with their French and Carabin students did the same with their English.

The Carabins were given a rousing welcome down at Union Station, last night by a large delegation of Toronto students that included Drum Majorette Shirley Eckel, the Blue and White cheerleaders, and the Victoria College Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band (SGLIRPB), dressed in appropriate costumes.

The 40 students seemed visibly impressed by the reception that they received, and with a little co-operation from the Station Master the welcome might have gone on all night. However, this individual seemed mighty intent on getting bands, cheerleaders and students out of the station as quickly as possible, so the reception was cut short.

The cheerleaders and Miss Eckel displayed their prowess as acrobats to the tune of the "Varsity Song" and immediately after the Carabins did arousing rendition of "Le Chant Des Carabins", the University of Montreal official song.

One of the Carabins when asked where her suitcases were, said, "I have no bags, I stay in Toronto." On further inquiry it was found that the supposed Carabin was a St. Mike's type from Quebec City.

After the reception the Carabins were whisked up to Brennan Hall, where the official welcome really began. What was supposed to be a sherry party changed into a "crumpets and tea" affair much to the disappointment of The Varsity staff covering the event.

At the reception the Toronto hosts found their Carabin mates for the weekend and some of the men began to look over the field. It was agreed that the prospects looked very fine and hopes of a great weekend were expressed by many of the participants.

Maurice Maria, Grad Studies, said that he thought that the reception was tremendous, and was especially surprised at the command of the French language that some of the Toronto students displayed.

Professor D. M. Hayne gave in French (to those who could understand) the official welcome speech for the University of Toronto. After this the students repaired to the homes of their respective guests, to get some much needed rest in preparation for a very strenuous weekend.

Qu'est-ce que c'est que ca

Montreal par metro

Toronto, Dec. 3, (CUP):—Cassell's French Dictionary, defines the "CARABIN" as a horse-soldier armed with a long arquebus or carbine (colloq.) saw bones, medical student". But in recent years "CARABIN" has come to mean "just plain student", in English, and "a student attending the University of Montreal", to most University of Toronto students.

The University of Montreal (not McGill University), which the Carabins attend, is a prominent yellow brick structure at the top of Mount Royal, which commands a view of a good portion of the city. It is all one building, and there is no campus except for the halls and corridors within it. All the faculties are contained in it also, except for engineering (Ecole Polytechnique), as well as art and architecture (Ecole des Beaux Arts), which are both downtown.

Opened shortly before the Second World War, the University of Montreal now is the largest of French-speaking student institutions in the country—about 8000 to be exact.

Like its counterparts in France and other countries of Europe, it still adheres to the traditional system of education. In effect it is a graduate college, where all that students can receive is a master's or doctor's degree in some specific profession or subject in the humanities.

Students who enter have behind them what is called a baccalaureat degree. It is comparable to a high school and junior college course combined. However, in Quebec they are called classical colleges and provide a solid grounding in the classics, sciences, mathematics and philosophy. This is, in effect, a general background course prior to specialization in university.

For this reason, students entering a French-Canadian university are usually two or three years older than freshmen in English-speaking universities.

Two faculties have a particularly wide reputation. One is dentistry, the largest single professional faculty in the college. The other is a research department in endocrynology headed by Dr. Selyea.

He is revered almost as a demi-god, and many are the stories that are told about his accomplishments and abilities. A whole section of the university is given over to his work and a large staff does nothing but test animals and work on the research projects which he supervises.

One of the prize projects of the students' council at the University of Montreal is their store. It sells —besides books—clothes, crests, jewellery and other items that students may want. Not only is the sales staff made up of students, but all the profits are, of course, turned back to the student council.

As are all French-Canadian schools, at whatever level, Montreal is a clerical college run by prelates of the Catholic Church. Religion plays a large part in the students' lives.

Up to the present the University of Montreal has been a "street-car college". All the students, both men and women, live at home or rent rooms. However in the past few years $14,000,000 has been raised to build a new residence which is now under construction. Until it is finished, the Carabins, like the male students of University College, will have to continue foraging for themselves.

Femmes Francais Au Hart House Les Carabins Nous Menacent-ils

Toronto, Dec. 3 — (CUP) — Les Carabins sont arrives! Or as they would say in French, "How de do!"

The University of Toronto was invaded here tonight by students from the University of Montreal who are here to look over our fair university and city, and in the process spend a weekend of riotous living in true Carabin style.

Tomorrow the Carabins will be given the run of the campus in the morning, and will probably be popping in and out of lectures, labs, colleges, libraries, and the Hart House swimming pool during this time. At two o'clock they will amble over to Falconer Hall where they will take on all comers in a hot discussion on Canadian Culture, What It Is, and What the French and English-Speaking Canadian thinks of it. (Everybody is invited.)

In order to smuggle the female Carabins into Hart House during their visit, a special banquet will be held in the Great Hall at seven o'clock tomorrow evening, for both men and women. The speaker will be Professor Careless of the Modern History department at Toronto University. The banquet will be followed by a "party" which will help to "cement better relations among all concerned."

Saturday morning will be left free out of due respect for the party, the previous evening. At noon the visitors will have lunch at the Royal York Hotel, and then they will be taken on a conducted tour of Toronto and vicinity. This tour will end up at Victoria College Union at 3 o'clock where the cussion on "The Theories and Meaning of Education in French and English-Speaking Canada. (Again everybody is welcome to attend.)

At five o'clock the Carabins and their hosts will wend their way to Nobleton (a very unassuming

Even Colombian Poor Want University Education Says Consul Venagas

Even the poorest classes in Colombia make great efforts to send their children to University, said Dr. Alfredo Venagas, Colombian Consul General, to a meeting of the Spanish Club last Wednesday night. Dr. Venagas said that students could attend either a state-supported National University or one of the smaller private universities.

Dr. Venagas gave a short description of Colombian industry Colombian life. He said that Colombia's main product at the present time is coffee, but that his country will shortly enter the heavy industrial field when a new steel mill is completed.

"Yuletide celebrations in Colombia go on for five days before Christmas," said Dr. Venegas. "On Christmas Eve, Colombians go to each other's houses to pray and then enjoy an all night party."

The consul encouraged students to learn Spanish, and said "He who speaks one language is one person, but he who speaks two languages is two people."

Asia, Africa Rumblings

Freedom Is First Desire

"Self-government is preferable to good government to the East," said Professor G. C. Patterson, to the CCF club yesterday afternoon.

He said that the battle against hunger and a surge of nationalism help to turn Asia and Africa into "nations in ferment".

Patterson said the chief problem in Asia is the shortage of food; seventy-thousand babies are born every day, food production is falling behind, so two-thirds of the East goes hungry.

He told how the U.N. is improving the grades of rice, the staple food of the East, checking foot and mouth disease, and experimenting with new methods of fish-breeding. In Central Asia, he said the U.S.S.R. has been making rapid advances with reforms ing irrigation and other methods of improving the production of food.

"Nationalism has gained an immense hold of the East," said Patterson. "There is an inherent demand for independence and for social liberation with no lower classes."

He said China will have great influence on the future history of the world. He told how the United States kept on aiding Chiang, despite the corruption of his government, and the fact that his own officials were selling the aid to the Communists on the main land. He quoted White, from "Thunder out of China," who said that "Asia regards America as the last great bastion of reaction." He said if Mao can make an effective government with the whole people, a major readjustment in East West policies will be necessary. He felt the chief problem here, will be the difference in social policies and the relationship with China.

He said Japan is the most industrialized of these nations, with a big population and a shortage of land. It must face the problem of finding enough markets in the free world, against the tariff barriers of the United States. He felt that McArthur, who believed he had changed Japan in four or five years to a Christian democracy, was showing a complete ignorance of history.

In the Near East, he said that the Arabs were the chief factor. He felt that Britain and the U.S. should not continue to subsidize corrupt governments for security reasons, but should get the rulers to use some of their vast oil royalties to improve health facilities and living conditions.

In Palestine, he said there are dangers from a new Jewish state struggling for existence, and 250,000 destitute Arabs gazing down on the fertile fields they once owned.

In Persia, he said that the British and American governments are working together for the sake of oil investments and fear of Communism. Meanwhile the people are suffering under crushing poverty and a corrupt government.

In 1949 the Dutch gave up the control of Indonesia, he said, and it became a sovereign republic. Now the Indonesians want complete independence with a foreign treaty, he said.

He thought that the French would soon give up the struggle in Viet-Minh, although the United States had requested them to put up a strong front against Communism. He felt that the people would welcome the saving in money which would result from the loss.

India and Burma and Ceylon seemed to be the bright spots on the map to Patterson, because the British with their experience, saw what was coming and Attlee accepted the inevitable in friendly spirit. In Malaya they were not so wise.

The situation in Africa seems utterly black, according to Patterson. Egypt is in open rebellion, and there is a colour problem in the Central Asia Federation, where the elections are soon to take place. In Kenya, the Mau Maus are hungry for land, and discontented, because if they work in Nairobi they obtain only subsistence wages.

In the Sudan, which became self-governing this year, there are three million in the South, which is polytheistic, and has many languages. What is needed here, he thought, is a civilizer such as religion, which has elements of a higher type of civilization. He felt that Islam, would be the best choice, because it is simpler than Christianity, which emphasizes beliefs, not what one should do. The Chief problem in South Africa, is Apartheid, he said. The further development of the gold mines depends on obtaining more labour, yet there are still too many people on the land. He though that the controlling whites must find some other alternative to the policy of segregation, for it is an irritant not a solution.

Publication

Only three issues of the Varsity will be published next week — on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. After that, The Varsity staff will take a well-earned rest from their arduous labours and enjoy their Christmas Vacations.

Any advance publicity campus organizations wish printed in The Varsity should be briefly and clearly written, and submitted to The Varsity office by 4:00 p.m. on the day before publication.

World Cultures Similar Line Tells Psych Club

Cultures have become highly developed in isolation in various parts of the world, but now it throughout the world are all the same, Dr. W. Line said last night.

The more literate the people become the more complex matters become and according to one-of-six educationists who have come to the University of Toronto to study Western methods of education, one result is exposure to such things as McCarthy speeches and American comics. The three men and three women from Thailand, with Dr. Line, addressed a meeting of the Psychology Club last night in the Croft Chapter House. Dr. Line went to Thailand last summer to explore the possibility of setting up a research centre for child study in Bankok.

At the end of a year's study in Toronto, the Thai's will return to their homeland to set up study centres from a psychological point of view. An attempt is being made to establish study centres in widely different cultures where children can be studied in their natural habitat.

Such methods will be the same and conditions will be different from country to country. "UNESCO hopes to find some principles in child development which are independent of culture," said Dr. Line. "So far all study in child development has been done from a definite point of view, but the new idea is to try to find something more universal than anything done before."

"I hope that by next year we shall have such child study institutes in Canada, Birmingham, Geneva and Thailand, with some degree of common design," said Dr. Line The results of the groups will go into a common pool for cross-cultural studies.

One of the Thais asked what the goal of education is in Canada. Bud Hodinitt, IV UC, said he read a paragraph from an old teachers' manual which stated the object of education in Ontario is to train strong citizens with upright characters, but in his opinion we really don't know how to go about it. One Thai suggested that one of the aims might be the perpetuation of the form of Government in Canada as it is in Thailand where the children are indoctrinated to the form of government. One student said she felt this was more true in the United States.

Raps Progressive Education Trends

"Progressive education appeals to the intellectually lazy," said Principal Jeanneret last night. He was giving the last lecture in University College's centennial series. These lectures have dealt with the history of UC and the subject of literature as it applies to the various aspects of life.

Principal Jeanneret described the disciplinary value of the study of literature. "Patience, concentration and persistence are demanded," he said, "and the development of these qualities is part of the intellectual training obatined. The 'progressive' educationist so-called is contemptuous of such mental discipline, as he is of literature itself." He said that they have even found a substitute for reading, and that he had heard some one admit publicly that they are suspicious of all knowledge. Instincts and emotional urges mean more to them than does the evolution of an idea, he said.

"To the progressive educationist, ideas of great thinkers are dangerous because they are mentally fatiguing," said Principal Jeanneret. "Under the "modern" system, a student should study what he pleases, with an absolute minimum of precept and discipline, for "the progressive educationist requires amusement rather than effort; work and competition are old-fashioned ideas, revolting even." Such ideas are contrary to the conception of education of a man trained in the humanities, stated the principal. "We have faith in the efficacy of the study of literature as an educational discipline to prepare its devotees for living; whether it be in a milieu of art, of finance, or of science matters not."

"The real aim of the College is the teaching of the humanities," said Principal Jeanneret. "With this the administration is primarily concerned. Yet it has rendered other services to the students. The obtaining of scholarships for deserving students is one of these." "I would venture a rough estimate," said Principal Jeanneret, "that today something like two-thirds of the total amount of the tuition fees of all students of first and second class at examinations are met through this medium." "The other main preoccupation of the administration for the last fifty years has been the construction of an adequate Men's Residence," he said.

Shave Bombs Are Returned During Night

The three giant shave bombs are now back in their home with the Harry E. Foster Advertising Agency. The Hall Porter of Hart House, William Jordan, said that he received an anonymous phone call late Tuesday night informing him that the bombs were on the back porch of Hart House.

The bombs, used as an advertising stunt during the Grey Cup parade, had strayed from their carriers last Saturday afternoon in Hart House. They were returned on Wednesday to the advertising agency by the University Police.

Bruce Easson, of the Harry E. Foster Agency, said in a letter to The Varsity, "I would like to express my thanks to those who so kindly cared for our friends and assisted in their return to duty."

"Although the bombs no doubt had a hectic weekend, they are now cold sober and relatively undamaged. Since they really enjoyed themselves, if any University group at a future date wishes to extend to the bombs an invitation, we will gladly give them permission to assist in that group's campus activities."

Sell Slaves At Trinity?

Shades of Saudi Arabia! That will be the scene today when Abdul ben Abdul, the Used slave dealer, arrives with his harem on the steps of Hart House at 1 p.m.

Long remembered as Trinity and Victoria's most illustrious graduate, Abdul has returned to the campus at the request of his old alma maters, in the interests of their annual play — 'Much Ado about Nothing' by Hassaan Shakespeare.

Abdul's retinue will include a bevy of beautiful cheerleaders from Trinity and Vic, the St. Hilda's Pipe band, and three of his most exotic slave girls, which he has consented to give away free to the holders of lucky numbers, to the male members of the audience.

Lucky number tickets will be issued to all men, present, and three will be drawn as winners. These three lucky gents will be presented with two free tickets to Saturday evening's performance of 'Much Ado About Nothing,' and one of the beautiful slave girls to be his escort on that night.

Ticket Booth Burned Down Science Pays

Kingston, Nov. 27—(CUP)—Varsity and UBC burn effigies of Americans whose names start with 'Mc' but Queen's burn their football ticket booth.

Early Saturday morning of the Varsity weekend in Kingston the Richardson Stadium ticket booth was burned and the playing field littered with glass.

In keeping with Queen's tradition, engineer freshmen spent the night guarding the field. Their effectiveness may be questioned by the Engineering Society which must pay $80-$100 damages.

The office in the old observatory is bigger than the basement of UC which used to resemble the Black Hole of Calcutta five nights a week. The character in the rear, obviously of some "lesser breed without the law" is unidentified. Rumours are that he is a spy from the SAC.

Indian Handicraft Sale Scheduled For Hart House Again This Year

"The exhibition and sale of handicrafts from India which was so successful last year, will be held again in Hart House in two weeks," said Ian Scott, chairman of the Indian Sale.

"The 'Treasure Van will probably solve a lot of Christmas shopping problems for many people," added Scott. "There will be a great variety of beautiful hand-made articles on sale." These goods, including jade necklaces and scarves, brocade belts and ivory carvings, jewellery, the traditional saris, numbdahs and other woven materials will cost anywhere from 25 cents to $400 and will be on sale to the general public as well as to the University of Toronto Students. "These goods, not ordinarily available to Canadain purchasers will be sold well below their usual retail value," said Scott.

The Treasure Van, which is organized by World University Service, will open in the Hart House Debates Romm from 1 to 5 p.m. in the afternoons, and from 7 to 10 p.m. in the evenings, on December 14, 15, and 16. All proceeds go to WUS and will be used to assist universities in depressed areas of the world, especially universities in India, Pakistan, South East Asia, and the Middle East. Last year the proceeds from 15 universities which held the sale, grossed $35,000. The University of Toronto alone brought in close to $4,600.

The exhibition and sale is travelling through Canada during October, November and December, and after Christmas it will be sponsored in the United States by the World University Service of the United States

Jorgenson Rivalled

Oxford, Eng.—(Exchange)—It's an early school "vacation" for pretty Felicity Cooper, a co-ed who titillated this tradition-bound university town by posing as a young Frenchman and sneaking into dinner in a forbidden men's college dining hall.

Felicity's identity remained gallantly concealed until yeaterday. Her host, Jeremy Rundell, had been suspended by Oxford university authorities for having an unidentified woman in his all-male college after 7 p.m. But gossip caught up with her, and officials ruled the co-ed should share Jeremy's fate and be sent home for the rest of the term.

For her escapade she donned slacks and used eye-shadow on her chin to give it "five o'clock shadow". She is a student in one of the university's all - female colleges

To preserve her role as Rundell's French cousin, she asked that her dinner table neighbours repeat their jokes to her in French. But her reaction to the singing of songs in the undergraduate bar after the meal eventually gave the girl away.

Hart House Art Show Closes Entries Mon.

All ambitious artists or those who just paint for fun may enter their works of art in the annual Hart House undergraduate Art Show. Entries must be in the Undergraduate Office, Hart House, by next Monday morning Dec. 7.

Water-colors, oils, drawings and black and white . . . . all are in demand for the Show. Entries, which will be hung in the Art Gallery here, from Dec. 7-Dec. 19, are eligible for competition in the Inter-University Art contest to be held early in 1954.

"I expect a very exciting show," Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, said last night. In 1952, there were more than 75 entries, including oils, water-colors, drawings, etchings, woodcuts and sculpture.

Sculpture is discouraged, because there are no facilities in the Art Gallery for display. There is also the danger of damage to small pieces.

There are no prizes for the show. As Hart House is not a commercial Art Gallery, the pictures or works of art are not for sale. "But if someone wishes to buy one," McDowell said, "they are put in touch with the artist." Several pictures have been sold this way in recent years.

All art work have a good chance of being entered in the Inter-University Canadian Art contest in Ontario and Quebec.

"Here's a grand opportunity for showing the world your brand of art," McDowell said. "There are very few similar chances for amateurs to display their work," he added.

DRAMA PREVIEW

The Blood Is Strong

The first presentation of Lister Sinclair's new play, The Blood is Strong, by Jupiter Theatre, was an evening of good entertainment, for the production was polished and the acting excellent, but it was not a presentation of a good play.

The Blood is Strong tells of the joys and sorrows of a family of Scots settlers in Cape Breton—the sorrows mainly tacked on at the end. Mrs. MacDonald wants to have a pump, Mr. Macdonald wants to go back to Skye, Kate wants to get married and Jamie wants adventure. The fulfilment or outgrowing of each wish is the surface presentation of the play's central thought—that home is where the heart is. There was a faint suggestion in the final scene that now the New World was making its own history instead of following in the path of the Old, but this was too nebulous to be designated theme.

As a collection of incidents truthful, poignant or amusing The Blood is Strong is successful but as well-structured play it is not—it appears, indeed to have no structure at all. Perhaps Mr. Sinclair aimed at shapelessness but surely it is a noticeable and lamentable fact that Canadian drama tends all too often in this direction? If no one ever attempts anything higher than this our theatre cannot help but become eminently unsatisfactory. This structural looseness was most evident in the play's closing scenes which might well have been omitted, since they contributed nothing to character, plot or theme, spoiled what would otherwise have been an effective climax and left an impression of slush sentimentality which was not decreased by sweet music in the background. However, for anyone who is looking only for a good evening's entertainment, The Blood is Strong is certainly see-able.

The set, although admirable in its simplicity and effectiveness especially in the detail of the great evergreen tree, was a disappointment in that it did not keep the promise of originality and experimentation that Jupiter Theatre held out when it began the project of working on a stage with no proscenium arch. On the contrary the room's four walls were clearly if skeletally indicated and the audience excluded as effectively as from any stage complete with proscenium.

The quality of the acting was remarkably high in every part—every character created and sustained a human and convincing characterization. Ruth Springford as Mrs. MacDonald was lovely and affectionate, patient and wry in her portrayal of the pioneer mother. Her gesture of hugging the pump was beautifully right. Frank Peddic as the dour Mr. MacDonald gave a performance that was always apt and never overdone; he played with force and conviction. Margaret Griffin's Kate was a delightful girl, sunny and charming, while James Doohan as Barney Hannah, the could-be noisy frontiersman, played a difficult part with restraint and assurance. Madeline Hussey and John Atkinson as Mr. and Mrs. Morrison did very good work in making interesting moments of their small parts. Mr. Atkinson's stage presence was admirable although there were moments of conflict between his comparatively stylized acting and the complete naturalism of the rest of the cast.

In almost every aspect of its production The Blood is Strong was good theatre. Only the play itself achieved no higher level than that of popular entertainment. A highly diverting evening, by all means, but is diversion the only end of art?

Chamber Ensemble

Wednesday's five o'clock recital was put on by the Royal Conservatory of Music Chamber Ensemble. The happy choice of program provided great musical contrast — the Beethoven Trio in C minor, the Grieg Violin and Piano Sonata in C minor, and the Khatchaturian Trio for Violin, Piano and Clarinet.

In the opening Trio for voilin, piano and cello, the pianist, Dale Childs, was especially impressive. His clean and even runs in the Minuetto movement showed evidence of good technical training. Throughout the whole program we are aware of the consistently sure fingering and delicate phrasing of Mr. Childs. Carolyn Gundy, violin, and Ronald Laurie, cello, performed with the precision and grace so necessary in Beethoven. However Miss Gundy seemed at best advantage when playing the Grieg Sonato for violin and piano. Her big tone was most appropriate in beautiful Grieg melodies. This violinist plays always with a great deal of expression.

The Khatchaturian trio was performed by Dale Childs, Carolyn Gundy and Norman Glick, clarinet. The technically difficult passages of this trio were played with relative ease. Mr. Glick possesses a full, pure tone which would add quality to the tone of any ensemble.

It was gratifying to have the music room of Hart House filled with students who evidently do not have the misconception that chamber music is "musician's music". Although the full enjoyment of chamber music comes through participation, there is no reason to think that enjoyment of chamber music is any more limited to the participating musicians than is the enjoyment of Dixieland. It was a pleasure to listen to the Chamber Ensemble of Dale Childs, Ronald Laurie, Carolyn Gundy and Norman Glick

The movements of the Sibelius symphonies are not conventionally constructed. They do not depend so much on the contrast of one theme with another so much as on the gradual organic development of one theme within another — the natural evolution of a new melodic idea. An awareness of this extreme concentration of thought — a sort of sympathetic absorption in the movement of each of the inner harmonic parts of the orchestration — is essential to any valid interpretation of a Sibelius symphony. Sir Ernest MacMillan's playing of the Work on Wednesday night showed that he was quite conscious of the essential. He tried for, and often got, the originality of the Sibelius idea out of the rich, sonorous orchestration, the simple, clear-cut rhythms and the symphony is more definitely melthematic material, which in this odic than harmonic. There were, of course, some effects that relaxed from this concentration of thought. The Toronto Symphony has certainly not yet "mastered" Sibelius, but their Sibelius after all has not been drilled into them like their Tchaikovsky, or their Schubert.

The Fifth Symphony was the that opened with a Fantasia in Five Parts for Strings on one note, by Purcell, followed by an imaginative work by the English composer, Delius. The Fantasia in Five Parts was originally written for the organ, and the transcription for strings does not provide for the stirring climax that is achieved on the percussion instrument. Eventyr, or Once Upon a Time by Delius, is an exciting programme piece, and could have been more brilliantly conceived.

Mary Syme, the guest artist, ended the programme with a very sensitive interpretation of the E Minor Concerto of Chopin. It is very heartening to hear a Chopin concerto played with so much attention to the beautiful piano passages, and unusual that so young an artist should have learned them so conscientiously and played them so well.

St. Mary Magdalene Singers At Hart House Sunday Concert

Once again the Great Hall of Hart House will resound with alleluias, hosannas and sweet dulcimer as the St. Mary Magdalene Singers sing in a jubilant ring for the two hundred and fifty second concert of the Sunday series.

It is a 12-year tradition to open the University Christmas season not with Rudolph the Red-Nose-Mouse Two Back Teeth but with The Twelve Days of Christmas as sung by the choir conducted by Dr. Healey Willan.

Included in the programme will be a motet in honour of the Coronation, "O Lord, make thy servant Elizabeth", by Byrd and parts of the Missa Aeterna Christi Munera by Palestrina, and several Carols of which two were written by Doctor Willan.

At the close of the programme all those fortunate enough to squeeze into the Great Hall will have the privilege of being conducted by the hand that held the pen that wrote the arrangement for the final carol, the First Nowell.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Kirk Wipper, the chap who coaches Varsity's wrestlers, looks like one of his boys—the only way you can distinguish him from a thousand guys who roam the halls of the athletic wing is the fact that he wears a blue staff jacket. Of course, you'd find out in a hurry if you talked with him for a while—he's in love with amateur wrestling, one of the forgotten sports of the last decade. That's enough to set him apart, because simon-pure grappling has become a strictly participation deal, and not much to get excited about.

Kirk was mildly excited last night about his junior wrestlers. He's got fifty of these newcomers working out and they've been fighting every evening this week to cut the field down to nine pairs of finalists to tie each other in knots at tomorrow night's athletic night extravaganza in little old Hart House. This swarm of novices is unprecedented, to say nothing of encouraging, since these lads are tomorrow's intercollegiate bone-benders.

All the intercollegiate men have to be trained from scratch, so to speak, since wrestling is virtually unknown at the high-school level. That Wipper is able to teach them a fair amount of wrestling in a short space of time is evidenced by Varsity's showing in competition against other schools and clubs. And, once these freshmen get entangled in the sport, they become red-hot enthusiasts, much like their youthful coach. There must be something about the game.

Of course, most people associate wrestling with the events which are perpetrated at Maple Leaf Gardens every Thursday evening. With all due respect to the professional grunt and groan boys, who give the fans a terrific show, a comparison between the MLG bouts and what will be going on in Hart House tomorrow night is, speaking strictly from a wrestling viewpoint, like comparing Toscanini and Spike Jones. The interfaculty boys are practitioners of the sport as it was originally invented and they play it absolutely straight.

As such, of course, it isn't the most colorful sport in the world for the spectators. As a matter of fact, it can get pretty dull. But that's not the participants' fault nor is it the sport's fault: it's the spectators' fault. You've got to know somthing about the rules and methods or else: a program of college wrestling means something less than nothing. That's why you could do worse than be around at the beginning of the wrestling matches tomorrow night. That's when they'll do some explaining. Then you watch a few bouts and eventually you'll find that it's not bad at all. If you're lucky, you might even get to understand why the fellows get so excited about it.

Marilyn Monroe Slept Here

Niagara University is a fine place to play a basketball game. The only trouble is that their basketball team is too good. Pitting the Varsity Blues against the Niagara sharp-shooters is a sad mis-match. After all, these Purple Eagles are one of the most highly rated teams in the United States. The NCAA calls them third in the east and eleventh in the nation, which gives them a fair sort of an edge on the locals. A 92-29 edge, perhaps.

But it was worth the trip. Niagara U. has a field house in which they could very well run stock-car races in the summertime. It seats 4,000, to be exact, which is more than double the college's enrollment. The fans, a fair-minded bunch, cheer as hard for either team and one of the thrills of Wednesday's game was the prolonged ovation they gave Toronto's George Stulac when he fouled out in the fourth period. The rousing Toronto locomotive their cheerleaders produced struck a responsive chord, too.

Of course, they can afford to be good sports. Anybody would be a good sport with three players like Larry Costello, Ed Fleming and Charlie Hoxie on his team. If those boys don't make the first two All-American teams, they ought to ask for a recount.

Third Best Team In East Niagara Crushes Blues Intermediates Also Lose

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Dec. 3—The National Collegiate Athletic Association of the United States says that the Niagara University Purple Eagles are the third best team among the eastern colleges and the eleventh best in the whole country. Knowing that, one would be neither surprised nor disappointed to learn that the Eagles overwhelmed the Varsity Blues 92-29 here last night.

The Purple Eagles even surpassed their press clippings as they showed a high-powered first string and a strong bench and had the drop on the Blues right from the opening whistle. Toronto didn't get a field goal until partway through the second period when George Stulac flipped one home. The score was 21-4 at the time. By halftime, it was 33-12 and, after intermission, the Eagles found their scoring eyes. They posted 21 points in a row before the Blues could return the favor. By then, it was no contest.

Niagara's Larry "Cos" Costello was making his first start after being sidelined with an injured ankle. "Cos", who is considered a cinch to make the All-American team this season, didn't extend himself too much but dumped in seven baskets and a foul shot in three quarters of play. His showing was matched by a couple of starry stringbeans, Ed Fleming and Charlie Hoxie. Fleming scored 15 points and Hoxie was the game's top scorer with 18.

George Stulac was the best of the Blues, although he managed only two baskets. He passed and checked skilfully and, when he left the game after his fifth personal foul early in the fourth quarter, the crowd of more than 2,000 gave him a thunderous ovation. Captain Lou Lukenda scored seven points to lead the Blues and rookie Doug Scott scored six.

The Niagara frosh trounced Varsity Seconds 80-39 in the preliminary game as Sid Ludwig broke loose for 24 points. Jack Keable got 15, Ron Cowley 12 and Al McCraw 11. Jim Murray scored seven for the Baby Blues, with Ruby Richman getting six and Marv Larsen and Ron Stroud five each.

Meds On Top Rung Jr. Arts Gain Win

BY JOHN WILSON

With two goals by Arnold and Duff to break a first-period 1-1 tie, Senior Meds yesterday took over first place in Group I, registering a 3-1 victory over Senior Vic in the Arena. The Meds attack showed more finesse than that of the Scarlet and Gold, who were unable to clear the puck from their own end for as much as five minutes at a time.

Bill Hinder opened the scoring for Vic at 8:48 of the first, picking off a rebound which Meds goalie Walker couldn't seem to get rid of. At 16:45 Walsh slapped home the Doctors' first tally after a goal-mouth scramble leaving the Vic goaltender flat on his back. Lacking punch, the Vicsters were tied up in their own end for almost the balance of the period, and only Creighton's net-minding kept Meds from running up a higher score. Late in the period Plaxton grabbed a loose puck at centre ice and tore in on Walker who robbed him with a spectacular save to end the period in a 1-1 tie.

Meds made short work of the Vic defence in the first minute of the second as Arnold caught the disc out of a maze of players in front of the Vic net to put the Medsmen ahead 2-1. Carrying the play in this stanza the Medicine Men constantly pushed the Vic boys back until Duff culminated a beautiful passing play at 13:45 to make a final score of 3-1 for the Doctors. Bob Dale and Bill Hinder tried hard up front for the Scarlet and Gold along with Carscallen and Tweddle on defence, DeVeber, McDougall and Arnold were the bulwark of the Meds offence, while Shaw in front of Walker in goal held up the defence.

In an earlier game Junior UC edged a somewhat disorganised Trinity A squad, with a 3-2 win. UC overcame a 1-0 first period lead with three quick goals to hold down first place in Group II. Playing more as a unit as the period wore on, the Buttery Boys struck it rich when Ian McLeod flipped a pass to Stu Fisher in front of the unguarded UC net. Fisher pushed it in with Ostry way out of net on his back. The Red and White slipped in with a goal just as the period was ending when Standing caught Goodwin out of position to put a rebound in the net at 19:45.

Koshan and Sonley scored in the early minutes of the second stanza at 1:05 and 5:30 giving UC a 3-1 edge. From the whistle at the start UC kept the puck in the Trinity zone and after bewildering the Red and Black defence found a hole for the first tally. Johnny Goodwin failed to clear a long rebound and Bruce Sonley picked it up for their second of the period. Pete Russell potted the prettiest goal of the afternoon at 8:20 taking an overskated puck from Tom Riley at the Trinity blue line and breaking away to go in on Ostry. The Trinity attack gained more drive at this point but failed to knot the score as the game ended with UC out in front 3-2. By virtue of the victory Junior UC take over undisputed first place in Group II with two wins and a tie for five points. King and Wansborough held up the UC defence behind Tom Riley, Passmore and Standing on the forward line. Russell, Fisher and Lovering were good for Trinity along with Saunderson and McLeod on the blue line.

In Group III action, St. Mike's B bowled over S.P.S. II with a 7-0 shellacking. Bowles picked up a hat trick while Jerome, Drolet, Rodden and Lawless scored the rest. Dent B grabbed a 4-1 win over UC III in an early evening game. Frankel tallied the lone UC goal, while Ralph Holbert, Kinoshita, Simpson and Bigelow scored for the Dentists in a four goal splurge to overcome the early UC lead.

New Law Entry Wins Interfac Soccer Crown

By WIL JOHNSON

Playing into overtime, the Leagle Beagles edged Trinity College 2-1 on Wednesday afternoon to take the unofficial campus soccer crown. Featuring a defensive half-line more often seen on the ice in Varsity Arena with the Hockey Blues, the Beagles managed to keep the Red and Black boys away from Ted Luck in goal, but were slightly edged on field play. However Red Andison hopes alive with two tallies; Giraudy's in the second half and Andison's in the five-minute overtime session on a penalty kick.

The Beagles descended, en masse, upon J. E. McCutcheon in the Intramural office after the game, to demand the Arts' Faculty Cup, previously won by Trinity in Division I play. Actually both teams will have their names inscribed on the trophy which will remain in Hart House.

The game opened with the Lawyers bottling the Trinity offense up in the Red and Black area, but after about ten minutes of play, the machine broke loose and Brian Packer booted the ball past Luck, glancing off the goal-post as it went in.

At half time Trinity were enjoying a shaky 1-0 lead, and monopolizing the play. Lou Appleby constantly bolstered the Law attack with all sorts of invectives, the most popular being "Hotcha", which was echoed by the rest of the Beagles.

Late in the second half, Henry Giraudy beat Bill Crossin with a clean goal to knot the score at 1-1. Regulation time ended and the Beagles cried for another chance to show their strength. With only five minutes of extra time to try in, they managed to come out on top. Stan Cater, the Trinity captain, grabbed the ball in the open goalmouth, and Law were awarded a penalty kick. This is a great advantage as it's almost impossible to miss and Red Andison made sure of that, blistering it past Crossin for the winning goal. Bill almost got his hands on it but fell flat in a valiant effort.

Ted Luck in the Beagles' goal saved many a Trinity score with stellar play, while Bob Montgomery at full back, and Lou Appleby and Mal Hughes on defence were good. Doug Andison and Henry Giraudy were standouts on the front line, as they accounted for both goals. Stan Cater again was the best man on the field, and the Trinity cause was aided by John Revell and Gus Ivory on defence.

Blue Stars On Display Athletic Night, Saturday

Apart from the obvious financial advantage it presents to the hard-up male student, a Hart House Athletic Night is a masterpiece of entertainment especially suited to the Varsity taste.

This Saturday in the Hart House athletic plant, there will be the first A-Night of the year with a full programme putting on display the finest array of University athletes in the country. Instead of going to see a bunch of hardened pros play for pay in the arenas of sport, we are offered the chance to see our own fellow-students "shout and fight for the Blue and White" and the honour of the U of T.

Last year our Varsity Blues were the second best team in the Intercollegiate Basketball League, but this season they have higher ambitions and will be gunning for the top spot. Varsity fans get their first look at those great Blues when they come to the Athletic on the Albion College cagers. HH Archers In Autumn Shoot

The Hart House Archery Club is holding its annual Pre-Christmas Shoot tonight at the Drill Hall 119 St. George St., at 8:00 p.m.

Captain of the shoot, Joe Stipec, has arranged for ten targets to be set up, with five archers to each. Incentive for archers-aspiring is the magnificent door prize-a large chicken. For the less fortunate participants, who miss out on the fowl, there will be other awards with the winner on each target getting one.

Attendance is open to all, especially ladies. Experts and beginners are equally welcome. Refreshments will be served when the shoot is completed.

Medicos Defeat UC Freshmen In Basketball Quarter-Final Game

Meds "A" snatched the quarter finals of the women's interfaculty basketball loop last night from a hard-fighting UC Freshie squad. As the top team of League V, the Red and Whites put up a tremendous battle in a well-played game that ended in a 23-14 win for the mighty Meds.

Action was strong from the first minute of play. Sally Wallace, as is expected, was a major contributor to the score sheet, accounting for 12 of the Medsters' 23 points. The team of Bailey and Littlejohn tallied 11 between them for U. The game opened with a bang as Joan Elliott scored in the first seconds. Two plays later, Sally Wallace dropped a lovely shot, the first of a long string. UC broke into the scoring end of the game with free shots of Meds' fouls. Never underestimate the power of the free throw. Almost half of the Freshies' total was made with these shots. Wallace ended the quarter tallying two more baskets for the Doctors to put them ahead 10-5.

In the second period, Elaine Bassin, UC, and Doris Kerr, Meds, starred with two hoops apiece. Kerr, last night, had the valuable asset of being able to know where that ball was going and how to be there when it arrived. Despite their almost brilliant play, Meds had nine fouls on them at half-time against only four on Freshies. They still lead by a healthy 15-9.

Things slowed somewhat in the third quarter with only one basket being snared, and that by Meds. Both squads made up for the slack period in the last part of the match. They broke loose with some of the best ball we've seen this season. Kerr exploded in a lovely play off Wallace who followed up with two wonderful hook shots that ended the scoring for Meds. From then on, it was UC's turn to shine as Bailey and Littlejohn performed about Medsters' hoop. They left it till too late strategies however. Meds' 'A' were well ahead when full time was called.

Guards in last night's game were great to say the least. Sally Sarles shone under Meds' hoop to in the game to start their fancy mar the progress of many a UC rush.

And now as a result of last night's victory, Meds' 'A' are slated to play the winners of League IV next week. Should be a great one.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

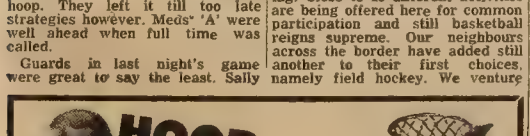
The basketball season is over the hill. With pretty close to a full season time is shaping up for the quarter finals which began last night. As usual this year saw a big turnout with 22 teams competing in the interfaculty loop.

Basketball has something no other sport can touch in women's athletics in this province. Why? Well we'll bite. It may be that along with volleyball, it is the most preferred sport for PHE classes in high school or it may be that facilitities in the Eastern provinces have been limited to basketball favouratism.

In any case, there should be more of a variety. Women's sports are quickly being run into a deep rut and this must be curbed. The only way to stop this trend is to train Canadian sport leaders in a variety of athletic fields. This has been going on ever since PHE courses were brought into Universities. It is the only escape from specialization along with raising funds for ample facilities.

This year two new sports entered interfaculty ranks in this university—namely archery and fencing. Close to 13 different activities are being offered here for common participation and still basketball reigns supreme. Our neighbours across the border have added still another to their first choices, namely field hockey. We venture to say that there are many girls on this campus who have never even plaed or seen such a game yet it is one if not the top ranking sport among the US college ladies.

Field hockey could come into its own here. Weather conditions in the spring and fall are perfect. The University is well equipped and the PHE course has been giving concentrated instruction in this field for years. Still the only games of field hockey we see are those played during the PHE classes in the Fall. Colleges in the United States have opened camps which are run solely for the instruction of this sport for the girls. Our closest parallel to athletic camps is the OATC camp which offers instruction in a variety of athletics.



We would like to see a little initiative in the University ranks to bring about one or two field hockey events. The stuff and talent are here. It's up to you from now on.

town) where old "acquaintances" of Friday evening will be renewed, and where there will be skits, square dancing, etc.

After church on Sunday morning, the Montreallers will have lunch at the homes of their hosts and then go to a farewell tea which is being given by the French Clubs on the campus, at Falconer Hall. Then off to the station for the final "Au Revoir until February."

By LEO MADDEN

Every year someone writes an article on the inadequate facilities for basketball and the poor accommodation for spectators in Hart House. They have tried to make the students of the University see that the present situation is unfair to both the players and spectators. Perhaps this one will have a little more effect since it is written by one who has had to play on the undersized court provided for basketball here on the campus.

When I first came to Toronto University, I was surprised to see the small court and the one section of bleachers used for the intercollegiate games. However I was told that basketball was not important in Canadian universities and therefore the facilities were adequate for the demands. But last year I had a chance to get around and see what the other universities in Canada had to offer their students. Every other university in our intercollegiate league has a regulation floor for basketball and seating for two or three times the number that hangs from the track during the Varsity home games. Even the high schools in Toronto have better facilities for basketball than we have here at the University. Forest Hill and Saint Michael's are two that make the Hart House court look a poor second class.

The coaches and players try their best to develop a team that will bring a championship to the University. They do very well considering the conditions that they are subjected to. Constantly the team has to change its style of play when they move from the Hart House "cracker box" to the regulation floors of the other Canadian universities. As a player and part of a team that had to undergo this change, I can say that it distorts the effectiveness of the team and the individual player alike.

Those of you who came to the games know that the seating capacity is not even sufficient for the intramural leagues followers, much less the crowds that come on athletic nights.

The Hart House court, I am sure, was perfectly in proportion with the game for many years after its construction. But like everything else in our world, the game has developed. The tempo of play has increased, and the "possession" game of the 20's and 30's has been blotted out by the "race-horse" game of the present day. The colleges and universities in the United States and Canada have made advances in their facilities in accord with the demand. However, here at Toronto, the largest university in Canada, we go on playing or trying to play the modern game on the court of the 20's.

There are two proposed solutions. One: build that field house which would include a student union as well as a basketball court of regulation size. Or, purchase a portable wooden floor similar to the one they use for games at Maple Leaf Gardens. Basketball could then be played in the arena, thereby supplying a suitable court and adequate seating accommodations.

Knox Evens Lacrosse Finals

The Knox College lacrosse team had been counted out of the Division Two playoffs of interfaculty lacrosse, after they dropped the first game of their best-of-three final series to the powerful Pharmacy squad. But the experts who had been relegating the theologs to the sidelines weren't counting on a fellow named Ken Kent.

Kent put his team right back in the running last night when he sored six goals to beat the pill-pushers single handed. The final score was 7-4. Bud Gillap scored three for Pharmacy.

Two quarter-final games were played in intramural volleyball yesterday. Trinity 's spotted Pre-Meds IIA a one-game lead, dropping the first 15-5, and then came back to beat the medsmen 15-11 and 15-13 to win the set. Meds' Thirds beat S.P.S. V 15-6, 14-16, 15-7.

Carabins, Entrez

Toronto welcomes you to Toronto, Les Carabins.

You are here on one of the worthiest activities between the Universities of Montreal and Toronto. You are on this Carabin exchange weekend because in each of you is reflected the desire for greater understanding between French and English-speaking students. For this reason you are especially welcome.

Throughout your busy and short weekend, we hope that one fact will be deeply impressed upon you—that English-speaking students are not very different from yourselves. In your discussion groups, in the lecture rooms and at your parties we hope that the traditional language barrier will be swept away. We hope this weekend will develop a friendship which will effectively reduce the distinctions of Canadian national existence.

We know this is the main reason behind Carabin Weekends.

The University of Toronto campus is a big place. It may appear unfriendly, but don't be afraid of it for it has much to offer in the way of warmth and understanding. We are glad that you are in our midst; and we hope that you will carry that belief home with you.

Do not judge our University by its size and cold greyness. Judge it by your hosts and the people you meet, for these make up our University.

Carabin Weekends are not restricted to any particular group of students, yet so few participate. We hope that in the course of the weekend activities more and more of the Toronto students will be attracted to the discussions and debates as well as the entertainment.

Understanding is a word quite flippantly hurled around on university campi. But in the case of the Montreal-Toronto exchange it can be put to real use.

We hope that you will take back with you some of the flavor of this University. This is Toronto Varsity and these are English-speaking Canadians.

But at the same time we have been practising up on our French. We will try, as best we can, to show that French is not a "foreign language" to us. And who knows, we may even learn the first couple of lines of "Aupres de ma blonde" or "Bonhomme, bonhomme, sais-tu jouer".

Really True To Form

Our friend Senator Joe, is really running true to form. His challenge to the Americans have come out into the open.

Yesterday he, like the loyal Republican that he is, urged Americans to send telegrams to his "boss" condemning Eisenhower's foreign policy. McCarthy's policy was the right policy and any other policy is "a blood trade with the enemy", he claimed.

The pattern of the rise of ruthless dictators is being used by Senator Joe. First, the hysterical, emotional challenge to "patriotism"; then the overthrow.

That Story Again

The Unjust Bar

The second of a series of two articles by the president of the University Law Club discussing a new aspect of the feud between the University School of Law and Osgoode Hall.

By R. A. F. MONTGOMERY

One may reasonably ask in the case of a University of Toronto Law graduate, why should one year of articles outside the Province, plus $1,500 admit a person to the Ontario Bar, whereas the same person, if he stays in Ontario, must follow the two years of articling, etc., as required by the Law Society? This is a question "The Benchers" the elected representatives of the Law Society have yet to answer. Their white paper on the whole issue, published in the Spring of 1952, may be called an attempt at clarifying their position, but I defy anyone to find, in this paper, any rational basis to support their case. There is a semblance of emotional appeal based on tradition, prestige and the fact Osgoode Hall is the "Seat of Justice in Ontario." How valid is this claim, when one considers the fact that Ontario is the only province in Canada whose Law Society withholds full recognition from graduates of a University Law School. "The Benchers" would have a point if the standards at the University of Toronto Law School were not up to those of Osgoode Hall. President Smith in one of his Annual Reports has said, "It is a mere statement of fact to declare that the University of Toronto has now the strongest staff for teaching and research ever assembled in any Canadian Law School." This statement and the fact a university graduate is recognized in every other common law jurisdiction in Canada, the United States and the Commonwealth Countries eliminates any question of relative standards.

THAT A JUSTIFIABLE claim can be overlooked in law is not unusual, where there is no precedent or general principle to support a claim. The matter is left by the courts for the legislature to set it right. In this case it would appear "The Benchers" can find no precedent to support the full recognition of more than one Law School, nor any general principle that more than one law school on an equal basis with Osgoode Hall is a good thing. Therefore it would appear the matter should fall to the Legislature to set right and what better body could make the petition than the Board of Governors of the University, who obviously support the existence of the Law School.

HAVING SHOWN THAT the University Law School is not fully recognized, what is it that the students seek?

1. The elimination of lectures in the fourth year at Osgoode Hall.
2. A fair and equitable period under articles.

If "The Benchers" feel a prior degree is necessary before the legal training is commenced, then this is not impugned. However, as a separate issue, the requirement of a prior degree as a prerequisite for legal training is questionable.

These appear to me to be the demands of the students — are they unjust?

Let's Make A Distinction

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The joint letter of Mr. Burbridge and Mr. Gilchrist raises an interesting question: "Who decides what is truth?" Does the Catholic Church have any more authority in the matter of truth than any other "human organization"?

I believe the question can hardly be treated with fairness without making a distinction. There are truths within the competence of human reason and there are other truths which have been revealed by God.

Within the realm of purely human truths, I think all would agree that we should look to the decision of human reason, particularly when it is specially qualified to judge. Thus, in a question of science we respect the judgement of the scientist, as in a question of history we respect the judgement of the historian.

Since human reason, however, is not infallible, truth is not easy to obtain without the admixture of error so that in the realm of purely human truths the best practical policy sometimes is to let truth grapple with error, hoping that eventually truth will prove the victor.

But what about decisions regarding divinely revealed truths? Some of these truths are mysteries beyond the grasp of natural reason. Reason assents to such truths only on God's authority by an act of faith, not on rational evidence. Can they be left to the judgemen tof men alone?

It seems that if God did not give men, besides revelation, also a living teacher existing to the end of time and endowed with the power of interpreting revealed truth without danger of error, we would have no objective way of deciding the meaning of divine revelation.

Catholics believe that there exists such a living teacher in the Church which Christ founded and that, unlike any mere human organization, the Church has been given authority to make decisions in matters of divinely revealed truth.

Moira Somerville,
I St. Michael's.

Lack Of Revelation

The Editor,
The Varsity:

So much has been said in the last few days concerning tolerance, intolerance, Catholics, Protestants, etc., that I have become interested from my bed of apathy. However, there has been one thing that they have all had in common, complete lack of revelation of fact. I am not going to comment on this quotation, merely to give it. It is taken from a Jesuit paper, "Civilta Cattolica" issued at Rome in April 1948, and serves as a Roman Catholic declaration of policy concerning religious freedom.

"The Roman Catholic Church, convinced, through its divine prerogatives, of being the only true Church must demand the right of freedom for herself alone, because such a right can only be possessed by truth, never by error. As to other religions, the Chruch will never draw a sword, but she will require that by legitimate means they shall not be allowed to propagate false doctrine. Consequently, in a state where the majority of the people are Catholic, the Church will require that legal existence will be denied to error, and if religious minorities actually exist, they will have only a de facto existence without opportunity to spread their beliefs. . . . In some countries Catholics will be obliged to ask full religious freedom for all, resigned at being forced to cohabitate where they alone should rightfully be allowed to live. . . .

"The Church cannot blush for her own want of tolerance, as she asserts it in principle and applies it in practice.

Adrian Adamson,
II Philosophy.

Carabin Farewells Both Sad and Glad For 7th Annual Visit

By GRIFF CUNNINGHAM

Well the Carabins have come and gone for the seventh consecutive year; and the Toronto hosts may rest assured that they have all had a terrific time. From the moment they arrived in Toronto the Carabins were busy in some form of activity, either educational or otherwise.

Friday was devoted mainly to educational pursuits, then, after the banquet in Great Hall, the Carabins and their hosts went to a party at the home of Liz Scroggie, co-chairman of the Carabin committee. It has been reported that, although this party went on far into the night, no serious damage was done to Liz's house.

Saturday morning was devoted to sleep, until the noon hour, when the week-enders were invited to the Royal York Hotel for a lunch sponsored by a certain Montreal manufacturer of invigorating liquids. The ice was broken both literally and figuratively. Then the Carabiners were taken on a tour of our great city; this event must have been included because of the lack of any other programme, for why anybody would want to be taken on a tour of Toronto is open to serious debate.

After another educational period, the Carabins and their hosts took off for the quiet little hamlet of Nobleton. Box lunches made up the supper meal and then square dancing followed. For this we must give our guests an E for effort, although some of them were better than their "western" hosts.

Skits and more square dancing were next on the list. The Carabiners showed great talent in the skits that they performed. The Toronto students displayed a remarkable ineptitude in the French language.

Sunday ended the programme with Sunday mass, and dinner at the hosts' homes. After the pleasure of the home-cooked meal, all the Carabins and their hosts were the guests of the combined campus French clubs for a farewell reception which was both happy and tearful. The final au revoirs were said as the Montreal-bound train left Union station.

The whole week-end did much to educate both the French Canadian and Toronto students in the problems that face both groups in cementing better relations, and learning the problems that face us in bringing about a more united Canada.

In the many discussions, both formal and informal, it was found that the problems facing us are mutual problems, and week-ends such as the one just held can go a long way to resolving our problems.

Similarities Are Most Important Bi-Cultural Study Groups Decide

The same view on the study of two different problems was given by faculty members at the Carabin seminars in Falconer Hall on Friday and in the Vic Union on Saturday.

In the Friday seminar Prof. Lynch of the philosophy department of St. Michael's College said, "It is a grave danger and grave misrepresenting of the case to look for differences," continuing, "It is much more important to look for similarities."

Professor Hayne of University College's French department, in summing up Saturday's education seminar commented on the study of the French and English Canadian schooling systems just completed by the Carabin seminar. "There are fundamental similarities and I think we should work towards these," said Prof. Hayne.

Three papers were read on the topic of culture in English and French Canada. Pat McColl of Toronto stressed the fact that there were two very separate economies in Ontario, agriculture which is the longest established, and industry as represented by oil, automotive and steel.

"No one writes for Canadians only but for English Canadians or French Canadians," said Miss McColl. Summer theatre groups springing up all over were cited as "evidence of more awareness of culture in Canada."

Roger Dufresne of the University of Montreal defined culture in the French-Canadian sense as "quality of mind". "Our relationship with France helps us to maintain a different culture from Americans or English Canadians," said Dufresne.

He outlined the emphasis placed on philosophy and allied arts in the Quebec educational system and discussed the influence of history on their culture. "The Brittanical regime," said Dufresne, "was one of the best things for our culture". In closing he posed a question to the group instead of the customary summary, asking, "Do we help you to resist the American influence?"

Discussing Canadian culture in general, Prof. Lynch commented on the effect of culture on education systems. "The two culturally different atmospheres have produced two different educational systems". He added, "English-speaking people, no matter how hard they try to do so, just do not understand the role of religion in French - Canadian education."

"You don't try to melt, you don't try to destroy, you recognize and accommodate," said Prof. Lynch in discussing the coincidence of two cultures. In concluding the formal part of the first seminar he commented, "I think something valuable must come out of this sort of inter - university conference." The afternoon was concluded with informal discussion by small groups.

Pea Soup Anyone?

Combining a box lunch social with a square dance, the Montreal Carabins were treated to a rural evening Saturday, in the town of Nobleton. The lunches were to be auctioned off, but that country air must have proved too much.

Divorced From Community

Universities Too Large

Educational systems were thoroughly discussed on Saturday afternoon in two seminars on "Education—Why and How". The place was the Vic Union and the event was the Carabin Weekend.

In the first paper Fernand Cote, speaking on behalf of the Carabins, tokd of the need in Quebec for people with more education. He said, "In our culture an educated person takes a prominent place in society." He referred to the educated of Quebec as "the pillars of the French-Canadian community".

John Roberts, III UC, confined his remarks to blasting the Ontario system of education, including our university education. He said that in our professional faculties at the University of Toronto, a student is prepared only to fill a job, with a steady income. On the other hand the majority of arts students have no conception as to what they are going to do upon graduation.

"Education in Ontario," he said, "is arranged to meet the needs of an industrial society." He said there are far too many students in the universities of Ontario, so that the lecture system had gradually displaced the seminar method.

He said, "As the university gets larger and larger it has less influence in the community. Now the university is no longer part of the community but an institution totally divorced from the community."

Cool Cars

And Hot Drivers

People are funny — especially when they are driving. It doesn't matter what they're driving either. It can be anything, — car, motorcycle, bicycle, motor-scooter or pogo-stick. It doesn't matter.

Put 'most any human being be hind a steering wheel and you get a Jekyll-Hyde reaction. The reaction is immediate and it is complete.

It is generally signalized by bulging eyes, abusive language, hunching of the back, a deep frown, frothing at the mouth and the appearance of a hole running directly through the head. This condition remains until the person steps from behind the wheel.

This plague knows no bounds. It is prevalent in all age groups, although the young are especially susceptible. It strikes both men and women. Alcohol and lack of sleep make the condition worse.

Since there is no easy cure all you can do is discuss the various forms of the disease, of which there are a countless number.

First and foremost there is the hot-rodder type. He takes some old heap, hops it up to the breaking point, and then goes around town making like a jackrabbit. He is easy to spot by the blur of colour that he makes as he goes by. Quite often there is more than one blur of colour because this type likes to travel in groups. They can be found anywhere — city streets, highways or frequently the police station.

PARK? Next in line is Joe Lover, the one-armed bandit. Since mama told her darling daughter not to park on dates, she (the daughter that is) allows her honey-bucket to drive her home with one hand or less on the wheel. With a hydramatic it's not so bad, but there's lots of difficulty when you have an old clunk with a floor shift. This, no doubt, accounts for the fact that old clunks constitute the greatest number of parked cars.

In the class by himself is the drunk driver. You may find him driving very fast or very slow. He may be driving very fast or very slow. He may be driving in a straight line, weaving or angling off to the right or the left. Often he is simply stalled in the middle of the street.

Although it is generally difficult to tell whether a driver is drunk or not, a talented observer will realize that the drunk driver is not frowning. The drunk is recognisable by his (her) attitude: "of course, I can drive! Carry me out to the car and I'll show you."

Next in line is the "safe" driver. He is best defined as one who drives carefully for four blocks after seeing a horrible accident. He often takes on the "holier than thou" attitude. He lives on no brains, and a suspended license.

Another class to be considered is the "different" driver. He likes to do things differently. He has a whole bag of tricks. One of his favourite tricks is shifting without the clutch. This can be done, but only after a great deal of experience — in other people's cars.

Then there's the "bulldog" driver. You can't miss him. Pot belly, black cigar, and powder-blue Cad. The kind who sells a car when the ashtrays are full. Yes, sir! Two fish tails and a brain to match.

Look down any white line and you'll find one of them straddling it. They usually give you that "I could - beat - you - any - time" look.

The weaver is another common driver-type. He doesn't have to be inebriated, but it helps. You'll find him almost anywhere where there's heavy traffic.

A very special variety of driver is the point-maker. He chases pedestrians. "All in fun of course. Chuckle, chuckle." He has a definite point system arranged. Hitting the plain old garden variety pedestrians gives him ten points, with a two point bonus for each broken bone. Widows and little children bring 25 points.

Once a year the points are added up and the regional winners compete for regional championships. Chickens are used in the nationals because:

(1) Pedestrians have become scarcer due to the large number eliminated in the local and regional contests, and (2) chickens are more fleet-footed and harder to hit. Losers get the chickens and the winner receives a red 1954 Buick, complete with spiked bumper, unbreakable headlights, and a gold ring hood ornament for sighting pedestrians.

The gutter rat is that fellow who always whips into the gutter just as the light turns green and races out in front of you in a cloud of smoke. The slowpoke is the guy who goes twenty to twenty five miles per hour — everywhere. The first impression you get of him is that his car is powered by six mice in a treadmill.

The gunner is the guy who speeds up as you pull out behind him and gives you that "You'll - pass - me - over - my - dead - body" look. Last and most common of all, is the Flash Gordon type. Speed — at all costs, is his motto. He pulls every trick in the book (in the police record book, that is).

The Flash Gordon variety is so common they've even selected songs for them to sing.

At 45 mph: "Highways are happy ways."

At 55 mph: "I'm but a stranger here; Heaven is my home."

At 65 mph: "Nearer my God to thee."

At 75 mph: "When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there."

At 85 mph: "Lord, I'm coming home."

The above Nativity Scene, done in wood carvings and set into the alcove in front of the Hall Porter's desk, Hart House, was installed last Thursday by the T. Eaton Co. in co-operation with the House Committee. It will be the focal point of the Hart House Yuletide decorations for this year. The windows in the alcove have been blue-filtered and a silver star hangs over the scene. The base of the display was designed especially for this exhibit while the carvings themselves have been used before. It cannot fail to catch the eye as one walks into Hart House through the main entrance. The House Committee members and their friends will decorate tonight to complete the Christmas theme.

Religious Tableau A First For H H

The central point of this year's Hart House Christmas decorations is a beautifully designed Nativity Scene which strikes the eye as you enter the main door of Hart House. "This Nativity Scene was designed as the focal point of our Christmas decorations to stress the religious significance," said Warden McCulley.

The Warden pointed out that all, without regard to religious background, could appreciate the tableau for its artistic beauty. "This House had its origin in a Christian spirit but with a sense of tolerance, dignity and appreciation of other religious points of view." "It stands as a work of art, to be appreciated as such," said the Warden.

The tableau, set in the alcove in front of the Hall Porter's desk, is composed of wood carvings, against a background of picture windows which set a religious motif and the windows behind have been set with blue filters to give the effect of sky. The total set was prepared for the display by the T. Eaton Co. but the carvings themselves have been shown before.

"If Christmas misses the religious significance," said Warden McCulley, "it has no meaning at all." "This is a little more significant than pine wreaths, Santa Claus and tinsel. It is dignified and in keeping with the general pattern and design of the House."

This is the first time that a Nativity Scene such as this has been set up in Hart House, according to Warden McCulley. The scene was the first part of the House Committee's annual decoration plans to go into effect. It was brought in piece-meal and set up Thursday morning.

This Sunday afternoon, the House beong open to guests for the last time this year, is an ideal occasion to bring the lady of your choice or anyone else you wish to see this exhibit.

Yuletide Far From Home Cheered By H H Dinner

One bright spot in a Christmas away from home — that's the idea behind the annual Hart House Christmas dinner, to be held this year on December 18.

roduced about 23 years ago by the former Warden Bickersteth, the dinner is held in Great Hall for members of the House from foreign countries. Also, members from distant points in the United States and Canada who are not returning home or spending the vacation with relatives or close friends are invited.

"It is an effort on the part of the House to provide a festive family dinner for those students who would otherwise miss the intimate family celebration," explained Warden Joseph McCulley last night.

"Invitations have been sent to as many people as we know," he added, "but due to changes in addresses we may have missed some." All guests for the Christmas dinner are asked to apply at the Warden's Office before 5 p.m., Friday, December 11.

Good food, good entertainment have been the tradition of previous dinners. It is to be held this year at 6:45 p.m., Dec. 18 — the last day of the term. With about 35 foreign countries usually represented, the number of dinner guests has expanded to about 150 members.

The members of the House committee of Hart House will assist Warden McCulley as hosts. Representatives from different countries will be introduced to the rest of the group.

Varsity Group Campaigns For Federal Scholarships

A programme of action designed to acquaint Varsity students with recommendations of the Massey Commission for extensive federal scholarships and bursaries for University students, has been planned by a sub-committee of the local NFCUS Committee, it was announced following a meeting of the Massey sub-group held Thursday at five in Victoria College.

Committee plans to promote student backing of the Massey recommendations with a view to future campaigns of student lobbying to obtain implementation of the report include requests to Student organizations to go on record in support of the Massey scholarship plans, requests to faculty and other debating organizations to debate topocs and general publicity for the Massey recommendations.

NFCUS sub-committeemen also stated they would approach the University administration for assistance and advice in the conduct of their campaign. They felt that this support would become doubly important when student support for their efforts justified a direct approach to the federal government by students asking implementation of the Scholarship and Bursary recommendations.

Recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Art, Letters and Sciences were for 400 $1000-National Scholarships, and 8000—$500-bursaries, to be financed by the federal government and to be made available to students throughout Canada.

Members of the NFCUS subcommittee seeking to build student support for demands that these recommendations be implemented include Marg. Norman II Pre-Meds, Don Stevenson II Vic, Jack McLeod III SPS, Earl Berger III UC, John Barnes III Vic, and Norman Chalmers II Law.

I.R.C. Meet H. A. Mowat Will Speak

"The United Nations and the Palestine settlement" will be the topic of an International Relations Club (IRC) meeting tomorrow evening. The speaker is the National Director of the Canada-Israel Association, Mr. H. A. Mowat.

Mowat is also Assistant to the Chairman of the World Committee for Palestine. In this capacity he has spent two years on liaison work with the United Nations, and has collaborated on Committee work with Dr. Ralphe Bunche.

He is a member of the National Executive of the UN Association in Canada, Editor of the Canada-Israel Reporter, and member of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

The meeting will be at 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday Dec. 8 at Falconer Hall.

History Talk

Professor John H. Franklin of Howard University will visit the University of Toronto today. Professor Franklin will speak during the regular lecture periods at the Department of History. He is the author of From Slavery to Freedom.

Mr. Franklin will also speak to a combined meeting of Graduate Students and the Modern History Club tonight at eight o'clock. His subject will be "Recent Developments of the Status of Negroes in the United States". The meeting will be held at Flavelle House.

Literary Issue

The deadline for the annual literary issue of The Varsity is January 15. The issue itself will be published early in Febrauary and will display all that the Toronto undergraduates have to offer in the fields of poetry (serious and light), short stories, essays, photographs and cartoons.

Prizes are awarded in the various fields by competent judges. If no entry merits an award none will be forthcoming, subject to the discretion of the judges.

MacLure To Lecture On Faulkner's Novels For Library Evening

The third monthly Hart House Library Evening is scheduled for tomorrow evening when Dr. M. MacLure of Victoria College will discuss the novels of William Faulkner.

The enthusiasm with which the past two evenings have been greeted has forced the Library Committee to be prepared — with plenty of extra chairs — this time. At November's talk, the appearance of some eighty-five students threw the committee into a mild panic and extra seats were dragged in from every room in Hart House.

Dr. MacLure is a new member of the Victoria English department. His lectures have become a feature attraction and Vic students who confess to skipping one of them are ever after considered by their mates to be a little odd.

Dr. MacLure has studied at Acadia, John Hopkins, Queen's and Toronto Universities. He was awarded his M.A. at Queen's and his doctorate at Toronto. He began teaching at Prince of Wales College, PEI, was a lecturer in English on the Engineering Faculty at Queen's, lectured at University College from 1946 to '49, and came to Vic from Winnipeg's United College where he headed the English department.

Recently, Dr. MacLure has been doing some research on the works of Faulkner and the Paul's Cross Sermons.

Meeting is at 7:30 tomorrow night in the Hart House Library, and women are welcome.

Yel Lectures In French At Vic Meeting Tonight

Jean-Pierre Yel, French scholarship student at Emmanuel College, will speak to the Victoria College French Club at 8:15 p.m. this evening. His speech, completely in French, will concern social problems in Alsace-Lorraine.

Yel was born in Nancy, Lorraine, and has spent most of his life in the Alsace-Lorraine area. He attended the University of Strasbourg, where he won a scholarship in theology. He is now attending Emmanuel and writing a Bachelor of Divinity thesis.

After the speech, there will be a session for "Twenty Questions"—in French. As this is a special Christmas meeting, there will be group singing of French Christmas Carols. "We expect Le Pere Noel direct from France for the occasion," said Keith Spicer, Publicity Director for the club.

What's New

Around The World

Three of five Prague high school students who fled their homeland because of political reasons, have managed to reach their goal of West Berlin.

Earlier this year the five students were arrested for political reasons and so decided to flee Czechoslovakia to live under democracy. Armed with three pistols, the group clashed twice with members of the German "people's police" after they had successfully crossed the German border. Each time they ran afoul of the German police, one of the band was shot and captured.

Three of the students managed to reach West Berlin, although one of them arrived in the German capital with "severe shot-wounds". There is no news of the two captured students.

The French government has recently approved the use of political discrimination in choosing applicants for the French National School of Administration. The French National Union of Students has made strong objection to this policy in a letter to the French Secretary of State calling the practice a "violation of one of the most cherished principles . . ." and asking the government to annul the measure. Graduates of the French school often gravitate to executive and administrative jobs in the French government. Most western observers have hailed the French legislation as a definite policy against Communists in the government.

Careless Stresses Unity At Carabins HH Dinner

The rumor that Toronto was a cold and unfriendly city was thoroughly spiked last Saturday night as the Carabins were treated to a reception at the Warden's Apartment and later to a banquet in the Great Hall of Hart House.

Although the fish was cold and the potato chips colder, the atmosphere of candles, dim lights and blazing fireplace more than compensated for the lack of finesse in the cuisine.

First the Carabins and their hosts were invited up to Warden McCulley's apartment for a reception. After this the Carabins and their hosts were led downstairs to Great Hall where the banquet was to take place.

The Carabins were welcomed by President Sidney Smith, who told the Carabins that "Torontonians were much friendlier than they looked". John Stalker, President of the Students' Administrative Council gave a toast to the Carabins in his own inimitable French, which was answered by Jacques Gabouay for the Carabins.

Professor Careless of the History Department was the speaker for the evening. He spoke on "History, and Canadian Unity". Professor Careless dealt at length with the various factors that had divided Canada and also the influences that had helped to unite Canada.

He said that both history and Geography had divided Canada, in some respects, yet both had also a uniting influence. He said, "We should not forget our great common stock. Both the English and French-speaking Canadians are basically North Americans. French Canadians are no longer part of France, and English Canadians are no longer part of England." He said that there is a constant process of making us North Americans.

The French and English have shared a common problem in fighting the environment, he said; both contributed toward building the Trans-Canada railway, both cotributed towards developing the fur trade, both have cooperated towards making Canada a whole.

Other instances of French and English cooperation, he pointed out, were in the creating of a responsible Canadian government, with the cabinet system; then the struggle against annexation by the United States, that has not completely disappeared as yet.

Professor Careless said, "Wishy-washy good-will will not achieve unity. We have to recognize our differences, and be prepared to compromise. We must recognize each other's rights, especially the rights of minority groups."

He said that the English should not talk of the French-Canadian problem, but rather of the French-Canadian fact. "We must always think in terms of our partnership; even through disagreement, we must agree to disagree."

"The pattern of history for the past few years has been the building of bridges between the French and English. In the course of history these bridges have been gradually strengthened, although some of them have been knocked down only to be rebuilt," he said.

Gal Slaves Auctioned If No Rain

Rain! Buckets of Rain, the greatest deluge since the flood, in fact, has just fallen between here and Saudi Arabia, thus impeding the approaching caravan of Abdul ben Abdul, the used slave dealer. Thus, it was with great regret that the Dramatic clubs of Trinity and Victoria found it necessary to postpone their civic reception for Abdul and his slave girls on Hart House steps Friday.

However, advance scouts now report that Abdul has been sighted; the slave girls' hair has curled up again to its loveliest, and the entire entourage, along with Trinity and Victoria cheerleaders, and the St. Hilda's girls Pipe Band will arrive today for sure on the front steps of Hart House at 1 p.m.

Then and there, Abdul will give away absolutely FREE, three of his most beautiful slave girls, by lucky number draw. Each girl comes complete with two tickets to Saturday's performance of 'Much Ado About Nothing'.

Sometimes I don't think there is any law around here, but I couldn't find out who they were, to decide if they could be the characters of the campus. I guess I missed my chance though, I was out one night with a cut little grasshopper and missed the fire they had out in the middle of one of the bare patches, I guess I might have found one there. So I had given up since this place is too big for poor little me when I saw your face and I knew that I had found it, you are the campus character. The fairytale fantasy with music adapted to the stage by Herbert and Eleanor Farjeon, will play for 22 performances, 11 of them matinees. It will be directed by Herman Geiger-Torel of the Royal Conservatory Opera Company.

A professional company of 60 will include Drew Thompson, Margot Christie, Peter Mews, Andrew MacMillan, Jack Medhurst, Rosamund Merrivale and Fran Kraner.

Also on stage will be a chorus composed of leading members of the Royal Conservatory Opera and a ballet corps from the Canadian School of ballet.

Adelaide's Lament

From On Dit, Adelaide University, Australia.

When a kangaroo sits on a sharp stone
It doesn't even groan.
But I bet it would say ouch
If you put one in its pouch.

A platypus, although not wealthy,
Never looks unhealthy.
I always feel ill
When I have a large bill.

A dog is a man's best friend—
That always proves true in the end.
But I wonder if a canine can
Be a friend's best man.

You might think a dog were a dingo
Or a stork a flamingo,
Or a blowfly a gnat,
Or a swallow a bat.
Or a porpoise a aharn,
Or a porpoise a shark,
But a mosquito
Could never travel incognito.

I'd rather like to have a bash
At writing a poem "To Ogden Nash."
But who has the time
To think of something that will rhyme
With Ogden?

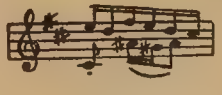
Critic In The Dark

'The Cinemah'

A long time ago, when everyone was quite happy just to produce a satisfactory image on a theatre screen, let alone expand it to huge new super-colossal wide-vision size, the cinema (as opposed to movies Hollywood style) seemed to be an esoteric art practised only by European directors and frustrated American intellectuals. Films like Chaplin's A Woman of Paris did much to break down the barrier between the serious film and the commercial. In the 1930's cultural endeavours like David Copperfield and Pride and Prejudice did much, in the minds of many, to erect it again. A new separation between the formula movie and the serious or pseudo-serious film arose.

After the Second World War, however, that ancient blockade was again torn away when British and European films began their now historic onslaught on the movie theatres of North America. The "art cinema" arose: the tiny theatre whose operating costs were so low it could afford to play a possibly unprofitable film far longer than a larger house. With it arose the cult of the foreign film: 'If it has subtitles it's got to be good," and its sudsidiary, the cult of the British film comedy.

All this was, without doubt, a Very Good Thing, both for the artists and technicians who were stimulated by wider appreciation of their work, and for the public, who finally were able to see films that would have been out of the question five years previously, works like Open City, Brief Encounter, Rashomon and Miss Julie. This trend reached its zenith, to my mind, when Robert Wiene's thirty-year-old Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, one of the most influential and difficult films in movie history, had an extended run in a New York theatre. Similar changes took place in other North American cities: though the number of actual art houses was small, their influence was wide.



And oddly enough, the above reflections were all occasioned by the revival in Toronto last week of Sun Valley Serenade, a black and white musical made in the early forties, which starred Sonia Henie, John Payne, Milton Berle, and Glenn Miller. Sun Valley Serenade is a gay, corny little film whose chief attractions are the comedy talents of Uncle Miltie and the music of the graet Glenn Miller — as a Miller memorial, it's rather historic film. It was revived by the intrepid manager of the Revue Theatre, on Roncesvalles, along with Michael Curtiz's Young Man With a Horn, Norman McLaren's Begone Dull Care, and a couple of quite ordinary shorts by Billy May and Harry James. This sterling example of sensible and coherent programming drew more people into this small and out of the way theatre than it had ever handled in its history.

Admittedly, most of the customers were attracted by the magic name of Miller, but the management is to be congratulated for striking a blow for a new and inevitable development in commercial film programming — one which must take place if the advances the "art" cinemas have made are to be consolidated.

For it isn't enough any more to show just any foreign language movie. The film industries of other lands are losing much of their post-war individualism, perhaps from a lack of artistic stimulus comparable to that of the immediate post-war years. The Italian film industry, now the second largest in the world, spews out a continual flood of operatic trash and mediocre imitations of Rossellini and De Sica. The British film is not what it used to be. German work hasn't sufficient distribution, and the Swedish Film Industry is almost extinct. Only France maintains its standards, only Japan is on the up-grade. Yet films from all over are seen more widely than ever. This trend should certainly not be curbed, for foreign language films have a valuable place in the community; in Toronto more and more movie houses show dubbed and subtitled films every month, and in most cases under the delusion, or illusion that they are bringing culture to the masses.

No distributor or Manager should delude himself into thinking that he always serves art when he shows a foreign film. The role of the art theatre manager is, perforce, no longer geographical; it is historical, for the film and its audience are now far better served if he revives an important Hollywood film like Fred Astaire's Top Hat, Alfred Hitchcock's Blackmail, or Ernest Lubitsch's Ninotchka, than if he shows all the pretentious operatic rehashes ever made. This goes equally for great foreign films of the past, and for the truly important ones of the present. But if the great films from foreign lands stop coming, as it seems, aside from a small trickle they are, we must dig into the past and make the average film-goer more conscious of the great entertainment that is now mouldering (quite literally) on the shelves of the world's distributors.

Pierre Souvarain

Pierre Souvarain, lately appointed to the faculty of the Royal Conservatory, gave a concert of piano music last Thursday evening. This series of concerts, now in its second season, is fast becoming one of the most popular attractions of the winter season. The standard of artists has always been high and last night was no exception. Pierre Souvarain, a native of Switzerland and European trained, impressed a critical audience of capacity proportions if he did not satisfy them. The two-hour program was difficult and extremely demanding technically. Souvarain showed tremendous stamina and vitality throughout and played with astounding accuracy.

The Variations in A major by Beethoven was by far the most satisfying rendition of the evening. Each new variation carried with it new life, new meaning, new significance. Souvarain played with beautiful touch, displaying a round, firm yet sensitive tone. Even the Sonata in E flat major "Les Adieux" came off well, an all-consuming work requiring sometimes drama, sometimes tenderness, sometimes capriciousness, which the performer succeeded in giving us, but I felt that the transition between these moods was not convincing. The Schumann Novelette in F sharp minor was well played, sounding as it should, like a pleasant conversation, unaffected, charming. Barcarolle by Chopin as I am afraid all Chopin does, lulled me to sleep, and considering I was standing at the time this was quite a feat (No pun intended).

Ondine, a characteristically Ravel bit, only seemed to satisfy. The arpeggio figure did not achieve the harp-like effect it was intended to give and the melody failed to enchant me. The Faure Nocturne in B minor, to be blunt, bored me intensely. Three pieces by Bartok followed and were quite successful, especially the last, The Night's Music, a descriptive setting of night sounds in Hungary. A melody appears three times amongst a series of tone clusters, giving the music an eerie, out-of-this-world quality. Mr. Souvarain proved to be not only accurate but imaginative as well.

The last work, a completely unknown bit of music by a composer equally unfamiliar proved to be note-worthy for its melange of styles. Unfortunately one can not hope to mix the atonal with the tonal, a sort of Hindemith gone to Paris, as one might toss a salad, and expect too much success. And yet somehow it showed promise. Someday perhaps . . . . .

Pierre Souvarain's prodigious technique suffers from being too neat and it might be well to sacrifice some of it in favor of a little feeling, a little soul I never thought I'd live to see the day that I'd advise a European to do that.

Charles La Pointe.

BRITONS BOUNCE BLUES

A Bird In The Hand . .

In a shot from the Athletic Night held in the lower gym of Hart House last Saturday night the Varsity Blues are seen going up for a rebound under their own basket late in the second quarter. In action at this moment is Bob Masterson's second "platoon". Marv Tile is seen going up with Barker and Roe of Albion while Florian Matsalla waits expectantly in the background for the rebound. Behind them are the spectators.

Albion Britons Defeat Varsity Blues Stulac, Russel Are Toronto Stars Blues Lose Third For The Week

By MOISHE REITER

Albion College cagers, visiting the Varsity Blues in Saturday's Athletic Night, literally beat the Toronto club with one hand. The one hand in this case was the deadly one-hand push shot that the Albion aces used to sink the Blues 55-47. Playing their third game of the week against Yankee opposition Varsity lost their third game in a row this season, the first being a 92-29 decision to high-ranking Niagara U.

The Blues opened their hoop season at home using the system that has come to be their trademark — a tight zone defence fencing the opposition out of Blue basket territory and forcing them to shoot from way out. Things hit a snag when the Albions started potting easily with that one-hander from outside the key. A fast passing game produced by Albion had the Blues hopping happily around the court but the small Hart House floor kept things safe for Varsity and the visiting Britons were held out.

Varsity fans' first look at the Blues of '54 saw a first line composed wholly of last year's veterans playing their usual sharp game. All-Star in '53 Leaping' Lou Lukenda started at centre for the Varsity lads, with George Stulac and Bill Corcoran flanking him at the forward spots, and Jim Russel working at guard with Steve Oneschuk. The second platoon for Varsity was almost all a rookie crew with only Marv Tile, a reliable old-timer of the Blues, working with the newcomers to give a steadying influence.

Bob Masterson must have forgotten about the changeover from football to the hoop court that he is making, because the Blues' coach kept sending his players out in platoons. The team was therefore somewhat short of balance, varying between top strength and ebb tide throughout the match. Many observers felt that he might have broken the routine by varying the lines a little..

At last! George Zstulac started throwing up at the basket Saturday and showed the crowd magnificent, while dazing everyone on the court with his smooth magic. At first things looked like a repeat of last season when Stulac refused to shoot, preferring to pass off on the wings and snare rebounds. For half a game he won the spectators by playing a completely dedicated team game, scrambling fiercely for the ball and working it around to his mates for shots. But in the last half George got mad — and by coincidence Varsity got hot. Stulac must have been angered by his buddies' eagerness to throw the ball up, with a complete disregard for working it in to a man in a better position. Lou Lukenda hit the acme in this respect with a jump shot from the top of the key in the last seconds. Varsity, led by Stulac and Jim Russel had just managed to gain possession of the ball from the ragging Albions, and passed it to Lou, who just jumped high, started looking for the hoop, managed to locate it and heave hopefully in the general direction of the nets. He missed by a little less than a mile, but Varsity missed the boat with that shot. Albion recovered and froze the ball through the remaining seconds. Before that, Stulac stunned the visitors with a display of shooting with either hand, scoring the excellent average of 63 percent of his shots. One beauty was a left handed hook thrown up after faking the Albion defenders out with a feint to his right.

The foul shots told much of the story of that game as the Britons from Albion missed only one shot. Bob Friberg (no relation to St. George and the Dragonet) was responsible for the lone Albion miss, but Mr. Friberg had an alibi. In the last minutes he tossed in 5 foul shots but a clout in the eye caused him to miss one. Don Roe, standing about 6'4" for the visitors was the night's top scorer, netting a cool 17 points through a fine bit of shooting and good rebounding. Friberg, a small man who led the Albion plays hooped 14 to match Jim Russel for second place in the scoring.

Jim Russel, along with Stulac was the best Blue on the floor, playing a good game. There were no sharper set shot artists on the court than the diminutive Russel who tallied his 14 points mainly on the long set shot. Russel also threw the Britons' defence off-balance with the odd drive in on the basket.

Rookie Jim Sheppard played a strong game, showing a smooth throwing arm and a dead eye when he had the chance to shoot. It is not to the credit of the Blues that neither he nor Stulac had much chance to do so. The Blues seemed to prefer throwing from long range or through their checks, to passing to a buddy in better position.

Next Wednesday the Blues meet another American team from Panzer College. They had better improve or their opponents had better be of inferior calibre to Albion, otherwise One-eyed Benny will be willing to lay odds against them. Our Blues have yet to see a victory to their credit this season. But then they've played only three games. Maybe we should give them time to warm to the game and get used to their platoon pals.

Three Physed Squads Meds In Hoop Finals

By JO RATCLIFFE

The regular women's basketball loop closed operations for another year last Wednesday night over in the OCE gym. When the gals departed from the Bloor Street edifice, it was all over but the play off—and the cheering that goes with it.

The end of the month-and-a-half-old schedule left five teams in playoff positions and from the looks of past records, these positions have not changed much in the past three years. The only real upset to the usual playoff expectations was a very strong Med's A team which sailed through the quarter final Thursday night 23-14 against a UC freshie group.

The Med's gals headed league one in regular scheduled play seconded by UC Jr.-Sr's. who lost out to PHE thirds last season in the all important final match. The freshie squad which was beaten out of further competition Thursday finished on top of league five followed by a POT squad. The UC frosh were also in this position at the end of last year's schedule and were again dropped in the quarter finals by a powerful Sr.-Jr. group from their own college.

The rest of the league leaders are PHE teams. This year the physedders have finished up with every team entered in basketball competition winning their respective leagues. PHE sophs, the team that was a league leader last year came through with the league two laurels. Saint Hilda's Juniors were second. This second year PHE group was beaten out in last year's semi-finals but came back to win the consolation meet 39-29 over the UC Sophs.

According to Nancy Kercher, head of the basketball schedule, the PHE sophs are the gals to watch this year. Most of last year's players are back though Jane Duff has held back from basketball competition. With strong players such as Joy Taylor, Inger Olsen, Gwenanne Miller and June Hansford who played intercol last season, the team should put on a good show. If all goes well, chances are they will be displaying the laurels.

Their cohorts, PHE third year lead league three seconded by the School of Nursing. Getting off to a poor start earlier in the season, the third year gals put on a final push, typical of PHE squads, to finish in top position. The third year squad usually makes the finals each year and last year copped the honours 28-16 over UC Jr.-Sr's.

This year's third year group didn't make the semies last season though the year before they were defeated in the finals by a soph squad. Without players like Peg Walker and Kay Legate this team has lost a lot of its power though Shirley Roberts, star intercollegiate player will be counted among the ranks.

For the third straight year, a PHE frosh team will enter the semi finals. This particular squad ended up leading league four with the VIc Freshies "A" squad in second spot. Though they have always managed to be successful in regular schedules, the frosh have been consistently beaten in final competition—usually by their older colleagues, which, by the way is a quite normal state of affairs.

This is Med's first big chance at the final honours (there is no cup awarded) for some time and it looks as though they might make the big break tally. Sally Wallace who battled for last year's winners is seeing action in the Med's ranks this season. Along with her are Sally Searles, Joan Elliot and Marg Plat, all powerful contenders.

The semi finals will be played

SPS Fifths, Trinity Men In Interfac Hockey Wins

Three first division and two second division games gave rise to plenty of hockey action in Varsity Arena on Friday. All teams in Group IV saw action with the two S.P.S. squads battling it out, the V's coming out on top 7-1. Champ scored three for the victors, Smith two, and Niblock and Sweetnam one each. Deeks tallied the lone goal for the IV's. Trinity B's garnered their second win of the season with a 1-0 win over Meds II. Dave Smith gave the Red and Black their victory with a counter in the second period. In Group III Dent A created a tie for second spot taking the Vic II 4-1. Stewart, England, Kiuzul and Cook scored for Dentists while Struthers potted the Vic goal.

Division II games saw Pharmacy shutout Law 3-0, while Forestry B gained a 4-2 triumph over Knox. Forestry tallies came off the sticks of Cannon, Armstrong, Lindsay and Stacy while Brotherston and Miles scored for Knox. Philbrook, Wood and Cohan scored for the Druggists as they picked up their first win of the young season.

In a quarter-final volleyball game Jr. SPS. A whipped Meds II 15-5, 12-15, 15-10, to set themselves up against the Trinity A's on Tuesday at 1:00 p.m. in the semi-finals

Barbarians Champions Varsity Loses Rugger

By PAT KELLY

Varsity's hopes of winning the Carling Trophy for the Toronto rugger championship were dashed on Saturday at High Park when they lost their playoff game to Barbarians, 5-3. Varsity had finished in first place in the league, losing only one game, their second of the season, to the same team. As expected, Saturday's game was extremely hard-fought.

With right-prop Roden Burge in hospital with an abscessed ankle, the result of an injury sustained in the Varsity-Wanderers game a week ago, Varsity was forced to shuffle its players, bringing Phil Sacre up into the scrum and playing Roy Campbell at fullback. Neither of them was very much at ease in his new position.

The game was played on an uneven clay pitch, devoid of any grass and well-soaked by Friday's rain. The Barbarians opened with a strong attack which they sustained for about five minutes without scoring. Varsity fought back and the game swayed back and forth the whole length of the field.

The first score came when Varsity tapped the ball back from a line-out. It went wide of the scrum half. A Barbarian forward rushed through, kicked it past the fullback and followed it over the line to touch down under the posts. This try was easily converted, giving Barbarians a 5-0 lead.

The second half was played with terrific fury. Tempers ran high, just high enough to make it a fighting game. Ron Ham, taking the ball through from the lineouts made some fine forward rushes. Scrum half Phil Worsley was feeding the ball to the three quarters with excellent passes. William Chadwick discovered a talent for kicking and made long drops to touch which kept Varsity up in Barbarians' end for most of the second half. Barbarians played a fine defensive game, sometimes turning the attack back on Varsity. Varsity's efforts were finally rewarded when the referee gave a penalty against Barbarians about five minutes from the end. Dave Fayle's kick was a beauty. Kicked from a difficult angle against the wind, it brought the score to Barbarians 5, Varsity 3.

One touchdown for another three points would have won the game for Varsity and, from the utter fury of their last attack, it was evident they knew it. But all in vain. The Barbarians succeeded in holding their two-point margin to the end.

Varsity Hockey Blues Suffer Lost Weekend
Laval Leaves Them In Lurch 3-1 Friday
Carabins Crush 'Em Under 14-3 Avalanche

It was a lost week-end for the Varsity hockey team which returned yesterday from a road trip which saw them lose 3-1 to Laval Friday night in Quebec City and 14-3 to the University of Montreal Saturday night in Verdun.

The two losses plunged the Blues into the league basement with three defeats in three tries. Coach Jack Kennedy has a month now before the next league game to patch up his crippled and reeling warriors. The Carabins, meanwhile, are in front of the pack with two straight wins, both at Varsity's expense.

The Blues left Toronto Friday minus veteran Harry Boyd, sidelined with an injury and lost Jim Wilkes part way through Friday's game. A new defenceman, Colin Ashton, joined the Varsity rearguard for the trip.

In spite of the scores, it was goalie Jack Ross who kept the Blues in the running until the late stages of each game. In both cases, they were on even terms with the eventual winners until the third periods.

In Friday's game, there was no score until midway in the second period, when Maurice Legace opened the scoring for Laval. Maurice Blake and Gerard Houle added two more for the Red and Gold early in the third before Ken Lawson got one for the Blues. Jack Ross, a standout throughout the game was removed in favor of an extra forward with a minute and a half to go, but the Blues couldn't dent the Laval defence.

Jim Wilkes received a torn ligament in the first period and will be sidelined at least a week.

Eleven penalties were handed out as the two teams battled all the way. But that was nothing compared to what happened in the Saturday night game at Verdun. With the Carabins leading 4-3 in the third period, a fight broke out on the ice. Both benches emptied as the teams joined in the fight. When order was finally restored, both teams were given double major penalties. During the five minutes, the Montrealers scored eight goals to run away with the game.

It had been 3-1 for the Montrealers going into the third period with Red Stephen having scored for Varsity on an assist from Ernie Bodnar. The Blues struck quickly by Robin Logie from Don Cossar in the third to tie it up on goals and Johnny Atkitt. The Carabins went ahead again 4-3 just before the donnybrook broke out.

Jack Ross again was a standout in goal, stopping shot after shot. Once, during the third-period landslide, he stopped three drives in a row before finally allowing a goal.

Next action for the Blues is this week-end when they go to Michigan for a couple of games with the University of Michigan Wolverines.

Publication

Today, Wednesday and Friday are the last three issues of the term for The Varsity. The staff will then proceed to wallow out of a pile of back issues and old test papers to take a Christmas vacation.

Any advance publicity of campus organizations to be printed in The Varsity should be briefly and clearly written and submitted to the editorial offices by 4:00 p.m. on the day before publication.

Varsity Beats McGill 11-3
Defending Water Polo Title

Varsity's Water Polo Blues took a sure grip on their Intercollegiate championship Saturday by defeating the challengers from McGill 11-3, in the first game of a two-match-total-points series. The return match is to be played in Montreal next Saturday.

Varsity seems to be getting into a rut in the matter of the polo title as they cannot remember, except vaguely, when they have not held the crown, and only a brilliant reversal of form by the McGillians can change that state this year. With an eight goal lead going into the final match, the Varsitys are a good bet to retain their laurels.

Norm Mortimer was enough to give the Blues' victory all by himself as the torrid Torontonian whipped in four fast goals, outscoring the whole Redman crew. The great Mortimer was a most distracting fellow for the McGills all night as he not only accounted for most of their ills personally but drew so much attention to himself that the visitors neglected his buddies to the extent of seven additional goals.

Intercollegiate back - stroker Bernie Langer was another Blue who mistreated the visiting McGillians. Langer, a big lad in his second Medical year was a big gun for the Blues, administering a fatal dose of three goals to the faint Redmen.

BiBi Stipitec, also an Intercollegiate swimmer, was good for two counters against the visiting polos while old pro Larry Rosen, in his final season with the water-polo Blues, rapped in a pair.

Any of these four could open up a game and take it all for Varsity, so the Redmen return home to Montreal, to desperately plan a means of stopping the champs from retaining ye olde championship.

Goal Scorers

The season is only two weeks old and already one or two teams have shown unequalled strength in their groups. The Trinity B's and SPS VI's are leading Groups IV and V and have yet to be scored in two games. Several clubs are into double figures in goals-for. The Interfaculty Hockey standings, complete up to last Friday night appear elsewhere on this page. In the matter of goal-scorers and points awarded a record is being kept The Varsity office and will be printed from time to time as will the standings. Assists are not counted as they are in most cases very arbitrary.

Paul McTaggart is all alone on top of the heap, by virtue of the four goals he put behind the SPS IV goalie in the Trinity B's first game. Eleven men have scored three times, and their names appear also. Seventeen have tallied twice and eighty-eight have scored once. This makes a total of 247 goals by 117 players. That's quite a few for just two weeks of play. It shows, in strong relief, the large accommodation of the Interfaculty loop for budding Blues or even higher levels of competition. Possibly the size of our Intramural league is only rivalled by the THL here in Toronto. By the end of the hunt for the Jennings Cup, there will probably be some people with more than twenty goals. Don't laugh; that's very high for Interfaculty play. However the top twelve are listed below up until Friday night.

McTaggart (Trin. B)	4
Bowles (St. Mike's B)	3
Burrows (Jr. Vic)	3
Champ (SPS V)	3
Drolet (St. Mike's B)	3
Jerome (St. Mike's C)	3
McDougall (St. Mike's C)	3
Mollenhauer (Sr. SPS)	3
Ross (For. A)	3
Slater (SPS VII)	3
Ubick (Wycliffe)	3
Wright (Jr. SPS)	3

Ascot Mangles Varsity Baby Blues Look Faint

Varsity Basketball Baby Blues had an excellent lesson in the art of playing basketball administered them by the visiting Ascot AC Mustangs at the A-Night, Saturday. Ascot defeated the Varsity Seconds by the clear score of 70-40.

Big Ed Boguski of the Mustangs gave the Baby Blues a hard time as he threw in 25 points. The Baby Blues just couldn't check the tall Mustang as he shifted them easily and bore in persistently to score. A grad of Central Commerce, Boguski played for the great teams that came from that school several years back and lately has played for such clubs as Cottage Comets, as a teammate of Blue hoopster Marv. Tile.

Though Ascot's Boguski may have been top scorere for the night, it was another Irishman, Alf Vaichulis, who gained next honours potting 13 points for the Baby Blues, though in a losing cause. Vaichulis who played his high school ball for Parkdale is a real comer and has improved greatly since coming to Varsity, no doubt the influence of the Seconds' coach John McManus. Supporting Vaichulis was the Baby Blues' good portside potter, George Patterson, who hooped six points for the Blue and White.

Weakness in their shooting was the main reason for the Baby Blues' defeat. From far out or close in the Seconds couldn't seem to find the range, and are generally off the form expected in a Collegiate club. A bright spot in an otherwise gloomy picture was the play of Zoli Janverry. Janverry, a Niagara product, is a smooth ball-handler and moves with ease in around the hoop. He should come up through the season, and though Saturday saw him score only four points he was very good going both ways.

UC Wins Opener Nobber Clobbers

The Varsity Intramural Lacrosse championship seems to have fallen into greedy hands who are unwilling to let it go. The defending Interfaculty titleholders, UC, put their brand on the title in clear terms last Friday as they defeated challenging Med's lacrossers 12-6 in a noon-hour match played in the lower gym, Hart House before several hundred fascinated fans.

Nobber Watson, UC's strong man whipped the Medsmen almost good goals. Watson showed a sharp eye and a startling shift, drawing the doctors out of position repeatedly then drilling hard shots past the Med's goalie.

When the men of Medicine finally managed to get the ball for themselves they had to get past hard-playing Artsman Al Eagleson to score, and the doctors found that no easy task. Eagleson played a rough but clean game, persistently staving off Medical rushes by easing the Medsmen off into the corners where they were no threat to the UC goal-tender. Al King the UC net-minder was great for the Artsmen saving on impossible shots when the doctors managed to get by Eagleson. King who played for SPS last year in the final against this same UC squad must have decided that if he couldn't beat the Artsmen he might just as well join them and Friday he showed that the new partnership has been to everyone's advantage.

Al Eagleson displayed an eagle's eye driving home three goals on Med's squad. Jack Rogers, Don Carroll, Baz Mackie scored singles apiece for the victorious Artsmen.

Med's scorers were Jack Gear, Bob McMillen, Colin Kilty, Bill Kerr and Hugh Thomson.

Highest Compliment

Complaints have on occasion reached this office, to the effect that The Varsity, in its editorial columns, has been unduly critical of some campus functions. We admit criticism, even when it happens to be constructive, not necessarily ever in The Varsity, is hard to take. But we do not feel that the question, "Why not a pat on the back" is in every case justified.

The situation is, that functions deserving of a pat on the back are so complimented by student support that it is not our privilege to be able to add the slightest favour.

The packed house in the Great Hall of Hart House last night was a compliment both to the singers present, and to the House Committee for a fine tradition.

We believe there are other campus clubs, that through earnest initiative and hard work can build up programs, whether in politics, or science, programs which in themselves will be a compliment to their organizers.

Of Others Too

Student activities in Canada are interesting always and fascinating often; we burn effigies, argue about NFCUS, professors call our newspaper "illiterate" while sports and artistic pursuits vie with news for top priority in the student interest agenda. However, other countries' student news can be and usually is important for us to know. We feel that the university student in Canada is the Canadian leader of tomorrow and by the same reasoning the activities of students across various continents and oceans are the activities of the leaders of tomorrow's world.

In recognizing this, The Varsity will attempt to give more complete coverage of world student news than has been done during the fall term. We intend to publish a weekly column devoted to news of students in foreign lands; their acts, aims and thoughts. It is emphasized that this news will be taken directly from the bulletins and papers which are sent to us. It is also emphasized that countries behind as well as in front of the iron curtain will be reported. We believe that ignorance of potential enemies is as stupid as ignorance of proven friends. There will be no opinions expressed in this foreign-affairs column which are those of the editors of The Varsity or of the writer. We will print the news as it is sent to us the same way we print the news of freshman initiation in Acadia or effigy burning in UBC.

Truth In Toto Type

Or A Code To Live By

As a summary to the recent religious controversy, The Varsity presents the article by John H. R. Lee.

By JOHN H. R. LEE

The make-believe tempest raging over religion in The Varsity seems like a sort of mental shadow-boxing that never gets to the real problem. Members of various religions have argued the details and ignored the principles. They have leapt into the maelstrom of truth versus error without a thought about the basic problem . . . why do we care what is true?

PRESUMABLY WE WANT to know what is truth so that we can live by it. We apparently need religion so we can conduct our lives accordingly. I think most religious people will agree that religion is something to live by. But do we live by it?

How many business men . . . how many politicians . . . how many workers . . . live by their religion? Not very many. The predominant religion in our society is Christianity.

Christians supposedly abhor killing or injuring their fellow men. That's very admirable. But who are the first to insist on the necessity of capital and corporal punishment to prevent a "wave of crime", etc. Numerous Christians, of course.

Christians supposedly abhor divorce. Well, I don't, but I notice many Christians don't, IN PRACTICE, either.

CHRISTIANS SAY THEY dislike using force. "Do unto others," etc. "The other cheek . . ." ". . . walk the second mile", and so on. But who are often the most zealous advocates of strong defence and using the bomb before they do, and other such pious remarks? Who are the men who talk of using the police against the workers on strike, because perhaps the workers have used a forceful method of showing their needs? Numerous Christians, of course.

Christians believe in helping their neighbours . . . being the "good Samaritan", helping those who have not, etc. And what leading Canadians would rather use guns against Communism instead of sharing some of Canada's immense wealth to remove the conditions out of which Communism arises? Well-known Chrsitians of course.

The point is obvious. Too many so-called Christians are that in name only. Their myopic minds see no further than their own comfort and welfare. Indeed, they care not for food (for Asians), nor for raiment . . . for Africans . . . they neither toil . . . except when their own interests are at stake . . . nor do they reap . . . (oh no? we reap too much . . . we have to feed millions, but try and get the good Christians in government to share it with those in need!).

SO MUCH FOR CHRISTIANITY. I certainly do not advocate a reaction . . . a "put Christ back in Christmas" movement or what-have-you. We've wanted to turn the clock back too often. Are we afraid to look ahead? This should be the age of MAN, but alas, it is not. It is the age of TV and cinemascope and sex and detective novels and comic strips. Rather than face life the average Joe turns to the sports page or the funnies. He's never heard of, or doesn't care about, McCarthyism or Indo-China or the federal election. The only thing he knows about Communism is that it is bad and must be stopped. This is the real world in which religion must operate. And what does it offer? Mysticism. Escape from the world by doctrine and ritual. A cure-all deity that can bring rain for Texas or end war in Korea. What a travesty on modern man!

THE GREAT NEED OF MODERN society is for a modern religion . . . a code it can live by. The need is for a religion for man, not more converts for existing religions. God is for man, not men for God. Religion today must teach the innate goodness of man, not the innate evil. And it must teach not tolerance, but respect, of other religions. And most of all, it must not claim to have the truth in toto, or to have a monopoly on it. No man knows all the truth, and only by realizing that fact can religion go forward. Religion that says it already has all there is to have, is dead.

Our Readers Write:

Answers On Letters On Answers

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Why the hell don't you forget about the Catholic Church. "Truth, Revelation, Toleration, etc., etc., etc." As for me I am sick and tired of the 20 or more letters, answers, letters on answers, answers on letters on answers, and so on.

Then come the corrections, elucidations, additions, references; my patience breaks at the point when "humorous" answers and "common-sense" answers start to come in.

Can the students not see that the whole discussion is pointless and useless. Everyone has indisputable authorities, everyone has Eternal Principles: either there are eternal principles or there are no eternal principles.

Are there no other more important and more productive topics? Are we to waste so much space on the discussion on which millions, perhaps billions of lives were wasted without any tangible results.

I say, discuss life on the moon, reproduction of molluscs, the development of crinolines, but spare us from masterpieces like (I quote): "There are truths which have been revealed by God,' or " . . . . " For heaven's sake, stop.

I'd suffer a NFCUS discussion but please No more Truth.

Champus Character

Dear Cat,

Wew, I thought I wasn't going to find time to sit down and write to you. I have been so busy. This being chairman of the Red (if you pardon the expression) and Blue gang is just no fun. Last fall, I thought, oh boy, isn't this wonderful, chairman, all I do is sit in a chair all day. I am learning fast. It was just by accident that I learned about this special week for cats, being so busy I never have time to sit down and read The Varsity, but according to rhmours it isn't worth reading anyway. Well, I was reading through some discarded material (I wish people wouldn't say garbage, it makes me ill) when I saw the article. And I thought oh boy, I better write in case that cat is related to Esmeralda; do you know Essie? She used to tell me a lot of tales when I was in the old Varsity office—it was a terrible hole. Yes sir, she was quite a gal. She got AROUND. Why I have been so busy—last fall I happened to hear something about characters on the campus, so I started my project—to find THE character of the year. Well, I have been looking all over the place. I ran into a lot of people who went around singing loud songs and setting off bombs and dragging around a big gun, and doing a lot of funny things, but there were too many to pick out one character from them. Then there were some who padded themselves all over and chased each other back and forth on a big field and a whole lot would jump on top of one, and then somebody would get mad and kick the ball real hard. But they all look alike. There were two people who had to hide and wore a white covering over them and one day they tried to run away from two

Toronto Paper Plays Host To Nationwide News Meet

CUP is more than a collection of initials, more than the beginning of effigy burning stories from UBC and more than hollow position on The Varsity masthead. It stands for Canadian University Press; a concise name given to the organization composed of all college and university undergraduate newspapers in Canada.

It has no permanent executive, no permanent home, and no group whose permanent job it is to look after the interests of the organization. What it has is a group of undergraduate newspapers which realize that student news from all over Canada should be published in their papers and the determination to support an organization which will allow fast and efficient transmission of student news across the country.

Each year in the month of December, college newspaper editors from Newfoundland's Muse to British Columbia's Ubyssey meet to plan policies, clear up difficulties and award prizes for the best paper is the actual heart of CUP, conference was held in Montreal with the McGill Daily as the host paper. This year the conference will be held in the Hart House reading room with The Varsity acting as host.

The site of the conference changes yearly as does the paper which makes the arrangements for CUP activities in general and the conference in particular. This paper is the actual heart of CUP, giving instructions, laying policy and co-ordinating activities. This year the Gazette of the University of Western Ontario has this position of Executive.

There are four contests sponsored by CUP. The Southam Trophy is awarded to the best daily or bi-weekly paper. The Jacques Bureau Trophy is awarded to the best paper publishing less than twice a week and the Le Droit Trophy is presented to the best French language newspaper.

These three trophies are for general newspaper proficiency. There is a special trophy for the best editorial writing, the Bracken Trophy. The editorial trophy has had a stormy history. For the past three years it has been lost by the winners somewhere between the conference site and home plate. Careful sleuthing by the editors has always produced the illusive trophy, but there have been some uneasy moments.

The conference will consist of five plenary sessions, one committee meeting and two parties. The plenary sessions are open to the public and any interested spectators will be welcome. Morning sessions start at 9:30 a.m. and the evening sessions at 2 p.m.

The meetings will be held in the Reading Room of Hart House. For women students and engineers who use the House only for meals, the Reading Room is located directly on the left, once you have navigated the front steps.

The boast of the CUP is that it is truly a national organizaion; a boast they can substantiate. Twenty-one papers, nine provinces and two languages will be represented in the conference.

The following is a list of the CUP members: The Gateway, University of Alberta; The Manitoban, University of Manitoba; McGill Daily, University of McGill; Queen's Journal, Queen's University; Gazette, University of Western Ontario; The Ubyssey, University of British Columbia; The Acadia Athenaeum, Acadia University; Argosy Weekly, Mount Allison University; The Brunswickan, University of New Brunswick; The georgian, Sir George Williams; The Carleton, Carleton College; Dalhousie Gazette, Dalhousie University; The Fulcrum, Ottawa University; The Ontarion, Ontario Agricultural College; The Sheaf, University of Saskatchewan; The Silhouette, McMaster University; The Xaverian, Saint Xavier University; Le Quartier Latin, University of Montreal; Le Rotonde, Ottawa University; Le Carabin, Laval University; The Varsity, University of Toronto.

Sounds like a good way to prepare for New Year's Eve.

Choose Student Debaters For Pittsburgh Competition

The University of Toronto students who will represent us in the Pittsburgh Annual Cross-Examination Tournament have been chosen. They are Harriet Thompson, IV UC, and Clyde Batten, II Pre-Meds. They will uphold the affirmative of the American National top "Resolved that United States should adopt a Policy of Free Trade". The tournament will be held this weekend.

They will have the opportunity to debate against Oxford, if they make a very good showing in the Pittsburg competition.

Earl Berger, Chairman of the University of Toronto Debating Union said that the Director of Men's Debates at Pittsburg has been extremely anxious to have Toronto represented in a debating competition and has suggested that in the near future Toronto might be featured as is Oxford this year.

Dress For Vic At Home Subject Of Disagreement

The Victoria College Union dealt at length last Monday night with the problem of whether or not to make the Vic At Home a formal or optional dance this year. Although the meeting was a contentious one the members got out at the early hour of 11:00 p.m. This was partly due to the new streamlined assembly which now consists of 40 members rather than the old 80 members.

The greatest proportion of the meeting was devoted to discussing the forthcoming Vic At Home. The dance this year will be held off the campus. This is due to the great expense of renting the Great Hall. Castle Loma has been chosen as the place of festivities.

A group of residence students, led by Sam Murphy, IV Vic, and Liz Preston, III Vic, said that a formal dance prohibits many resident students from participating due to the greatly increased expense of going formal.

Basil Moore, III Vic, Publicity Director of the VCU, said "the intangible nothing called Vic Spirit was aided by such traditional and sentimental affairs, and graduates in particular should be treated to the opportunity of attending a college formal before heading out into the cruel cold world of competition and informal dances."

The motion to hold this year's formal was finally passed, by a very small margin. Sam Murphy then suggested to the assembly that an open meeting to be held in Victoria College to discuss the dance. Murphy said "he had never been to one formal dance in his four years at the university, and it was high time such a situation was remedied".

The assembly found time to decide to set up committees to study the systems of selection of honour awards, and also a committee to devise some new system to make frosh initiations a little more constructive.

The Victoria College newspaper, "The Strand" was given a vote of confidence to carry on its work for the new year.

Knox Holds Carol Service Visiting Professor To Talk

A carol service will be held tonight. The students of Knox College are presenting one at 8:00 p.m. in the Knox College Chapel. During the service, Dr. William Manson will preach a sermon on what the Christmas message is. "The advent of Christ is a challenge to our life and to the life of society," said Dr. Manson. "The Christmas message concerns the secret of peace."

Reverend Manson is Professor Emeritus of Biblical criticism in the University of Edinburgh. At present he is guest professor in Knox College and of the graduate school of Theological studies in the University of Toronto. This is not his first visit to Knox, for he was Professor of New Testament there from 1919 to 1925.

A Loss

For eight years the chief responsibility of the late A. Leslie Coles has been among a thousand other things, the nightly supervision of The Varsity. He died in Oshawa General Hospital early Tuesday morning. Toronto students have been acquainted with him through pictures and features in The Varsity almost every year.

Negro Problem Topic At Joint History Meet

"No state . . shall . . deprive a person of life, liberty or property without due process of law." The intent of this extract from the Constitution of the United States is being debated now before the U.S. Supreme Court. It is a case which may have important results on negro education in the U.S., Professor John H. Franklin told a meeting of the Graduate and Modern History Clubs on Monday night.

Dr. Franklin, of Howard University, Washington, D.C. addressed the clubs on "Recent Developments in the Status of the American Negro."

Prof. Franklin spoke about negro education, and dwelt on the pros and cons of the present Supreme Court case which may result in the abolition of negro segregation in American public schools.

He gave a history of negro education in the U.S., showing the change in attitude from Colonial ties, when slave owners felt that a certain amount of education was valuable in the slave market, to the nineteenth century when penalties were imposed on negroes who studied.

Separate schools were instituted after the Civil War in the North, but in the South the opening of any schools for negroes was greeted by mob violence, he added.

"Nowadays," Dr. Franklin continued, "the question is no longer whether or not negroes should be educated, for that privilege has been granted them throughout the whole of the U.S., but rather whether or not they should be educated in the same schools as whites. The South is now striving to build bigger and better colleges for negroes to prevent their agitating to attend white schools," he said.

The case now before the court, Dr. Franklin feels, will be vitally important whatever its verdict, and cannot help but have great "significance in human relationships in the Western Hemisphere," he said.

W. Faulkner Not Novelist —Dr. McLure

"William Faulkner is not a novelist," stated Dr. MacLure, professor of English at Victoria College, last night at the Hart House Library Evening. He said that Faulkner could write good short stories, epics or sagas.

"William Faulkner has created the saga of a Mississippi county in his novels and short stories since 1920," said McLure. "The epic concerns the ravaging of the land by man, and the reparations exacted by nature."

MacLure said that Faulkner existed in a private world of his own creation. This he has divided into three periods: an ancient one dealing with an incorruptible Indian tribe, a medieval one concerning the pre-Civil War period, and the modern one of the degeneration of the South.

Faulkner is difficult to read, said McLure, because he writes in an inverted style. All the symbolism, the deeper meanings, are on the top. The simple narrative is buried beneath.

Final Issue

The final issue of The Varsity for this term will be published on Friday, December 11. All advertising and news coverage for the remaining week of the fall term and for the first few days of the spring term will be limited to the single issue. News stories and coming up notices must be in by 4:00 p.m. this afternoon.

Bells To Give Demonstration To Engineers

The Bell Telephone Company is bringing along all its latest demonstration on long distance dialing. The subject of the demonstration is called "Keys of the Continent". This is an open meeting of the Engineering Society.

It will be held in Room 102 Thursday, at 1:00 p.m. All lectures for engineers are cancelled from 12:00 p.m.

The engineers will have loads of equipment to look over, as the Bell is bringing along all its latest electronic equipment to demonstrate the subject.

Literary Issue Notice

The deadline for the annual literary issue of The Varsity is January 15. The issue itself will be published early in February and will display all that the Toronto undergraduates have to offer in the fields of poetry (serious and light), short stories, essays, photographs and cartoons.

Prizes are awarded in the various fields by competent judges. If no entry merits an award none will be forthcoming, subject to the discretion of the judges.

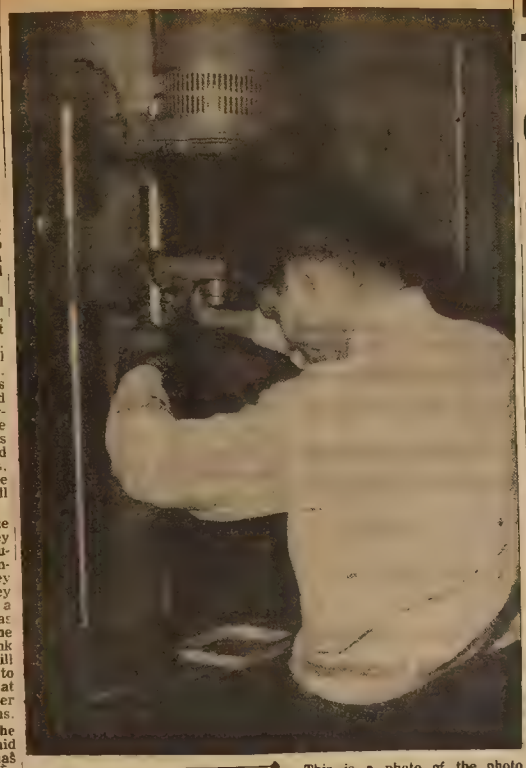
Model Parliament To Meet Tonight

Tonight at 7:00 p.m. the University's political aspirants will take over the Parliament Buildings in Queen's Park, as the Model Parliament begins its annual sessions. Parliament will convene the first two evenings in the Ontario Legislative Chambers, and the last session will be held in West Hall of University College.



The Liberal party have won a mandate to lead the Parliament although they have only one more seat than the Concervative party which will form Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. A bill will be submitted by the Liberals for the enaction of National Health Insurance. This is expected to pass, but the Liberal government will be defeated on some obscure point so that the Conservatives can form the government on the second night.

Parliamentary ceremonies will take place on the first evening, Wednesday night. This will start at 7:00 p.m. The Governor-General, for this year, Vincent Bladen, will read the speech from the throne. He will be escorted by his aides and representatives of the armed forces. Following this the Honourable Mr. Davies, speaker of the Ontario Legislature will act as speaker of the Parliament and guardian of the powers dignities, and privileges of the House. On the last two evenings the session will begin at 7:30.

On the second night when the Conservatives rule the house, they will bring in a bill to exempt students from having to pay unemployment insurance. This they think will pass all right. Next they will bring in a bill to implement a national system of scholarships as suggested by NFCUS and also the Massey Report, this also they think will pass. They feel that they will be defeated on their attempt to reduce the voting age to 18 at which time the CCF will take over for the final night of the sessions.

Joe Slogan, chairman of the Model Parliament Committee said "this year's model parliament has been taken more seriously by the students, the legislation is new and provocative, a change from previous years, and also I feel that this is a very good opportunity to provide students with experience in serious debates.

Lit Wants Top Probe Of Awards

The UC Lit and Athletic Executive at the last meeting passed a motion that unanimously supported the charges made at the last SAC meeting by Horace Kreever, namely that the University was holding back payment of scholarships and bursaries unless the second installment of fees were paid by the prize winner.

The motion read "Moved that the executive of this society ask the administration of the University of Toronto to review its policy of handing out prizes and awards to students with a view to the possibility of handing out said prizes and awards to the students in toto at the beginning of the school year."

UC Women To Establish New Award

The Women's Undergraduate Association of University College announced the establishment of a scholarship to be called "The Women's Undergraduate Association Centenary Scholarship." It is valued at $150 aud is to be awarded annually to the co-ed in UC with the highest aggregate marks in the second year of the General Course.

At the same WUA meeting the members decided to bring to the attention of the scholarship committee of UC that entrance scholarships, unless otherwise specified by the donor, be open to those entering the General as well as the Honour Course.

McMaster Won't Get City Grant

Hamilton, Dec. 4 —(CUP)— McMaster University will not get the $250,000 which they asked from the city of Hamilton.

In the recent city election, the University by-law was refused by a 2000 vote majority. Most radio, press and service clubs were in favour of the grant.

Several hundred McMaster students conducted a door to door campaign before the voting in an unsuccessful attempt to get the by-law passed.

I Confess

Easy Money Handy

By MANI THALER

It was Sunday on the campus, and nothing doing. Inside the ancient door of Hart House, a thin trickle of students stood lined up while a frantic type hurriedly handed out two-dollar bills. It must be the climate around this place I thought and lined up with the others.

To make a short story long, the National Film Board, and therefore the Government, was done out of two dollars that day. They're still looking for it, (not Hart House), but I suppose they'll never find out who did it.

There was a soft opulent purring outside of Hart House, I thought the Cat Contest Prize had arrived. How wrong I was. The two bulky trucks contained a mess of movie equipment. They also contained a shifty character with a cigar and a loudspeaker voice, and the eccentric movements of a reel in distress.

It was easy. All you had to do was sign a little slip and give your base of operations. A black-clad lecurer had somehow gotten into the line-up, and as he was signing a slow tremor passed along his arm. It isn't often they see money. was, I turned to the entrance, the Thinking what a nice world this deuce hot in my pocket. Suddenly, from between two dollies appeared the money-giver and announced via cigar, "Stick around, Buddy, we're reshooting it. What group are you, four or five?"

Choosing the lesser evil, and scared stiff, I said "group four", and sidled up to a handful of students to which he had pointed, and who seemed to understand the detailed instructions he gave them.

While the equipment was being arranged, I tried uneasily to discover what was expected of my new-found stardom. Lines of classical movie dialogue flashed through my mind. "She looked at me so I kicked her in the teeth. It was easy. She sang softly, I quote. She had it coming to her.") I asked a fellow artist to explain the action, and found out that all I had to do was to walk through the door, turn left and look stupid. That was easy.

I have no idea what the producer thought when he looked at the shots later, and had realized he had hired an extra actor. Perhaps he was even stirred to take that cigar out of his mouth, while dark thoughts of sabotage and investigations swirled in his mind. Perhaps he has bloodhounds on the trail right now. He won't find the National Money. It's gone. But it came in handy, and came easily. All it took was ten fingers and a pinch of fright. It was easy.

UC Debates "Christmas Is Excuse"

"Christmas is a Good Excuse" will be the topic of the next University College Debate tomorrow at 4:00 p.m. in the JCR.

Bernie Davis, IV UC, first speaker for the government says he views with grave concern the attack on Santa, which has been the epitome of our capitalist civilization. "An investigation will be begun shortly by our internal security committee to determine to what extent our society has become undermined by this attack upon Christmas," he added.

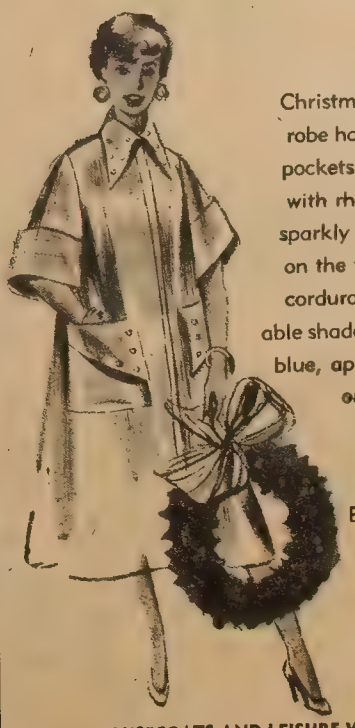
The second speaker for the government, Brian Cragg, III UC, said that "Christmas has proven, and I trust will continue to prove, a most beneficial outlet for our traditional depravity."

Marg Riches III UC, the first speaker for the opposition said that Christmas as an annual ritual fulfils the highest aspiration of Christmas everywhere, since Christianity is undoubtedly the basis of Western civilization. "Christmas rites form an integral and important part of our cultural tradition. Obviously Christmas is not an excuse but plays a vital role in our society," she said.

The second speaker for the opposition. Roger Bull, IV UC said: "Christmas is a good excuse? Bah! Humbug! God bless us, the negatives, everyone of us."

Blasts Segregation — Paper Is Threatened With Loss Of Funds

Chicago—(Exchange)—The University of Georgia student newspaper has been threatened with withdrawal of state funds if it attacks racial segregation in the schools again.



Ron V. Harris, member of the state board of regents and a strong supporter of separate schools, said that his stand was not one of endangering freedom of the press. "The students can get their own paper and do what they please with it," he said, "but the university is not going to turn over any money to the Red and Black unless the editors change their policy."

The paper now operates on an annula budget of about $15,000, about one-third of which comes from student activity funds.

The state puts up the rest of the money through university funds, and that, according to Harris, made it a university operation.

Blue And White Christmas Party In Great Hall, For One And All

The Annual Blue and White Christmas Tree, to be held in the Great Hall, Hart House at 8:30 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 17, will feature two choirs, announced publicity director John McKellar yesterday. "The Hart House Glee Club and the University of Toronto Mixed Choir will take part in the evening's festivities," said Mr. McKellar.

Each of the various faculties and colleges will exchange gifts, Skule and Forestry, POT with P H and E and so on. President Sidney Smith will read the "Christmas Story", carols will be sung and it is understood that some prominent campus figure will play Santa Claus. The Blue and White will not divulge the closely-guarded secret.

"The Blue and White cordially invites everyone on the capus to attend the Christmas Tree and enjoy the true Christmas spirit," said McKellar. The evening will be free to one and all and the only requirement is that those attending bring a blanket. This is due to the limitations of the Great Hall, which means that everyone will have to sit on the floor around the fire.

Socialism In US Subject For CCF

The Labor and Socialist movement in the United States will be the subject of this week's "Socialism 1a" meeting. The discussion leader will be Mr. William G. Grant, CCF Vice-president. Mr. Grant will first trace the development of the early Socialist parties in America, referring to their various leaders, such as Bill Haywood, Daniel de Leon, and Eugene V. Debs. He also will analyse the causes of the decline of the radical movement in the United States and the reasons for its splitting into various groups.

The second part of Mr. Grant's talk will deal with the present prospects of the American labor movement. The possibilities of the formation of a Labor Party and the revival of Socialist organizations in the United States will be given special consideration in this talk. The meeting will be held in Room 4, UC, Thursday at 1 o'clock. A question period will follow.

St. Mary's At Hart House

As usual, the Great Hall was filled to the radiator tops on Sunday when the St. Mary Magdalene Singers appeared in the two hundred and fifty-second concert.

The outstanding merit of this choir has been and still is tone quality. In spite of changes of personnel with the passage of time, they maintain constantly a purity of tone which does credit to their blend. Only occasionally could I hear an individual voice sticking out in the bass and soprano sections.

The program was in two sections: church music and carols. They were all interesting pieces but there might have been a greater variety of spirit. Also all of them were relatively subdued showing only one kind of devotional music. A few only would qualify as jubilant or triumphant.

They opened with the Bach Chorale, The Duteous Day Now Closeth which is really only a test piece to estimate the resonance of the hall. The Hosanna of Thomas Weelkes was well controlled and clear, but seemed to be missing strength and vigour of attack. The alto tone which is peculiarly impersonal and mystical, contributes much to the effect of Tallis' Audivi Vocem de Coelo. The blend made Palestrina's Missa Aeterna Christi Munera particularly satisfactory. There was no suggestion of a wailing but only of devotion in the tone.

O Lord, Make Thy Servant Elizabeth by William Byrd, being a comparatively new work with respect to Canadian performances was repeated. The repetition improved upon the first performance in which the sopranos tended to be obscure in the line of the underlying parts.

The carols in the second half besides being in season were generally more enjoyable. The singing was more relaxed and although soft, strongly rhythmic. The solos in Lullay My Liking of Gustav Holst and A Christmas Lullaby of Dr. Willan were intelligently sung by James Coombs. His voice is always vibrant and he gives meaning to the words. Here are we in Bethlehem is written by Dr. Willan in the style of the Gregorian Plain with essential simplicity of line which was carried smoothly by the sopranos.

It is almost becoming a tradition that The Twelve Days of Christmas, in the wonderful arrangement by Dr. Willan be given an encore, for its gaiety is infectious. There was room for a greater cooperation between the first sopranos in presenting the tune.

The St. Mary Magdalene Singers are a relatively small group, and they never make a great noise but I think that here quality definitely counts for more than quantity, as the tone they do produce is generally so clear and true.

Streetcar Named Slavenska

Massey Hall is certainly not the ideal place for ballet. Its only advantage over other auditoriums in town is space for more spectators, and that was not fully occupied. Still the Slavenska Franklin Ballet made the best of a bad situation by erecting two side entrances similar to the entries to the second balcony, by using a minimum of scenery, and by planning some fairly effective spotlighting. However, I never did see the company of 50. The count must have included stage hands.

On a program of four works, three were new, Nutcracker being the only standard one. Firstly, there was Concerto Romantico, music by Franz Liszt and choreography by Slavenska, Franklin. This is a classic work with modern touches. The tutus, designed by Slavenska were strapless with white nylon skirts which had a slit up to the waist just off centre. Part of the headdress of soloists was brilliant earrings which later proved prey to centrifugal force.

The choreography which purports to be "interpretations of the musical patterns and emotional content of Liszt's Piano Concerto in E Flat major" takes its inspiration mainly from such classics as Swan Lake and Sylphides. The arrangements of the corps de ballet in particular were reminiscent of these works, with more variation of arm movements. The pas de trois in Allegro Maestoso had very nice balance. It is relatively hard in this sort of eternal triangle to keep the third man in the picture. There was also some attractive choreography in the Allegretto Vivace. The solo dance of Lois Ellyn captured the tinkling coquettish lightness of the piano music at this point. The adagio consisted mainly of a series of lifts of some ingenuity which are a Franklin specialty.

The music takes quite well to dancing and the choreography is generally suitable and widens somewhat the scope of male classic movament. The arrangements could be made to move from one to another with a closer fusion in order to eliminate the obvious walking around in order to get in position for the following sequence.

The performance could have been much more precise. Timing was often faulty and movement sloppy. Robert Morrow and Lois Ellyn, however, achieved some excellence of technique, and Shirley Weaver had good extension.

A Streetcar Named Desire so far outdid the other ballets in scenery, costumes, acting, movement and dancing that they seemed like an excuse for presenting it. Against a background of majestic decaying arches with swinging slat doors, the drama of Blanche Dubois was symbolically and realistically portrayed. The music varied from lyric melodies, to jazz hot and sweet, (in this ballet, mostly hot). Perfectly in accord with the music was the choreography which displayed a wide range of variety including both toe-dancing, jive and forceful mime. An example of the last is the poker scene.

On the whole the ballet has very much of the same spirit about it which made the movie so excellent. But it becomes more universal when translated into the dance medium. Franklin danced brilliantly with a savage sensuality. His timing splits the second in exactitude and his technique and interpretation are very strong. Mia Slavenska was equally strong in the role of the malajusted Blanche. This is a role just as demanding as that of Giselle in acting, although not technically. Just as Blanche never quite gets down to earth, so Slavenska dances almost always on tip toe. She portrayed the neurotic very convincingly, with effective progression of mental unbalance, as she repeated the same dance more and more wildly.

Stella was danced by Lois Ellyn who succeeded in creating both the primitive and the pure sides of her character. Among the many other characters, including people from her past, Valerie Smith as the Vendor of Flowers for the Dead was quite striking. This work is very powerfully constructed both dramatically and balletically.

I Laughed At Spring is just a huge joke on the coming of age in the springtime, set to a series of waltzes. Think what Kinsey could do if he could discover the nectar which Spring herself used to transfer the Slow Boy into a frustrated fiend. It was pleasant enough and has a fairly amusing conclusion. But the choreography is not very interesting, and is sometimes cluttered so that one suspects that like all jokes it would be funny only the first time. The only part which perhaps would remain of value is the comment on different kinds of boy-girl relationships. Vivien Attfield as Spring Herself was charming and light on her feet. Ronald Colton was almost embarrassingly descriptive as the faun.

The Nutcracker suite was very disappointing. The dancing was very rough. Even the Grand Pas de Deux of Slavenska and Franklin was mechanic. Of course Franklin did not get much chance to show his ability, but he was always present when his partner needed support. Amid the hodge-podge of dances the Arab dance, guaranteed authentic, held interest.

Still I suppose one is inclined to be a little harsh after the standard set by The Sadler's Wells Company.

Ercole Lappano Sings At Victoria

Signor Ercole Lappano is singing tonight in the Vic Union at 8:15. The singer is an Italian tenor, and he is being sponsored by the University Italian Club. This is the first appearance of the noted Italian singer in Canada. Just two years ago he received his degree from the Conservatory of Santa Cecelia at Rome.

Since then he has given concerts over most of Italy and Sicily, where he has received a great deal of enthusiastic applause. He hopes to continue his singing career in Canada.

His programme will consist of classical songs from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century, most of the songs coming from Italian operas.

Lappano has given his time free for the benefit of the Italian Club's treasury; therefore, there will be a nominal charge at the door. Members of the club will be allowed in at a slightly lower rate. For this modest charge the Italian Club is also offering refreshments.

Miss Frances Richardson will accompany Signor Lappano at the piano.

Christmas Tips On Sex, Parties

(Reprint from The Stanford Chaparral)

1) On a Date.

The beer party is by far the most common. They are quite nasty and hardly as nice as cocktail parties, but after all, what can you do about it? You can turn the whole thing to your advantage so far as your friends at home are concerned. Write and tell them all about it, but be sure that you say, or at least imply, that you are slumming and, my, isn't it gay for a change? Be sure to wear slacks or jeans since you will be lounging around, and you certainly wouldn't want to reveal a knee to a Varsity Blue. Most girls' knees aren't very attractive anyway.

The date at the fashionable night club requires an entirely different sort of wardrobe. You should have sixteen or seventeen different fur coats to prove to people that you belong to the right set. Up here in Toronto, they can be worn in warm weather. As a matter of fact, they go well with slacks and dark glasses.

When you walk into a night club, completely ignore the headwaiter, and act as if you don't care who owns the place. This will immediately put you into the Aren't-I-a-gay-one set. Ordering from the menu may prove a problem. You, of course, should know French, at least enough so that you can order from a menu and maintain a conversation about Balzac. The REAL sign of culture is a knowledge of French. This cannot be overemphasized. To get back to ordering, if the menu is in Hungarian or Italian, order the chef's special and act as if you and the chef are on intimate terms.

The eating of salads and lettuce always poses a problem. It is generally advisable to wait until the others begin to crunch; then you can join in, and no one will notice how noisy you really are. However, should you attract the attention of other guests by your munching, simply make some pun about rabbits. This is always good for a chuckle.

2) Advice for Situation B. In a Parked Car.

Men, charming souls that they are, sometimes become gregarious and physical. The general procedure is to stop the car with some excuse about being out of gas. Then the conversation turns to moonlight and romance. Sometimes it is almost necessary to know Judo to be able to handle a Varsity Blue. Learn to parry his advances but be coy and teasing about it, for he may become disinterested.

When he gets that gleam in his eye, act quickly. Ask him to tell a war story about himself, or you might suggest that you sing songs. "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep," has saved many a girl. It it's late, say that you are hungry, and can we go get a hamburger. There was a case of the co-ed who as a defensive measure suggested they go to get hamburgers. She became afflicted with food poisoning and came very near dying. Even in such a case, her decision was the right one.

Abbe Talks To Meeting Of Alliance

"The Alliance Canadienne is an autonomous society for the purpose of promotion of 'bonne entente' between the two most important ethnic groups of Canada: French-speaking and English-speaking Canada. The society which is to promote this movement in the whole of Canada." is the opening statement in the constitution of the Alliance Canadienne which will be voted on at their first meeting to be held on December 21st through the hospitality of the Newman Club.

After a permanent committee has been elected M. L'Abbe Maheux will give a conference as the first speaker to be sponsored on exchange by the newly formed organization. Mr. John Fisher is the English speaker who has gone to Quebec.

Mme. St. Hilaire of La Patrie in Montreal is now the co-chairman of the temporary committee which has organized the first meeting and drafted a temporary copy of the constitution. She will be nominated for the position of Chief Coordinating Officer for the whole of Canada.

McMaster To Remain In NFCUS

Hamilton, Dec. 4—(CUP)—McMaster University has decided to remain in NFCUS. A special meeting of the student union was called to hear both sides of the question and get student opinion on the subject. After listening to speakers defending and criticizing NFCUS, the students voted 147 to 85 to remain in the federation.

The meeting was the climax of a drive to get McMaster out of NFCUS. The movement was initiated by the campus newspaper. The meeting itself was the result of a petition to the Students' Council asking for an assembly to discuss the question of NFCUS membership.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One swallow doesn't make a summer, or something like that and, by the same token, three basketball games don't make a season, nor do two hockey games. So, to put it briefly, you shouldn't let yourself be stampeded by the fact that our hockey and basketball teams have lost three games each, and all in rather disastrous fashion.

Putting it briefly isn't going to get a column written, though, and besides, many readers are going to wonder where to find encouragement in three consecutive losses. For those reasons, therefore, a little enlargement.

What's Wrong With The Blues?

This is the first time in many years that the hockey Blues have opened the season before Christmas. Other years saw them play quite a full schedule of exhibition games before taking the ice against their league opponents. But this year, they plunged into the cold stream of regular play with only one game—and that a bit of a romp—under their belts. The net result is that the season is a quarter over before most fans have had a chance to realize that it's started. And the Blues have lost by scores of 7-5, 3-1 and (this hurts) 14-3.

Although those three games are beyond recall and represent a sizeable deficit for the locals, it seems likely that things will improve. Whether they'll improve enough to recover from this unfortunate beginning is a subject for conjecture just now but if that first game means anything, this ought to be one of the better hockey clubs to represent the U. of T. — no matter where it finishes.

The first person you think of after that 14-3 catastrophe is Jack Ross, Varsity's hard-working goal-tender. It's easy to think that Jack was the fellow responsible for those ten goals in the latter half of the third period against the Carabins. But, judging by reports from people who saw the game and from many of the Blues players, it seems that, rather than do a foldo, Jack played one of his better games on that particular occasion. Seems Jack would have been as well off if he'd been playing the Carabins all by himself — maybe even better off.

One observer said: "Maybe Harry Lumley would have stopped one or two of those shots but I doubt it. Sometimes Jack would stop three shots in a row before letting one in."

The same could be said for that 7-5 loss to the Carabins here a couple of weeks ago. At least four of the Montreal goals looked like "softies", long shots which Ross seemed to fan on. Fact of the matter was that our goalie didn't see many of those shots. It's not the best way possible to tend goal when you are craning your neck to see around players who are standing in your way.

Maybe all this seems to say that the defencemen haven't been earning their keep. Well, that's a rather mean way of putting it — the Blues have a potentially fine rear-guard and a well-balanced trio of forward lines. They're bound to improve.

A month from now, it'll be a new year and the hockey Blues will be heard from then.

Nothing Serious, Fellows

As for the basketball situation, it's customary early season practice to rip apart and analyze the the team and decide why they don't win games. But they never win these first few games against American colleges — remember?

Nobody was expecting the Blues to beat Harlem Globetrotters, of course. Nor did anybody concede them much of a chance against the mighty Eagles of Niagara University. Last Saturday you had a game they might have won. They almost did, too.

It was something to see in that last quarter when the Blues decided they'd like to win. Lou Lukenda and Bill Corcoran fought viciously, Jim Russell calmly sank shots from his outside position and George Stulac gave a sample of what a ball player he can be when he just stole the ball away from an Albion player and jogged down for a basket—twice. By the time the intercollegiate season rolls around in January, the chances are good that they'll play like that for whole games at a time.

They'll be heard from, too. When the games count.

Woodchoppers Win Crown In Second Division V-Ball

Forestry's A team won the Division II interfaculty volleyball championship Monday but were forced to the limit by the hard-fighting Law squad. The Legal Beagles started well by winning the first game 17-15 but then they faded under the Woodmen attack, losing 15-7, 15-9 and 15-0.

Then yesterday's action saw the setting of tomorrow's first division final berths as Junior S.P.S. A and Meds Third Year won semi-final games to enter the playoff for the title. The Skulemen disposed of Trinity A's in two games, 15-7 and 15-1, to slip into the big one against Meds III tomorrow at 5:00 p.m. in the upper gym at Hart House.

The doctors settled their argument with the neophytes from Pre-Meds IIB later in the evening coming back from a 15-11 setback in the first game to win 15-4 and 15-6. The final is only one set, but is the best of five.

Medicine A's, PHE Seconds Meet In Gals' B-Ball Final

The four top teams of the women's intramural basketball loop got together in Hart House last night to give spectators the best exhibition of the season. As would be expected in semi-final matches, action and excitement were at a premium.

True to form, Meds' 'A' lowered the boom on an eager, ever-ready PHE 1 team to put the Freshies into the consolation play-offs with a decisive 33-13 total. The second match of the night saw PHE II's best their seniors, PHE III's in a terrific fight that put them ahead with a close 25-21 win. That leaves Meds' 'A' to battle it out with PHE II's Thursday night in Hart House in what can't help but be a real hair-raiser.

It was Meds all the way with their sharper, more experienced team despite the efforts of a tremendously game PHE squad. Narrowing it down pretty sharply, Meds' glory arises from the talents of such players as Sally Wallace, Doris Kerr, and guard Sally Sarles. Taking the team as a whole, it's a great unit with speed and style that do considerable justice to the coaching of Mickey Barnett.

Top shooting honours went to Sally Wallace with 16 of the 33 Meds' points. Throughout, she played a spectacular game that left little to be desired. The Freshies suffered somewhat because of their slight stature and lack of experience. As a result, most of the play in that quarter took place under their basket. Score at half time was 19-6 for Meds' 'A'.

The general pattern continued in the second half as Meds pulled ahead of the Freshies making it 25-10 at three-quarter time. PHE II's ousted PHE III's, 25-21, the last period as they struggled to level a sadly uneven score. June Rathbun and Sylvia Kerr along with the rest of the squad gave their all in a last period drive that didn't have a hope against the mighty Medsters.

PHE II's ousted PHEIII's 25-21 in a magnificent match that kept everyone guessing right to the end. Joy Taylor and Inger Olsen were top scorers for the Seconds, and Shirley Roberts starred on the senior team. There is wonderful spirit in these teams and they both know how to play.

Half time score showed PHE II ahead 17-9. At this point, the Seniors began to put on their drive and managed to up the tally to 21-13 with the Seconds still in front The last quarter was a real scorcher as play became almost too hot to take. PHE II's were still ahead at the last whistle by a close hard-fought 25-21 win. It was a great game, just as Thursday night's promises to be.

UC Team Wins Lacrosse Title

UC'a lacrosse artists struck hard and fast Monday, stunning a fighting Meds crew by an 11-4 count to win the second game of their best of three series for the Intramural championship and the title. This gave the Redmen their second straight Division I championship.

Beaten 12-6 in the opening game last Friday, Meds came into this contest determined to win and tie up the series. For the first period it looked as though the desperate doctors might just make the grade against their older more seasoned opponents. The Medsmen held the defending champions from UC scoreless throughout the quarter but were checked to a deadlock themselves so that they gained only time by their excellent defensive display.

In the opener, the Medsmen learned from brutal experience what UC's opponents had known all season long. If they wanted to stop UC they would first have to find some way to stop Nobber Watson, the Artsmen's biggest gun. In the second match, the Medsters corrected their initial mistake, as this time they limited the Nobber to a ere pair of goals. However, the increased attention given Watson slackened the pressure on others of the UC Redmen and the Arts types broke loose for nine other counters and victory. Al Eagleson was the biggest wheel on the UC Steamroller notching a hat-trick while teammates Jack Rogers of intermediate football fame, matched the Eagle's effort with a sterling trio of goals on his own.

Bas Mackie smmacked home a pair of markers for the winning UC squad and George Patterson added the single to complete the scoring for the champions.

Division II finals are still going on and will be finished off today in the lower box gym of Hart House, with Knox and Pharmacy playing for the title.

Irish Reach First Place

By JOHN WILSON

Settling down to defensive play after a four-goal deluge in the first period, St. Mike's A's whipped the Vic Seniors 4-1 in Monday's hockey action in the Arena. Behind a two-goal effort by Barrett, the Double Blue squad rolled unmolested to their first win of the season and a tie with Senior Meds for top spot in Group I. McCracken and Evans notched the other tallies for the deciding margin, while Bob Dale beat Gerry Young late in the second to give Vic their only goal.

From the opening whistle the outcome was obvious, with the Mikesmen pushing the Victers all over the ice. Barrett struck for his first goal at 3:15 after Godin had snared the puck from a face-off in he Vic end and passed it out in front of the goal. Barrett grabbed his second of the afternoon after a goalmouth scramble in which Creighton was flat on his back with the Mike'smen swarming around the net. This one came at 10:10, closely followed at 12:03, when McCracken tipped a pass from Shepherd into the unguarded side of the Vic net. Evans put the defence into the party when Creighton fanned on a screened shot from the blue line at 18:45 to end the St. Mike's attack.

Victoria began to show some organization as the second stanza started but were unable to penetrate the stout defence in front of Gerry Young, or even Young himself on the few occasions they got through to him. Bob Dale finished off a nice passing play that started at the Vic blue line, picking up a rebound from the stick of Tom Jardine to beat Young for the lone Vic tally. Dale, and his linemates, Bill Hinder and Tom Jardine were definitely all that Vic had to offer in the way of an attack, while Tweddle and Carscallen held up a somewhat misshapen Vic defence.

Earlier action saw Junior SPS edge Pre-Meds 3-2 to move into second place in Group II. Goals by Don Hewson, Wright and Weir overcame the Doctors' 1-0 first period lead to give the Skulemen their second victory in as many starts. Don Paul played a great game, while scoring the first Meds' goal, and Harry Lewis kept the issue in doubt until the final minutes with his second period tally.

Paul's goal came at 14:35 when he picked up a loose puck at the Skule blue line to go in on Germaine for first blood. Al. Cecutti's netminding kept the Engineers off the score-sheet for the balance of the period, as Pre-Meds carried a shaky 1-0 margin into the second frame. The Skulemen quickly tied it after the intermission on Hewson's goal. Pucks flew fast in the next two minutes as Harry Lewis grabbed Murdock's rebound to give the Medsmen a short-lived 2-1 lead. Wright got it back with his fourth goal of the season at 7:25 and the sudden fury subsided. SPS couldn't be denied and at 18:25 Weir potted the game-winning tally to lead the Blue and Gold into their selond win.

Two other Monday games found the SPS VII's grabbing first place in Group VI, edging St. Mike's C 3-2, while Wycliffe walloped Emmanuel 5-1. McCleary, Knapp and Slater scored for the Engineers, while MacDougall and McKeonon potted the Mikemen's tallies. Hubicki ran his senson's total to seven goals in leading the Theologs to their one-sided victory. Sargent got the other, while Smith notched Emmanuel's lone tally. The SPS VI's shutout UC III 7-0 yesterday, to remain unscored upon in three games. Jay Quary pulled a hat trick, while McCashon, Mayer, Payne and Rowley scored the others. The Legal Beagles registered a 2-1 win over Forestry A to create a tie with the Woodsmen for first place in Group I of the Second Division

Cagers Seeking First Win

Varsity's basketball Blues, without a victory after three starts this season, take the floor tonight against the visiting Panzer College cagers, aiming at their first win of the year. The baby Blues will also show in a preliminary game with the UNYF club, starting at 7 in Hart House.

Playing three games last week, the Blues met two teams that rank with the best in the nation. Harlem Globetrotters (second squad) taught the Blues a 59-36 basketball lesson in Sudbury Tuesday night last, then the Varsity men hopped down to Niagara to meet the Falls hoopers in a match which our side dropped 92-29. Saturday ended a lost week when the Blues lost to Albion Britons in an Athletic Night feature in the Hart House gym.

Though the record looks black for Varsity, hope is strong in the Toronto camp that the Blues will come around before the season opens, and they should be in good form for tonight's encounter with the Panzer Redmen. The Blues are beginning to work together as a team and Bob Masterson is confident that they will play some good ball with the visitors.

Blue's lack of height will stand a rough test against the cloud-nudging Redmen who have three men above the 6' 4" mark. Centre John Gardner, 6' 4", is a veteran who is expected to lead the Panzers, a fast, high-scoring club. Other Panzers the Blues will have to watch are Redmen freshmen, Lou McWhorter, 6' 5", and John Ryan 6' 6½".

Varsity will rely on the sharp-shooting efforts of stars Jim Russell and George Stulac, both of whom have played great ball for the team in all their games this year.

Hockey Blues To Michigan

Varsity's hockey Blues will be still looking for their first win of the season this week-end, when they go to Ann Arbor, Michigan, for a pair of games with the University of Michigan Wolverines, one of the top college teams in the United States. The Blues have played one exhibition and three league games so far this winter and have lost them all.

The trip to Michigan is an annual affair for the U of T squad, although a slight change this year sees a cancellation of the customary game at Lansing, with Michigan State. A doubleheader with the Wolverines was scheduled instead. Last year, the Blues tied Michigan State 6-6 and were shaded by Michigan 6-3.

In their only preseason game this year, the Blues were beaten 3-2 by Lyndhurst East Yorks. Then they lost their home opener 7-5 to the defending champions, the University of Montreal Carabins. Last week-end, they lost 3-1 to Laval in Quebec City and then were swamped 14-3 by the Carabins in Verdun. Intercollegiate play resumes early in January.

The results so far put the Carabins in first place, with Laval second and Varsity in the basement. McGill Redmen have not begun their regular season yet.

Ken Lawson has paced the Varsity scorers in the three games to date netting three goals. Captain Red Stephen has sunk a pair as has John Akitt. Varsity's three forward lines seem to be well-balanced, with each doing its share of scoring. The first unit has Stephen at centre flanked by Jim Wilkes on the right wing and Ernie Bodnar on the starboard. Wilkes, however, received a pulled muscle in the Laval game and is a doubtful starter this week-end.

The second line is pivoted by rookie Don Cossar, with Robin Logie and Johnny Akitt on the wings. These three first-year men have been causing rival goalies considerable trouble and Akitt scored two goals in the opening game.

Another line has Harry Boyd centring for Ross Woods and Ken Lawson. Boyd, however, missed last week-end's trip because of an injury and may not go along this time.

Mal Hughes, from the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, is expected to join the Varsity defence this week-end. Hughes has had eligibility difficulties but is ready now and will probably make his first start this time. The Blue rearguard so far has been comprised of Paul Prendergast, Lou Appleby, John Tolton, Dan Tovey and Colin Ashton.

The Michigan-Varsity games will be played Friday and Saturday nights in the U of M arena.

No Longer Granted

If we had to name the one person who was vital to the production of The Varsity, the choice would have been obvious and unanimous. Mr. Les Coles, night superintendent of the Rotary Printing Press in Oshawa where the paper is printed every night. Although he was never a member of the staff, Les gave time and attention to The Varsity which was rarely equalled by any staffer.

He was responsible for seeing that this paper came out every morning; he the one who ironed out all the troubles inexperienced journalists inevitably put into a paper. And his troubles were magnified because, while the paper was set up here at the University, it had to be sent—every last word of it—to Oshawa to be printed. He did it. Tuesday morning he died, in his 58th year.

When The Varsity went to Oshawa eight years ago, Les took control of it. It had never been placed in better hands. He became part of The Varsity and he took a special interest in this student paper which grew to an affection and came to include the entire Varsity staff. His friendship knew no limits; he was always confident that "things would turn out."

In return Les earned the deepest respect of everyone connected with The Varsity. His association with this paper became so intimate that he was awarded The Varsity pin — the first and only non-staffer to carry it.

Although his ability and willingness unfortunately were often taken for granted, the confidence and respect in which he was held were sincere. Unbounded were the friendship and the respect he offered.

One Little, Two . . .

A touch of India will again be unveiled at this University. Next week, December 14, 15, and 16, the "Treasure Van of 1953" will be shown in Hart House.

The "Van", an exhibition and sale of the handicrafts of India, has about two strikes against it before it starts. Many students will not be around the campus during the week, and other students will be so busy with exams and reports that the sale may go unnoticed. We hope this is not the case, for the sale needs and should get students' support.

The Indian exhibition is sponsored by the World University Service of Canada. WUS is an international organization "devoted to bringing together students and faculty of all nationalities in order to establish through human encounter the basis of understanding from which international solidarity derives."

Last year the proceeds of the Indian sale went towards the summer seminar in India. Three Toronto students participated in it.

The fact is, therefore, that WUS can and is doing something. It has taken tremendous strides to further world student understanding. Unfortunately, it has given Toronto the poorest time of the year for the sale. But that should not detract from its revealed value to the students of Toronto and Canada.

Suffer Yourself

Freedom of the student press they call it. And they never fail to repeat it over and over again.

This is done at Toronto and it is also done at the University of Georgia. But the situation is totally different in the two cases — at Georgia there is outright censorship. No, they don't call it that, but it is.

The student newspaper at Georgia was threatened with withdrawal of state funds if it again attacked racial segregation in the schools. Roy Harris, member of the state board of regents then piped up and explained that his stand was not one of endangering freedom of the press.

"This university is not going to turn over money to the Red and Black unless the editors change their policy," Harris is reported to have said. Now we wonder how he defines censorship.

The paper at Georgia is mostly supported by state and university funds. About one third is paid by the students. Although this may make it a university operation, whatever that may mean, there is still little room for excuses about censorship.

Racial discrimination is deplorable in itself and every student editor that writes out against it will win our support. Censorship of anti-discrimination editorials is no less deplorable.

Each morning The Varsity carries this quotation on its masthead: "Suffer yourself to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourself to be hanged; but publish your opinions, it is not a right, but a duty." By this we stand.

And we should like to pass this on to the editors of the newspaper at the University of Georgia.

No Comment

Without intentionally trying to put one faculty in a bad light compared to others, it is interesting to note that the Engineering Society Executive has now held two successive meetings without a quorum and has been unable to act on any motions. We hope this is not an intentional boycott.

Our Readers Write:

A 'Modern' Religion No Answer

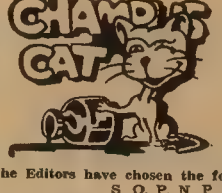
The Editor,
The Varsity:

The article by John H. R. Lee which appeared in The Varsity of Monday, December 7, is so striking that it should receive comment, and I would begin by drawing attention to Mr. Lee's understanding of the word "religion". Religion, if I understand him correctly, is a code which enshrines truths by which men are to live. Further, Mr. Lee give the impression that religion is manufactured by men for other men in an attempt to answer human needs. Mr. Lee indicates that in his judgement men today need to be told that they are innately good. Therefore we need a new modern religion which will tell them so. Men need also to be told that God exists for them and therefore a modern religion should declare this fact.

It is against this kind of thinking that orthodox Christianity resolutely sets its face. The God of the Christian religion is no cure-all deity, i.e. He does not exist merely to satisfy human needs and desires. He rather seeks to draw men to obedience to His Will and Purpose. Christianity knows nothing of a God who exists for the sake of man.

The Christian religion claims that God, in order to make known His purpose for man, has broken into our human life, revealing His Will in the historical person, Jesus, the Christ of God. Here, says Christianity, is to be found God's will for man in this world. The Christian church has been commissioned to declare this revelation to all mankind. Far from being an escapt mechanism, the acceptance of this divine revelation has forced many to an ever increasing involvement in human society, seeking always to conform society and the world to the divine will. Mr. Lee, who I believe is a member of the UTCCF, should at least acknowledge the influence Christian teaching has had upon many distinguished members of the CCF party. On the other hand, Mr. Lee is quite correct when he indicates that there are many Christians who have failed either to understand th teachings of Christianity or have refused to surrender themselves to that teaching.

It is the contention of the Christian Church, however divided she may be on theological issues, that a modern religion, constructed as Mr. Lee wishes it, will never be able to banish the demons that torment human life, of which the chief in our age are anxiety, meaninglessness and futility with thier masks of collectivism, eroticism and despair. The Church declares that only the acceptance of the Gospel of Jesus Christ can defeat these evil forces since that Gospel, and that Gospel alone, has God and not man as its author. Therefore he Church does not blush to recall men to the perfect revelation of God in Jesus Christ. Depite Mr. Pidhaini, whose letter is found below Mr. Lee's article, the Christian is bound to this divine revelation as perfect and final. It is true that men have talked and written away lifetimes, killed and died for that revelation. Yet even in the waste and the sin which has accompanied so much of this, there has usually been present somewhere, even among the most detestable, the conviction that the claims of Chrisian revelation were so all embracing, so exclusive that it was a matter of life and death to discuss, to understand, to defend and to propagate the Christian message.



John Rowe,
Chaplain to Hart House.

Congrats To Lee

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Warmest congratulations are due to Mr. John H. R. Lee for his fine criticism of that bundle of religions styled Christianity. And this in spite of the ugly implications with respect to our foreign policy which that criticism conveyed. He would be gravely mistaken, I submit, who would assert that you can fool all of the socialists all of the time.

IT MEANS THE SAME

By AUBREY GOLDEN

Fifteen years ago, a little boy stood in line with many other little boys and girls and waited for the Santa Claus at the head of the slow procession to get to him. He stood there waiting with the patience that only a boy of five could muster up in order to receive a bag of candy and to confide his wishes in the kindly man in the red suit.

he stood, he thought, and as he thought he recalled an unpleasant incident at the kindergarten Christmas party the day day before. It wasn't his holiday because Jews didn't believe in Christ. Another little boy had told him. He didn't belong there at all. But the songs that were sung were slow and nice. Santa Claus had a charm all his own, he clutched the toy boat, given to him by the tousle-headed little girl in the gift exchange and tears began to trickle down his cheeks. He ran out the door and all the way home where he tearfully confined in his mother.

It wasn't really their Christmas she told him, but they were living in a land where the holiday was celebrated every year at this time and they should appreciate the beauty of it. She very carefully explained as best she could to the now dubious youngster that Santa Claus would come and that he should forget the incident.

The next day, moving closer to the department store Santa, he turned and looked to his mother for reassurance. She smiled and, satisfied he turned to the business of preparing his mental list of things to request. Everything about yesterday and the unpleasantness was forgotten.

But was it really forgotten? At some future time will he see a Christmas tree of a Santa Claus or hear a Christmas carol and recall the unpleasantnes of that childhood experience?

He has grown up now and has developed a philosophy about such things as Christmas belonging to him or to someone else. Now he knows that beauty of thought and the beauty of a song or a work of art belongs to none who do not appreciate it and to all who do. He may be a Buddhist, Jew, Moslem or Hindu but he now lives in a country where Christmas is a celebration which for him is a time when people lighten their step, do their gift shopping and think a little about "Peace on earth, good will towards men". These concepts, as long as they don't interfere with the person's particular religious convictions, he now feels, can be appreciated by all.

But this individual, with memories of Christmas both pleasant and unpleasant, feels particularly good at that time of the year. He likes the ideas of happy children, peace, good fellowship and that "Christmas spirit", beauty in art, music and thought are universal, to be appreciated for themselves.

Christmas

In The Kremlin

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the Kremlin
Not a creature was stirring, not even a gremlin.
The hip-boots were hung by the big samovar
In hopes that Big Brother soon would be thar.
The Ruskis were snuggled all sound in their beds
Feeling good 'cause they all had been true little reds.
And Georg in his greatcoat and I in my sables
Had just started to write political fables;

When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter
I sprang from my chair to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a Cossack
Tore open the shutter, and there was old Mossadegh.
The moon on the breast of the pure Russian snow
Gave the lustre of midday to objects below,
When what to my wondering eyes should appear,
But a bourgeois chauffeur and a gleaming Chrysleer.

With a capitalist owner, so ugly and swarthy,
I knew in a moment it must be McCarthy.
More rapid than broomsticks his engines they roared
And he shrieked and he ranted and Pearson deplored.
Now up in the sky there appeared a new star,
And a voice out of heaven fluted down from afar;
"Peace on earth," sang the chorus, "and Good-will to men,
For this day at least, cease your hatreds. Amen."

As snowflakes drift down in an unending race,
So the tears of McCarthy rolled over his face.
From the eyes of Malenkov the drops downward flew,
Although he rules millions and Molotov, too.
And then in a twinkling I heard o'er my head
The car as it landed with roof-shaking tread.
As I drew in my head and was turning around
Down the chimney McCarthy came with a bound.

He was dressed in grey flannel from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot.
But he didn't care, for that night he'd seen glory,
He shook hands with Malenkov, and called him dear 'Georgi'
His beady eyes twinkled, his mouth really smiled,
His cheeks were like roses, his heart like a child.
Our Hero was gay, and almost hospitable,
Instead of frowning and looking formidable.

The new friends went out in the cold icy snow,
For children were there on the pavement below.
Malenkov was chubby, right funny old elf,
And I laughed when I saw him, in spite of myself
A wink of their eyes, and a twist of the head,
Soon let the kids know they had nothing to dread.
They sang Christmas carols in Russian and English.
Then gave them all presents and stopped being selfish.
But McCarthy was due for a Senate committee
So soon he was forced to leave Moscow city.

He jumped into his car, gave the driver a nod,
And away they all rattled like peas in a pod.
But I heard him exclaim ere he drove out of sight,
Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night.

Very Merry Christmas

'one-eye' on santa

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One-eyed Benny being the type of fellow who likes to appear tough and hard-hearted, I hope you won't noise this story around too carelessly but it's the sort of story that shows you that Benny is a pretty warm guy inside and that, although individuals like Benny are considered a knock to society in that they bet on races and everything else they can get odds on, they are frequently okay guys.

Anyway, with the Christmas season beetling into the homestretch, the time seems right to tell it. Here it is as Benny told it to me.

It comes up the morning of a chilly December day, less than a week before Christmas and One-eyed Benny, a speculator on horse races and various and sundry other athletic events, is on the way out of his third floor room to Murphy's greasy spoon for a spot of breakfast, although since the racing season closes Benny is hard put to rub two dimes together and the chances that he will have to put the bite on Murphy for his fodder. As he is passing the second floor landing, he hears a doll crying and thinks to himself as follows: "This will be Mrs. O'Connor weeping and crying again."

Benny is rather a soft-hearted fellow and if there is one thing that gets him reaching for the old handkerchief, it is a doll crying, especially when she happens to be as young and pretty a dudy as Mrs. O'Connor. Benny knows what the trouble will be for Mrs. O'Connor's ever-loving husband cuts out on her not long before and, what with a three-year-old little gent like her son Horace needing milk and what not, and rent to pay and this and that, Mrs. O'Connor is almost as broke as Benny. But Benny steps in the door anyway and there is Mrs. O'Connor sitting and crying for all she is worth. Benny has long since decided that Mr. O'Connor must be a large dud for walking out on a shape like this little doll.

Benny pats her on the shoulder and says things like now, now, now and there, there, there and finally she hauls out a handkerchief and dries her eyes and honks her nose and says to Benny as follows: "Oh Benny, it is so awful. Christmas is coming and little Horace is counting on Santa Claus to bring him an electric train and I am not able to pay Mrs. Morris the rent, let alone buy trains. As a matter of fact, little Horace doesn't have a drink of milk in some time and I am wondering if he will ever be around on Christmas to find out that everybody doesn't get presents and eat turkey."

Then she sets about weeping and crying again and Benny says a few more now, now, nows and there, there, theres and heads for Murphy's again, thinking that if Woodbine were only open, he could run himself a parlay that would buy little Horace enough milk to swim in and a train big enough to ride on. As things are, though, Benny's biggest worry is whether he will be eating any breakfast or not, depending on Murphy's frame of mind.

At the corner, Dundas Danny is selling the daily blats and Benny buys one to pass the time of day. This turns out to be an important purchase for Benny as he happens to glance over the classified section and sees the following advertisement: "WANTED—stout gentleman to act as Santa Claus at exclusive party" and it goes on to give the phone number. Now Benny being a fellow who casts about as wide a shadow as anybody in Toronto, he is more than somewhat interested in this proposition, especially as it offers a payoff of half a C-note, which is a fortune to Benny at this stage of the game.

It turns out that this job comes off at the home of a Mrs. Smythe-Smythe in a rather posh section of the city and all Benny has to do is report to a guy called Banks at five o'clock of the Saturday evening. It seems Benny has to play the Santa Claus part twice, once at a party for the children and once at a party for adults later on.

Comes five o'clock of the appointed day and Benny presents himself at the side door of the Smythe-Smythe layout, which is a very classy layout indeed. The door is opened by Banks, the butler, and who should Banks turn out to be but an old friend of Benny's called Leamington Louie. Louie acquires this name Leamington because of a deal he worked years ago whereby he drove truckloads of fruit and vegetables from Leamington to Toronto. Only these truckloads also contained cases of fermented and alcoholic fruit juice. Benny and Louie are more than slightly happy to see each other as it is some years since (they last meet, Louie being holed up in Kingston for several years, a result of the above-mentioned business. They retire to the kitchen where they proceed to drink some of Mrs. Smythe-Smythe's finest Christmas spirit and talk over old times.

It gets along toward five o'clock and Banks (alias Louie) hustles out a red suit and a set of whiskers and gets Benny into them. Then Benny rushes into the living room, dragging sleigh bells and laughing ho, ho, and there are a couple of dozen little guys and dolls clustered around a big tree which has a pile of parcels under it which Benny is supposed to give out to the various people. This he does, laughing all the time and having a great time and off in the corner, Mrs. Smythe-Smythe is beaming and being pleased at the fine job Benny is doing as Santa Claus. The little children storm around him wishing to shake hands with him and ask him questions and so forth but he goes straight to his work under the tree, picking up packages and calling out names. But, after an hour or so, he becomes somewhat weary of this job, especially as the little children have commenced tugging at his whiskers and kicking his shins to see if he is real. In fact, he begins to accidentally step on a few toesies and the childish screams of pain are something awful to hear and the chances are a few of these kids stop believing in Santa Claus.

However, before long, Benny has distributed all the gifts and the children are hustled off to bed and only the adults are left slugging champagne and making merry and Benny rejoins Banks (alias Louie) in the kitchen as it is not for some time that he will be giving out the adults' presents.

Benny and Louie get to drinking more of Mrs. Smythe-Smythe's finest Christmas spirit and talking over more old times and by the time the guests are ready to receive their gifts, Benny and Louie are rummed up more than somewhat. Benny puts his whiskers back on and they pack a bag of parcels which Benny is to deliver to the guests who are somewhat rummed up themselves by now. "Listen, Benny," Louie says. "Be careful with this stuff because there are liable to be valuable gewgaws such as diamond necklaces and platinum compacts and so forth and if any of it gets lost, we're dead."

"Don't worry about me," says Benny. "I've handled that kind of stuff before and never lost a bit of it."

"That's what I'm afraid of," says Louie, "but remember if you louse up this deal, you'll never see your fifty and the chances are I'll be back to driving a fruit truck again for recommending you for the job. Have another snort."

Benny totters off to the living room dragging the bag of parcels and the string of sleigh bells and laughing as follows: ho, ho. His appearance causes a great cheer among the guests who, as mentioned before, are somewhat rummed up by this time and he reels over to the tree where he opens the bag and looks at the pile of parcels inside.

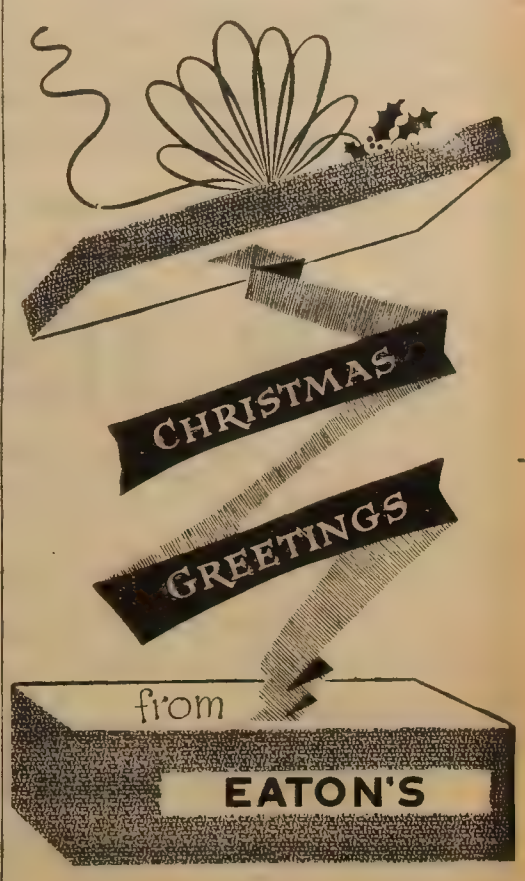
"Cynthia Nickleson," he calls out but when Mrs. Nickleson steps forward he grabs the wrong parcel as he is in no condition to know the difference. Neither is she in any condition to know that the parcel she has is marked Mrs. Matheson and she tears it open. "To my beloved, from Fred," she reads from the card which is in the box with the jewelled tiara. A man jumps up on the sidelines and it is Herbert Nickleson. He rushes over to Fred Matheson and yells "Aha, trying to make time with my wife, are you, you cad," and hits him in the jaw as follows: Pow

Mrs. Matheson, who has remained in the background during this time steps up and hits Mr. Nickl on over the head with her handbag. Mrs. Nickleson rushes across the room and slaps Mrs. Matheson in the face, whereupon Matheson clips Mr. Nickleson with a left uppercut. Mr. Nickleson counters with a kick to the stomach and before long the party divides into two camps which are fighting it out with considerable gusto. When a china cabinet falls over and a flying chair smashes the chandelier, Benny begins to think of taking it on the Jesse Owens—half a C-note or no half a C-note. Before cutting out, he stuffs a couple of parcels in his pocket plus a couple of bottles of Mrs. Smythe-Smythe's finest Christmas spirit.

The next morning Benny wakes up with a headache of no mean proportions and is somewhat surprised to find a Santa Claus suit and a set of whiskers draped over his chair. He is more surprised to find a couple of parcels and a couple of empty bottles in the pockets. The parcels contain the following: a diamond necklace and a gold wrist watch. Gradually, the cobwebs clear away and he recalls what transpired the night before and he decides he will head back to Mrs. Smythe-Smythe's place to return the goods and tell her to forget the fifty in view of the way he loused up her party. In the hallway he meets Mrs. O'Connor who informs him that little Horace is now in bed and looking mighty grey as though he hasn't been eating enough and Benny is kicking himself that he can't help him out. As things stand, Benny is in considerable trouble, for not only is he carrying two pieces of hot merchandise but he has a note from his landlady offering two alternatives: (1) pay September's rent (2) move.

While passing Dundas Danny's stand, he is stopped by the headlines which say: "DRUNKEN ORGY ENDS IN RIOT, TEN PEOPLE JAILED, POLICE TO INVESTIGATE WILD PARTY." And Benny is beginning to think Mrs. Smythe-Smythe will not be glad to see him and he is going to look peculiar returning these parcels to her in jail and furthermore, the chances are these parcels are going to be forgotten during the court cases which will follow. Anyway, it's a cinch nobody will remember him on account of his whiskers and especially because he notices a smaller headline saying: "POLICE SEEK MISSING BUTLER FOR CLUES IN PARTY RIOT."

And at the time, he is passing Sawbuck Sid's pawn shop and in he goes. A little later, he comes out whistling and thinking that before he is done, he will have done a better job of playing Santa Claus than he did at Mrs. Smythe-Smythe's party.



Well, it is some time in January that Benny tells me this story and I say, "Benny, you know it is a dishonest thing you do. The police will take a dim view of your action if they ever find out and the chances are they will can you for a big chunk of time."

"It was just another bet," Benny says. "Guess I won for once. Anyhow I see Mrs. Smythe-Smythe still driving her Cadillac so I guess she's not too bad off. Now if you'll excuse me, the Missus and I are taking little Horace to the zoo."

Christmas In Toronto

By H. RIDER GAUNT

The music was coming from all over the place. "Silent Night", CKEY blasted; "Holy night". Across the street an electronic larynx on Kresge's caromed the refrain along Bloor Street; "All is calm . . . "

Wet snow had fallen, but now it was a light Toronto drizzle. He felt the coldness of water in his shoes. Would Santa bring him galoshes? Santa Claus was driving his reindeer along a store front. This year they all had red noses. Santa too. On the sidewalk, the noses were all colours and shapes. They went by at eye level, at waist level, at shoulder level, all pointing their owners at some elsewhere of great importance. Behind them eyes looked uniformly grim, squinted against the rain and humanity.

The streetcar was not remarkable. Its name was Yonge. Inside it were b o d i e s, wet overcoated and innumerable. Unidentified feet were under and over his. Faces strained upward, to breathe, or to avoid meeting each other. He suppressed an impulse to moo.

"Christians," he thought, "brings people together. In Toronto, when there are two people on a streetcar, one sits at each end. Torontonians are mutually repulsive, like molecules in a gas, but here they are, close enough to make love, hundreds of them." They were not making love. Love, he decided, could not be made.

Santa Claus was there, too, smiling a b o v e the heads. His hands were full of watches.

"Bunsha goddam hypocrites," a voice pronounced. Wine mingled with the wet coat smell, and the silence went on. Someone had spoken, in Toronto, without an introduction. Drunk.

The kinetic molecular heads extended into Simpson's and Eaton's. He made a game of getting between the bodies. Left, stop; right, spurt; change-of-pace, dip-and-dive. There were some of the new ties on a counter. Neat. A laden woman hit him head on, and bounced away, swearing.

Wendy wanted a Winnie-the-Pooh bear. The man beside him at the counter grinned with half his mouth while the girl showed him one. She was small and hard, and very tired. How could she move so fast, so long? His shoulders were bending under his overcoat.

On the way out he hit more people, because the bear made him a bigger target. But he held it over his head on the streetcar, and he was lucky. He found a clear place on the handrail.

It was Christmas. Wendy gave him a pair of diamond socks, and he gave her the Winnie-the-Pooh bear. "It's wonderful," she said. "You shou'dn't've. Really." He kissed her. "It was nothing," he said. "Nothing at all."

Great Hall Reservation Due Today

Reservations for the annual Hart House Christmas dinner must be made in the Warden's Office, before 5:00 p.m. today, Warden Joseph McCulley reminded students last night.

Introduced about 23 years ago by former Warden Bickersteth, the dinner is held in Great Hall for all members of the House from foreign countries. Also members from distant points in Canada and the United States who are not returning home or spending the holidays with relatives or close friends are invited.

This bright spot in a Christmas-away-from-home will happen in Great Hall on December 18, at 6:45 p.m., the last day of the Michaelmas term.

"It is an effort on the part of the House to provide a festive family dinner for those students hwo would otherwise miss the intimate family celebration," Mr. McCulley said.

Saintly Simon's

One of the more pleasant aspects of the elaborate preparations made on all levels for Christmas is the abundance of Yuletide music. On the campus this festive season is traditionally marked by the concert of the St. Mary Magdalene Singers.

Outside the Ivory Tower two of the performances which are usually associated with the celebration of the Nativity are The Messiah, presented this year by the Mendelssohn Choir on the 28th and 29th of December, and the carol anthology sung by St. Simon's Choir which I heard Tuesday night.

The curtain rose in Eaton Auditorium on a tableau of the Gentlemen and Boys of St. Simon's Choir in Elizabethan ruffs grouped informally under a chandelier. Mr. Lewis who conducted the group expected every man to do his duty. Every man did. But the boys under the strain of the second long program did not equal their high standard. The reputed utter purity of boy sopranos sounded more like Anna Russell's take-off: slightly flat. The valiant effort of a few to keep up the pitch only made the tone more strident. But this was not always true — only in the pieces where the notes lay high such as Dr. Willan's Sun of Righteousness — and at times, the bell-like tone which is usually characteristic of this choir was heard.

Apart from this drawback, the performance gave evidence of the meticulous training which Mr. Lewis gives to diction, phrasing, starts, and endings, although sometimes the pace seemed to drag a little.

Some of the loveliest singing of the evening was done in the two entr'actes by small groups. The first, a group of six, sang Provencal Carols. Here their advantage in having a male alto was more apparent than ever. This unique tone contributes much to the overall quality of an ensemble. A group of eight sang Christmas Hymns. The banal becomes transferred to the beautiful when sung in imaginative arrangements with intelligence and artistry.

The various sections were sung in red and black soutanes with white surplices, in Dickensian toppers and ordinary woraday shirts and trousers. The most intersting of these to me was the group of Carols by modern English composers. Before Dawn by Armstrong Gibbs is written with the same poetic quality of the words by Walter de la Mare. Although this was near the end of a long and varied evening the quality of performance picked up from here until the joyous ending in the figgy pudding of We Wish You a Merry Christmas.

DRAMA REVIEW

Whittaker's Much Ado

Shakespeare's play Much Ado About Nothing, because of its verbal bramble, its overheavy tragic willows, its plot like a wandering stream, does provide a director, with imagination, a good variety of bush and stream for abundant cultivation. Herbert Whittaker has that imagination and he exploits it brilliantly; his make-believe play has at times the darkness of a witching wood, the pageantry of a flower garden, the fantasy of magic lanterns in the dark; it is a tale told in wonder.

The lamp of joyous criticism can alight on two aspects of this play which were done with flourish, flair, and creative exuberance. One was the acting of Rex Southgate as the constable, the other was the pageantry, color, and brilliance of the production itself — of the set, costumes, music, singing, blocking, grouping, lighting and so on. Rarely has a play offered such visual excitement in a kind of formalized of stylized make-believe fashion.

It is an aspect of theatre which has been neglected in recent years in America, but this quality of make-believe, of real living in a play contrive from start to finish, brings a new dimension to theatre. Where this kind of play shows to best effect is in the handling of love. I know of no modern American or English playwright (outside of Fry) who can handle the magic of love without debasing it, or embarrassing it, or making of it platitude - porridge. Shakespeare, handling the theme with poetic exaggeration, with an incredible plot, still manages to capture its wonder.

The play has two love stories. One is about a proud man and woman (Benedick and Beatrice) who don't believe in love but who are tricked into believing that they are loved each by the other. The other begins with two lovers (Claudio and Hero) openly loving who are split apart by the slander of a villain; it has the elements of Othello and Romeo and Juliet, is not comic, and is placed as a contrast to the light comic story of Benedick and Beatrice. This mixture of comic and semi-tragic does not suceed entirely because much of the verbal comedy is completely lost, and the tragic element stretches on too long. It is fascinating nevertheless to see this alternating of mood, to watch characters so real, so tragically ready to kill for a word, working within a frame-work so light and airy, so contrived and artificial.

The best moments in the play outside of Southgate are the group scenes handled with flowing blocking, with a kind of balletic movement which is extremely effective. I am thinking of the marriage scene which was most beautiful, the grove scene, the wonderful masquerade dance, the trooping of the guard, and the slander scene carried out in darkness lit by dashes of lightning. Although there are a great many scenes only one simple outline set was used and it became part of the theatrical game to see in how many different ways the set could be used; in other words an air of make-believe was projected by the stylized acting, movement, set, by the lighting which did not come up gradually but changed while action was on, and so on.

Furthermore the costuming was bright and imaginative with none of the sense of skimping which sometimes is felt in University productions. Of especial note was the costume worn by Southgate and his small side-kick. The music performed offstage with violin, cello, recorder and harpsichord plus singing was a further perfect note in this unusual production in which these elements that are usually relegated to the final paragraph of a critic's review, were the very elements that made the show.

The acting like the rest of the production had a certain stylization. The villain looked and spoke like a villain; the bit characters gave sharply stamped portrayals: the heroes and heroines moved and talked with suitable graciousness. Out of this there was one performance so much above the general excellence, that it must be recorded. Rex Southgate as the constable was exquisite. Playing this Falstaffian character in a manner somewhat reminiscent of Robert Newton, he achieved a swaggering, pompous, wordy, caneswinging fool that will grow with relish in the imagination for years to come. It was the Shakespeare of the streets as he should be played, with braggarty, bigger-than-life exaggeration, humanity, and with large, bountiful, gross words. A memorable performance.

Aside from Rex Southgate, John Douglas as Benedick gave a completely rounded performance and moved from haughty wit to humorous confusion without a flicker of falseness. Others in an excellent cast were Douglas Quirk (Don Pedro), Christian Grotrian (Claudio), Rupert Brook (Leonato), Martin Hunter (Don John), Molly Goldby (Hero), and Gigi Nyberg (Beatrice). The rest of the large cast, the set designers, painters, musicians, and all the numerous others who made successful a play, notable not for individual brilliance but for group brilliance, are to be congratulated.

The first Vic-Trinity production of a difficult play justified in every way their combination. Mr. Whittaker is a brilliant director, especially of classical works with a fantastic vein in them, and if he continues to produce and direct this annual play I foresee that it will become one of the standing highlights of the season, professional or amateur.

IN QUEER PLACES

Undergrad Art

There are artists in the queerest places. One of the queer places where they are is the University of Toronto. Once a year, these artists emerge into the light of HartHouse Art Gallery, where, for two weeks, people come and look at them. This annual exhibition, if not the best of the Hart House efforts, is usually the most interesting, both because the painters are people you jostle at lectures and lunch, and because some of them are, surprisingly, good.

The circuit begins quietly with some miniatures by R. M. Quigley of III SPS, and some doodles directed against modern art by J. R. Meyer, of Vic. Then a Medsman, R. Mech, turns in a Jacksonesque waterfall, followed closely by a sterling riverscape by O. Biskaps. This man has style. An excellent draftsman (and a fourth year architect, too) he goes in for flat planes and contours, which make his work recognizable as well as distinctive. "Chemical Industry", by A. Freeman, IV SPS, shows a decided aptitude for Chemical Engineering. Alex Gigeroff, a law man, captures some sunlight in two woodsy scenes. But a silver-plated medal goes to Robert Bateman, whose Eskimos (Esquimaux) and rocks demonstrate a bold, confident control of his medium, worthy of a name painter. Watch this boy.

Another style belongs to Ab Piotrowski, III Meds, who slaps colours on canvas with a wise abandon, and produces some very pleasing results.

Also showing: H. N. Nagel ,whose abstract, "Going Home" excells his more literal attempts at representation. H. Petroff, whose best exhibited work is "Red Maples". D. G. Taylor, III UC, who uses a dramatic pattern for his "Portrait of an Architect" but falls short on execution. D. A. Urquhart has the only other abstract, "Vantage Point".

Generally, this exhibition lacks in imagination rather than in ability. The techniques are tried (by other people) and the subjects are usual, but possibly originality is the prerogative of age and long experience. The nice thing about the present show is that it proves our University has not degenerated to a mere B.A. factory. Not yet.

Peter Grant.

De Kresz And Hagen

Yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Women's Musical Club of Toronto, an audience at Eaton Auditorium was able to hear an excellent ensemble group conducted by Mr. de Kresz, as well as the talented Miss Betty-Jean Hagen.

First on the programme were two Bach selections, Contrapunctus numbers I and IV. Mr. de Kresz's playing of them showed that he was conscious not only of the various fugal themes, but of the separate interpretations each one should get in order to advance the music of the selections as a whole. Excellent phrasing, purity of theme, serenity, and depth of tone of the strings made the Bach the best of the chamber music.

Schubert's German Dances were all played in a spirit of good fun. In the first one, there was a delightful interplay between the violas and the violins, in which one group accompanied while the other rhapsodized. It was too bad that the violas weren't able to rhapsodize as well as the violins, but the playing of them, showed that he orchestra as a whole played so well The second dance was rather monotonous, but in the third and fourth Mr. De Kresz brought out the spontaneity and life of the pieces.

The last chamber music selection was a group of Rumanion Folk-Dances from Transylvania, by Bartok. These were closely related in pattern, but were each given an individual approach, so that this performance ranged from a sonorous introductory dance, through a gay gypsy-like group, to a whirling finale.

As guest artist, Miss Betty-Jean Hagen was a tremendous success. So much could be said about her magnetic personality and her grace of bearing, because they tie in with her exceptional ability to play the violin. These things would never be mentioned if she depended upon them to assist in achieving her musical effect. But if that is not the case. The Haydn Concerto in C Major she played to perfection. Even her momentary loss of memory in the second movement was unable to break the emotional atmosphere she was creating. Her phrasing was perfect; her tone was exceptional; and her technical ability was fantastic.

She also played Vaughan Williams' Concerto Accademice in D Minor. Her flawless attack was best heard in the short melodic fast-moving first movement. The accompaniment in the second movement was lacking in variation and interest, but that was made up for in the third. This last movement was taken at a terrific pace from beginning to end, but Miss Hagen always had it well under control.

This was one concert that no one should have missed.

Plan Exchange Of Odd Gifts At Varsity Christmas Tree

Next Thursday the carillon of Hart House will announce the fourth annual Varsity Christmas Tree, sponsored by the Blue and White Society. The Christmas Tree attempts to bring together the whole university in a common celebration of the Yuletide spirit.

As usual a feature of the evening will be the inter-faculty gift exchanges. This year for the first time, the arrangement of the exchanges has been changed. OCE will exchange gifts with Social Work, Dents with Architecture, Knox with Wycliffe, Music with Emmanuel, POT with Pharmacy, PHE with Forestry, Vic with UC, St. Mike's with Trinity, Nursing with Engineering, and Law with Meds.

Another first this year is the two choral groups which will assist in the service. The Hart House Glee Club and The University of Toronto mixed chorus will sing selections. During the special Christmas programme everyone will join in singing the carols, and listening to the "Christmas Story", read by President Sidney Smith.

A well-known campus personality—a professor—will be on hand to handle the chores of Santa claus, complete with padding and beard. He wil mediate between the colleges and faculties in the exchange of gifts.

The Great Hall will be decorated for the occasion, the room will be darkened, only illiminated by the lights of the gigantic Christmas tree and the glow of the yule log in the fire place.

The evening will be very informal so that due to the cramped conditions of the Great Hall, people will sit on the floor, around the fire place. It is recommended, therefore, that everybody bring blankets, to soften the effect of sitting on the floor.

Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden will be the Master of Ceremonies for the evening. The entertainment is free, and is open to both women and men, either stag or in couples.

John McKellar, Publicity Director of the Blue and White Society said, "All students who have that hidden Christmas Spirit, have this chance to get out and join with their fellow students in bringing back a little of the spirit of fellowship, and also to get into the swing of the Christmas festivities. Attend the special invitation dinner at Hart House next Thursday and then come to The Varsity Christmas Tree which follows the dinner in the Great Hall.

Holiday Time Coeds Wine Dine In HH

By authority of the Board of Stewards of Hart House, women as well as men of the University Staff and Students body will be permitted to eat in the Great Hall of Hart House over this Christmas period. This ruling will apply betwenn Saturday, 19th to Wednesday, 23rd December, inclusive.

Exceptions during these two periods when the Hall will be closed are: Friday, 18th, dinner; Saturday, 19th, dinner; Tuesday, 22nd, dinner; Wednesday, 23rd, Breakfast; Thursday 31st, dinner.

Great Hall meals are at the following hours: Breakfast, 8:00 - 9:15 a.m.; Lunch 11:45 - 1:30; Dinner, 4:45 - 6:80 p.m.

This Sunday has also been set aside as a special day in Hart House. The hours have been extended, so that the House will be open from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. on Sunday afternoon; and tea will be served from 3:00 - 4:30 p.m. Sunday afternoon.

The Lee Collection will also be open at these hours as will the Art Gallery, which is featuring the Undergraduate Art Show.

Roast Turkey, Pudding For Hart House Meal

Next Thursday, December 17, Hart House will be opened to the members of the House and their lady friends for a full evening of Christmas celebration.

First of all there will be a supper for "ladies and escorts" in Great Hall at 6:15. The members and their guests are asked to assemble in the East Common Room at 6:15 before the meal and then they will proceed to the Great Hall for a cafeteria style dinner. Roast Turkey, mince pie, plus the usual Christmas Dinner trimmings will be one of the choices offered.

After dinner, coffee will be served in the Long Common Room.

In order to facilitate the preparations for the Great Hall meal, members are asked to pick up their members' Invitiation Dinner tickets at the Hall Porter's desk. These tickets are obtainable upon presentation of a Hart House membership card. They should be picked up by 6:30, Wednesday night.

After the meal the members and their guests are invited to the Blue and White Christmas Tree, sponsored by the Blue and White Society. The programme will include two hours of fun, carols, and the Hart House Glee Club.

The festivities will take place in the Great Hall, starting at 8:30. Garth McDowell, Assistant Warden of Hart House, suggests that those coming to the dinner bring blankets if they intend to stay for the Blue and White Tree party.

Why Do You Believe In Santa Claus?

Jumbo Says

I'm afraid I find it difficult to believe in a person, myth, or thing which has been so unproductive. For forty-seven years, every Christmas time I send Santa a letter asking for what has always been my life's desire . . . a half-size model of the ancient Hanging Gardens of Babylon and a bust of Napoleon's pet dog, Horation. For forty-seven years, I have pleaded and prayed and for forty-seven years my requests have been denied.

I'm fifty-three now, and I feel pretty damn silly going down to Eaton's Toyland and sitting on Santa's knee and repeating this request year after year. The floorwalkers are beginning to give me the evil eye. However, my faith is continually renewed when I read this quaint little poem, which I wrote, when I was a mere child of thirty-nine.

There is a man from the North Pole,
Who's a cousin of Old King Cole.
His whiskers are white,
He's a colorful sight
And he drinks Labatt's from a bowl.

Hickory, dickory, dock,
Rudolph climbed the clock.
The clock struck noon,
With the Arctic moon
And Santa checked his stock.

His fare was complete in every detail.
Departure time was ten without fail.
Scotch, bourbon, whiskey and rye,
To make the world happy and high,
And champagne by the pail.

Labatt's, Molson's, Pelier's and Pabst,
His supply was meant to last.
Bradings, O'Keefe's and also Black Label.
More Milwaukee (if he was able),
"We have to get the sleigh loaded fast."

Crown Royal, Drambuie and a barrel of mixer;
"More Seagram's? Add a twenty-sixer."
And so my friends as you rub your red noses,
Think who gave you that vat of Four Roses.

Once Upon . . .

Well, son, once upon a time, many years ago, my mother and I were entering the house through the chimney as was our usual custom (We couldn't afford a door).

But looking down the chimney, I noticed my descent was blocked by an indefinable red and white mass. Unable to account for this physical phenomenon, I turned my sweet, innocent face upwards towards my mother and said, in my naive way, "Mommy, what is it?" "Son," she replied, "that's Santa Claus, and I'd recommend you remain on your best behaviour, because if you do, he'll give you that elephant you've been wanting."

Moments later, the old chap came out of the chimney, mounted his trusty white steed, and, after uttering those immortal words "Hi-Ho-Silver-Away," he galloped off into the night.

Confronted with such conclusive proof of his evidence, could you possibly help believing in him. Furthermore, when I got downstairs, there, standing lightly on the dining room table, was a 500-pound baby elephant.

I believe in Santa Claus because I believe in God. The true Christian can distinguish three orders of belief . . .

The first is a spiritual belief—a faith in a living person. It is mystical faith in that it has not only seen God's beauty, but experienced and tasted His sweetness. Faith in God is moreover rendered rational by the bulwark of philosophy.

Belief in Santa Claus, is, however, neither spiritual, mystical nor rational. That St. Nicholas was a Christian bishop famed for benevolence is an historical fact. That Christians have chosen to acknowledge that their gifts to each other, and especially to children come from Christ through St. Nick is only an evidence of the Christian's ability to combine and harmonize faith, reason and imagination. The modern Santa Claus, brandishing his dollar sign, I moan and despair. But the true Santa I believe in with heart. No culture but a Christian one could have produced so meaningful a symbol—nor so delightful a fairy tale.

Changing The Guard

Democracy in action. This historic scene took place Wednesday night at the opening of the Mock Parliament. At that session the Liberal Government passed an act on National Health Insurance, supported by the CCF and LPP. However, early in the next session the Government was defeated on a successful PC amendment.

Model Parliament Passes Act For National Health Insurance

A preliminary Act on National Health Insurance was passed by the Model Parliament on Wednesday evening. The Bill, which was brought forward by the Liberal government of Prime Minister Dennis Lane IV Vic, was supported by the CCF and LPP.

After formal parliamentary opening ceremonies the speech from the throne was read by Professor Vincent Bladen, head of the Dept. of Political Economy. In it he outlined government policy both at home and abroad.

He said, in order to maintain peace and security, the government would not slacken its defence efforts, would give full support to the United Nations and would continue to contribute arms and men to NATO.

In the debate on the Governor General's speech Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Slogan II Dents criticized the government's agricultural policy. He said, "although farmers form 22 percent of our population, they only earn 12 percent of the national income."

The leader of the CCF party, Norm Chalmers 1 Law, proposed an amendment condemning the lack of a proper technical assistance programme. He said the $25 million spent on the Colombo plan was just a paltry sum.

The debate on the speech from the throne was adjourned until Thursday, and the Bill on Health Insurance was introduced. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said the Bill was necessary because it was obvious that private companies could never provide adequate health insurance for everyone. He estimated the cost of the plan for the first year to be one billion dollars.

The Health Insurance Act provides service for all Canadian citizens. It is to be administered by the Provinces, but paid for by the Federal government. All eligible persons who are gainfully employed will contribute to a National Health Insurance fund. The services are to include general medical, surgical, hospital, dental, therapeutic, ophthalmic, and prescriptive services.

During the debate the CCF expressed the hope that the Liberal party in "another House" would introduce a similar Bill.

Government Is Defeated By Tories

After effectively ousting the Liberals from the government seats last night, the Conservatives, in the second session of the Model Parliament, successfully passed three bills.

The Liberals, originally elected to form the government by a one-seat margin, were defeated on the passage of an amendment to their speech from the throne by the Conservatives. Soon after last night's parliament had convened the Conservatives found themselves forming the government and the Liberals were the official opposition.

The first resolution, which no party could find enough fault with to defeat, was that "this house favors the exemption of students from unemployment insurance." Upon the first reading of the bill, the Speaker of the House, Rev. Davies found it necessary to remind the members who chorused "ayes" and "noes" that a vote was not necessary at this stage.

The resolution on the franchise for those of 18, was passed while the Liberals who stood against it were the only dissenters. In remarking on the marriage aspect which was brought out as a point in favor of the resolution, Liberal leader Dennis Lane said, "Marriage at 18 is just as distracting as marriage at 21. They all get over it — it's just like any other disease."

The resolution to adopt the recommendation of the Massey Report and NFCUS concerning government scholarships was passed unanimously. "Any party going against this resolution, will have to go on record as being against the interests of university students," said PC president Ted Rogers.

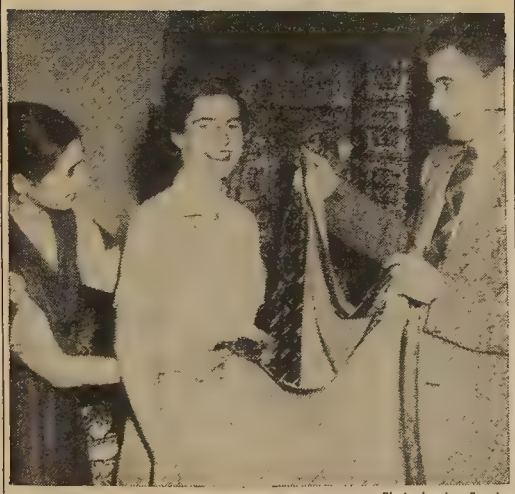
UC Debate Unresolved On Xmas



University College doesn't know whether or not "Christmas is a good excuse". They did hold a debate on the subject, yesterday afternoon, but before a vote could be taken, the quorum had left.

The government declared that Christmas is a good excuse for depravity and revelry after a depressing fall. Bernie Davis, second speaker for the Government, said that Christmas means profit for storekeepers. "No Christmas; no profits. No profits; no taxes. No taxes; no government. Christmas is a good excuse for government."

The opposition claimed that Christmas was a good reason, not excuse. "The employment students obtain at Christmas is the REASON they can pay their second installment fees", said Marg. Ritchie, first speaker for the opposition.

The issue is still open.

Explorations Begun First Issue 'Ragbag'

A new University publication called the "loveliest collection of miscellany since the Old Testament" by one of the editors of The New Yorker, is going on sale on the campus this week.

The publication called "Explorations" is to be published three times a year for two years by the Seminar on Culture and Communications, set up under a grant of $44,250.00 from the Ford Foundation.

The faculty participants in the seminar, as well as the editors of "Explorations" are H. M. McLuhan, Professor of English, St. Michaels College; D. C. Williams, Professor of Psychology; J. Tryphitt, Visiting Professor of Town Planning; W. T. Easterbrook, Associate Professor of Political Economy; and E. S. Carpenter, Assistant Professor of Anthropology.

The first number of "Explorations" includes articles on such diverse subjects as Congo drums, comic books, the ethics of social scientists who work for advertising, and a 17th century witchcraft trial in which scores of teachers were executed for corrupting students.

The first issue is something of a rag-bag but according to the editor, "it proved psychologically necessary to get out a first number, even though it lacked the consistency and relevancy we hope to attain in future numbers". Later issues will focus more sharply on the immediate problems of the seminar and will serve as the principal outlet for articles stemming from the seminar.

It is planned, for example, to build one issue around the late Harold Innis, perhaps another around Sigfried Giedion, both pioneers in the analysis of non-verbal forms of communication.

Not only the circulation of the journal, but the contributions themselves will be international. For example, Prof. C. A. Tokapeb, Head of the Department of Anthropology, Moscow Academy of Science, has consented to write an article on work Russian social scientists are doing in the field of comunication.

Imperialism Is Hindering US Socialism

"The development of the American Socialist Party has been hindered by the expansion of American imperialism which has alleviated conditions at home," said William Grant, Vice-president of the U of T CCF Club yesterday at the CCF Club's Socialism Ia meeting. "Splits in the socialist movement, and the adherence of the majority of workers to reformist ideas such as New Dealism and the personal popularity of individual leaders such as Roosevelt have removed a potential Socialist Party vote."

Grant said the turn of the century saw a growth of various radical organizations, the Socialist Labor Party under De Leon, and the IWW led by Bill Haywood, a Syndicalist.

Elephant Feet Umbrella Stands Featured In Next Week's Sale

Toronto students and residents will have a chance this year to give Christmas gifts, at reasonable cost, which come all the way from India. The WUS "Treasure Van" to visit Hart House Debates Room on Dec. 14, 15 and 16 will make this possible.

Featured for sale will be carved ivory, filigree jewellery, scarves, velvet purses and belts, brass work and carved walnut articles. Elephant feet, made into umbrella stands will be on display from the province of Travancore.

"The sale is arranged on a nation-wide basis," said Indian Sale chairman Ian Scott. "It has visited 26 universities in Canada, from Nova Scotia to British Columbia. A section of the sale will be at McMaster at the same time." He also announced that the sale will be taken to the United States, and will be handled through that division of WUS.

The prices for the articles will range from 25 cents to 400 dollars affording a good opportunity for anyone to mke a purchase. All the money gained from the sale will go to help the WUS in its many services to universities throughout the world.

The problem of replenishment of merchandise has been met by direct shipments. For instance there are two cases of goods which will be offered in Toronto that have not yet been opened.

The WUS, which has its headquarters in Geneva, has national committees in 23 countries. It accomplishes its aim "Through the extension of material aid by members of the world university community to their fellow members who are in immediate need; and particularly through assistance to self-help enterprises designed to meet long term needs".

Last year $4,600 was raised on the Toronto campus alone and the whole Canadian sale grossed $35,000. The objective for last year's sale was only $4,000.

"Because the articles in the 'Treasure Van' are so different from anything that can be purchased in Toronto and are so inexpensive there's no doubt that the sale will gross $6,000," said publicity chairman, Ron Gould. "Although the sale was relatively unknown last year and took place late in February it grossed $4,600."

He added "with the aid of last year's reputation and this year's Christmas shoppers, the 'Treasure Van', during its stay in Toronto should contribute much to aid the work of WUS".

On Monday evening the sale will be telecast over CBLT. The telecast will include some priceless Indian Art treasures which of course will not be on sale.

Some of the individual articles for sale have interesting histories and traditions attached to them. For instance there are the manchadi seeds.

They are small, red seeds which come from the pods of the tree of the same name. The craftsmen of Travancore carve miniature elephants out of ivory chips and set them into the seeds, carving a top to complete the charm. To own one of these seeds is said to be "ten times God's good luck".

The sale will include rosewood trays from Mysore, Bidri work (metal with silver inlay) from Hyderabad, table-cloths from Joora, suede bags from Bombay and oils and water colors by the Raj Brothers of Madras.

In all, "Treasure Van 1953" will be worth seeing as its second year Haatouse next week.

House next week.

Fall Opening For Library Helped By Balmy Weather

Does the new library look the same to you now as it did in September? Well, take another look, for there've been great changes. The walls are up (at least the skeletons); the roof is due to go on before the end of December. "There is even glass in the windows of the lower floors," said Mr. Maxwell, Assistant Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds.

"The concrete will be poured for the last concrete structure tomorrow," said Mr. Robertson, yesterday. (For the uninitiated, this means that the concret will be poured today.) Robertson, who is Clerk of the Works, explained that once this is done, the exterior is practically completed. "This is important," he said, "for when the exterior is completed, we can work on the interior, no matter what the weather."

"We are right on schedule," said Maxwell, "perhaps even ahead! The weather has been grand, and we've lost no time. Excellent progress has been made." He said that while it was hoped that the building would be completed by the beginning of September, it would probably not be finished till the end of the month. "After that the furnishings must e put in. the furnishings must be put in. Then the library will be ready for student use."

Miss Jarvis, of the Library, said the new building would be devoted to books in the humanities. "Medicine and the Sciences will take over the old building," she said.

Students need not worry about disturbances this year when they're studying. "There will be no noises from the library construction during the exams," promised Robertson.

Grad Pics Are Ready

UC Grad pictures will be given out in the UC Rotunda on Tuesday, December 15, between 12 noon and 2 p.m. Leroy Toll, UC photographer, said that this would be the only opportunity students would have to obtain their pictures.

Payment may be made by cash or by cheque.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

Last night as we were putting our little paper to bed the telephone tinkled softly in the office. One-Eyed Benny was calling from Birdland where he is spending a quiet holiday as guest No. 14456 at the Sing Sing Rest Home. Benny, being unable to be with us at the Varsity Christmas party sends his love and best wishes for a happy new year to all his clients on the Varsity Campus. Since he was phoning collect we felt free to ask Benny certain advice regarding the state of our teams in Intercollegiate Sport. The savant sighed heavily and spoke. "Things are blue all over. It was those Varsity teams that put me where I am. Were it not for my extreme distraction at having made a bad call on the Blues in football I would never have been so careless as to let myself slip. But slip I did and here I am. For the future I have already made my New Year's resolution and that is to stay away from the University of Toronto. However, you boys have been good for me, so maybe I will give you a break, and stick around for a while yet, seeing as I have no plans for going anywhere for the next couple of years. The outlook is not very bright as of now, but we must remember that there is always the silver lining to look for, so we should have hope. Me, I would not be on Varsity for any championships, except maybe in the aquatic field where they are very mighty men, but in the rest of the sports I am expecting an interesting, if unprofitable, season. Still I will wish the boys good luck, because they are always trying hard and giving their all for dear old Varsity."

Rowing Gently Down The Stream . . .

. . . is what the Varsity Water Polo team might just as well be doing for all the support our student body gives them. For the past years the Varsity poloists have completely dominated Intercollegiate play with the opposition fighting desperately to unseat them from their throne. Last year the Blues defeated the challengers from McGill in two games for the crown by scores of 17-9, and 18-5, and in the first game this year Varsity scored an 11-3 decision over those same persistent McGillians. Tomorrow night the Blues meet the Redmen, in Montreal, for the second and final game in the title series. Unless the Montrealers get some help from the gods Varsity is a sure thing to retain the championship. But the boys might just as well be doing the dog-paddle in the bath tub — we just don't seem to care. When we go to an Athletic Night we stay put in the gyms watching the hoopsters go to it, while the swimmers splash about unnoticed in the pool. Would serve us right if the boys stopped winning titles for us.

Curfew Tolls The Knell . . .

. . . of the parting term, and we students hustle off to the books and exams that we've so woefully neglected heretofore. Things academic are strange to us after a fall of watching football, going to campus shows, leaving the city on those notorious 'weekends' and doing any and every silly thing that pops into our sotted heads.

There's a new term coming on with promise of much action and interest. We'll be around to write about things. so, come January 7, 1954, pick up a Varsity and give us a reading.

Meds Play Good Game Win Girls' B-Ball Crown

By JO RATCLIFFE

Something happened at the Hart House gym last night that isn't going to hurt the women's basketball schedule around here one bit. Meds' ladies shook off the PHE jinx to win the interfaculty basketball title for the first time ever.

For two years, the physedders have dominated B-Ball field and this year all three teams entered hit the final loop. As it happened, their first-year squad was beaten out Tuesday in the semies but the two remaining were taken out of circulation in both the sudden death and consolation matches.

The second game of the evening, the big final with PHE 2 battling Meds, finished 33-17. Meds opened the scoring with Joan Elliot tallying one in the first minute of play. PHE started shakily but Joy Taylor came forth to tie it up 2-all. Mary Platt then gave Meds a two-point edge which finished the scoring for that quarter.

The seconder saw most of the action around the PHE net. Platt went on a wild scoring spree to bring the Med gals up to a 13-4 lead. Physedder Marg Kirby made good on a foul shot and Sally Wallace netted a single for Meds.

At the end of the first half, the scoreboard read 15-5 for Meds, who were leading all the way. A tallying battle between Sally Wallace and Inger Olsen of PHE brought the scoring to 21-10 for Meds.

Though the Physedders tried to rally, they were overpowered completely in the last quarter and the game ended 33-17 for the victorious Meds.

The consolation match between PHE first and third years saw the third year gals come out on top 31-23.

Skule Juniors V-Ball Champs

The "A" team representing Junior SPS returned the Division One interfaculty volleyball championship to Skule yesterday by whipping Medicine Thirds in the final match at Hart House.

It was a best-of-five final and the engineers rolled to the title in three straight games. They took the first handily by a 15-7 score but the Medsmen made a fight of it in the second holding the count to 17-15. The third game was 15-11.

GREETINGS

To the sports fans of the University of Toronto, to the athletic association which is so generous with passes, to the Rotary Press which does us the kindness of printing our stuff, to the readers who do us the kindness of reading it, and to the athletes of the University of Toronto, who make it a pleasure to cover sports on the campus whether we win or lose, The Varsity sports staff wishes a Merry Christmas and a successful New Year.

Pages From . . .

The Blue Book

By RIM

Varsity was a sad place after the tragic weekend of November 21, when the best team in the Intercollegiate League was defeated by a band of upstarts from the colonial centre of London out in Western Ontario. The Yates Cup which we had already begun polishing melted from our hot clutching talons and was wafted back to Western by a gloating gang of Mustangs, leaving Varsity forlorn and heartbroken. The injustice of it all made us wonder for a while whether there was any right at all in the world.

The shock of that upset stunned us all so that we overlooked several very important facts. About all possession of the Yates' Cup proves is that its landlord for the moment managed to outscore their opponents in a single game. The best team in the league was determined on the season's play, and what fool can dispute the Varsity claim to that ranking. Throughout the fall the Blues cut down all their opposition and finished the regular schedule in first place, then moved into the playoffs where they cooked the Western goose but tried to eat it before the cooking was quite done. A happy break for the Mustangs and the Yates' Cup rode home in their mule-train.

Football having been the focus of Campus attention throughout the fall, we paid little attention to other athletes running under the Blue and White banner. One football title may have eluded the Varsitys but all others were branded with a big bold 'T' and put to roost in the Hart House show case.

John McManus fielded an Intermediate football club that would have given wings to the heavy hearts of certain Intercollegiate coaches. Varsity's Baby Blues played a six game schedule and played it perfectly. They scored 172 points against their foes while holding them to a mere 36. For three of those matches the opposition was kept from scoring a point. Having completed their season as the best in the West, Varsity's Seconds gave a quick respectful nod to the Shaw Trophy which has come to feel right at home in Hart House, after a residence of the past three years, then turned to the East and the RMC Cup for the Intermediate Football Championship of Canada's universities. The boys down in Montreal must have realised that discretion is the better part of valour because they hurriedly packed away their rugby uniforms and decided to pass over the playoff with Varsity. Varsity Seconds, being the last team to win the RMC Cup in the East-West final, three years ago, retain the title until some brave fools show to challenge them for it.

Football, to recent arrivals from the "auld sod", means only one thing-soccer. If such people were about on the Varsity campus through the fall they could have seen the best team in university competition this year, and quite likely of almost any year. Toronto's Blues suffered humiliation last year when OAC Aggies and Western Mustangs shared the Blackwood Trophy, leaving Varsity all alone out in the cold. Like good elephants, the Blues couldn't forget their shame and came out this season determined to return Varsity colors to the winner's circle—which is exactly what they did. Paced by the great play of Captain Jose Atucha, the Blues of Varsity defeated every team in the league, proving themselves masters of the game, pride of their school. None of their opponents approached them in skill or power and their march to the Intercollegiate championship became a runaway before season's end.

Varsity's golfers missed in their try for an Intercollegiate championship but they gave the school good representation and we'll be glad to see them carry the colors again next year, with more luck.

Torontonians seldom repeat foolish mistakes. After Western won the Intercollegiate championship in Track and Field last year, with Varsity finishing a faint third they were counted out and when it came time to predict winners for this year's competitions the experts had a grand time touting McGill Western or any other crew that could walk. Hal Brown's men of cinder exploits stuffed crow deep in those 'expert' throats when they ran far ahead of the whining pack at Montreal and sprinted home with a firm grip on the Mackenzie Trophy. Three Varsity runners amazed the opposition, as they alone outscored the nearest Varsity rivals, Bob Hamilton, Norm Williams and Dick Harding won it for the Blues while their buddies added points for a comfortable edge and a sure Toronto victory.

Once a top sport on the Varsity campus, harrier has dropped in popularity but the Blue runners are still the pick of the Intercollegiate circle. Playing the part of gracious host to runners from the other colleges in the east the Toronto trotters gave up a first place in the meet to the sole entrant from Queen's but grabbed enough top spots to gallop off with the long distance crown. Striding strongly over the five-mile course, the Blues placed two men, Dave Preston and Herb Tilson in the first five with the rest of the Varsity team bunched close after.

It takes a lot of gut to make stringing for a tennis racket and more guts of another sort to win a tennis championship, Varsity, long a centre of tennis strength, produced a team last fall that must rank with the strongest ever, as it won the championship against good oppostion, losing only a single match in all their tournament play.

So we brush away our tears, and laugh off the Yates' tragedy. Why be hoggish about things. When we have so much surely we won't begrudge our less fortunate friends from Western one trophy. The Hart House showcase doesn't have room for everything anyway.

team yet. Most colleges line up easy games in the early part of their schedule in order to obtain the confidence that comes from winning. On the other hand the experience that the boys pick up during these exhibition games is definitely rewarding and to an extent balances the frustrating effect of losing.

It is not that the team can't handle the American teams. They showed that they had the potential last Saturday night, and only through a few costly "errors of judgement" did they fail to come out on top.

Athletic Night Here On Saturday Night Buffalo Cagers Go

University of Toronto basketball Blues will entertain the Buffalo State basketball club in the final Athletic Night of the year 1953. This will also be the last game for the Varsity men before the new year comes around and they prepare to begin their season play in the Intercollegiate League.

Buffalo will be a tougher squad than the crew from Albion College that the Blues faced in the last Athletic Night feature and with the Varsitys improving as they are it should be quite a fight. The Orange and Black of Buffalo are captained by four-year-veteran Al. Wukowits, who was mentioned in the polling for a New York all-star team last season. Teaming with this star to give the brawny Buffalos strength are Francis O'Shei, Zip Zappala and Wally Handy. Set against the visitors will be such good Blues as George Stulac, Jim Russel, and Leapin' Lou Lukenda.

While the Blues battle here their water polo brethren travel to Montreal to meet McGill.

By LEO MADDEN

The student body may be somewhat "fed up" with usual excuses that are offered for the poor showing of the basketball team every year against American college teams. Well they will have to resign themselves to the fact that the American teams are at an advantage. They are hard to beat and only a supreme effort will bring about a victory over them. The students will also have to keep in mind that every year the Blues manage to come up with one of these efforts. Last year they beat a highly rated University of Buffalo team by 21 points and the year before they ended the University of Rochester's bid for an undefeated season.

As we take a look at the other teams in the Intercollegiate we see that Toronto is not alone in the field of frustrating defeats by American colleges. Last Saturday night while Varsity was losing to Albion, a game they came close to winning, three of the major contenders in our league were receiving a lesson in basketball from American teams of mediocre calibre. Western lost to Wayne 67-37, Queen's lost to Hamilton 87-45 and McMaster lost to Fredonia 66-56. Then a week ago McGill lost to Saint Lawrence by a rather decisive score, and Assumption took a beating from Niagara similar to the one the Blues experienced at the hands of the Purple Eagles.

I am not trying to make further excuses and I don't think disorderly style of play exhibited at Hart House last Saturday night should go by uncriticised. But the boys have not been able to establish their confidence as

Last fall, when the new regime took over the reins of The Varsity, the sports staff decided that, with the co-operation of the photo staff, they would choose a Sports Queen from among the coeds on the campus. This choice would be made in time for the resultant picture to be published in the Christmas issue, in the nature of a gift for the readers, those patient and forgiving souls who have borne a complete autumn series of Varsitys.

The result is to be seen above. This young lady, whose name shall remain unknown, largely because her identity means little or nothing to the picture, was chosen after observing hundreds of candidates from all colleges and faculties on the campus. It was difficult — and great fun, incidentally — but we were finally able to arrive at the above result as Miss Varsity Sports for 1953.

Although non-conformity is to be preferred to acquiescent acceptance of tradition, we respectfully submit this as the beginning of a tradtion for Varsity sports pages of the future, a tradition nobody will want to break with, we think

Blues Lose

Varsity's basketball Blues went down to their fourth straight setback of the season Wednesday night at Hart House when Panzer College of East Orange, N.J., beat them 77-72 after five minutes of overtime. The game had been tied at 66-all after regulation time.

Jim McDonough scored 27 points for Panzer, while Jim Russell got 20 for the Blues and Lou Lukenda 19. In the early game UNYF Tridents shaded Varsity Seconds 60-53.

NOTICE

In view of numerous thefts of coats, the Superintendent's department have requested that students exercise particular care of overcoats and not leave them in accessible places. The police are doing everything possible to prevent this but the co-operation of students is required.

CORK OR PLAIN

For Two Weeks

The same story is told at this time every year. It is the story of fireplaces, of friends, of brotherhood, and of Christianity.

But this is also the end of a year, a year of spectacular events. This is a time when we may well take stock and ask how much something called "Christmas spirit" has affected those events. It may be a lot of fun to get together and exchange gifts and strengthen friendships, but it may prove just as profitable to ask if we are not being dangerously selfish to limit such spirit to the last two weeks of the year.

Dull though it may be, old though it is, we feel that the written prayer of Christmas is found in the hope for "Peace On Earth, Goodwill To All Men". In the year 1953, its realization has been conspicuously absent.

There is a star in the East, just as there was one two thousand years ago, but it is faded and weak of light. It is kept there by the desires of millions; and it is also being destroyed by the selfishness of as many.

Among the carols we will be singing at this time is one that begins with:

"It came upon a midnight clear
That glorious song of old," and in it there is one line that comes forth with

"Peace on earth, goodwill to men."

We sing it loud and clear, wheather we are sober or not, but its meaning sinks no deeper than the tips of our tongues.

There is another carol which we do not sing very often. We avoid it as much as possible. Yet it hits closer to the truth.

"And in despair I turned my head,
'There is no peace on earth,' I said,
'For hate is strong and mocks the song
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men'."

This, then, is Christmas 1953. It is the end of a year of mockery, of hate, of conflict. The New Year can be a new beginning, and there is a weak star that could use some brightening.

Good will to men—it has been said over and over again. We say it today, and will probably get the same miserable results as have been attained in the past.

In two weeks we'll be gathered around the fireplaces, laughing with our friends. This is what Christmas should be after all. But we should let some of that spirit spill over on to the other days of the year.

Cat's Resolutions

This New Year I resolve to be a dastard
(Typesetter, use discretion if you please)
And when the difficult technique I've mastered
I'll live a life of evil, and of ease.

I promise me I'll never go to lectures.
I'll never read a book that's on the course.
I'll not indulge in logical conjectures.
I'll flunk without the slightest of remorse.

And when next year I do a repetition
Of this year's course, I'll flunk it even more
Completely, for I'll be in the position
Of having skipped the lectures all before.

During the time I save from fruitless studies
(Oh Cat, what a Beelzebub you are)
I'll lie in wait for all my serious buddies
And drag them, screaming, to the KCR.

There I'll suggest (since ten drafts cost a dollar)
That we should treat in turn. And when I know
My turn is next, "PSYCHOLOGY!" I'll holler
And dash away to dinner and a show.

I'll read The Varsity through every column
To see the write-ups of my latest crime
And with excuses tragical and solemn
Hand in my essays eight months overtime.

I've made good resolutions in the past years.
I broke them all, according to the law.
If I treat these the way I treated last year's
I'll be the best damn cat you ever saw.

On The Campus

It is often said that students in the campus for only four years can be no judge of what direction student trends are taking. But any number of people, including The Varsity, are always willing to express their own opinion of any situation on the campus.

In any case, we feel that student awareness of Christmas is more in existence now than four of five years ago. Whether this is the result of increased activity on the part of student organizations or whether the increased number of student Christmas functions is the result of our fuller awareness of Christmas, it doesn't matter. Either one, in our opinion is highly commendable.

One of the most significant of the functions is the annual Blue and White Christmas Tree, to be held in Hart House. This is its fourth year, and every year it seems to be more and more appreciated. It is one step that this organization has taken for which it is more than a means to an end.

This, year, for the first time, Hart House has seen fit to establish, at considerable expense, a nativity scene in the main hall. This may only reflect the increase in off-campus publicity, but at the same time, it was well received, and we hope it indicates a genuine feeling on the campus.

Of course, we cannot expect any dampening of the general celebration of Christmas. There is no question but that is the time of the year to really celebrate. But for too long it has been a rule to celebrate first and think it off the next day. With even two all-varsity functions, we feel that students are thinking first for a change. Most of the campus residences that plan parties for themselves go through the motions of also throwing a party for some very needy children. But all of them, even while they are doing it, wonder why. But we are sure most of these students would know why if they stopped for a few minutes in Hart House hallway and wondered what the little figures meant, or would sing a few carols in the great Hall next Thursday.

Some people make a fortune at Christmas. Others don't have a shirt to put on their back. Just because the maze around us are not of the latter, and apparently enjoy their Christmas without losing any sleep, is no reason why we as University students could not take the lead in doing something for the original spirit of Christmas.

Editors' Note

As Christmas is a peaceful time, of friendship and goodwill,

There will be no more Varsities to shatter it. Until
The new year rolls around again, we're burying our axe,
Our controversial letters and our pro and con attacks.
Before we dig them up again, in nineteen fifty-four,
We wish you merry Christmas, and of New Years, many more.

ROGERS, BOULTBEE RETURN

Vacationers Locked Up In Florida

This is the story of the two Toronto students, Ted Rogers and Bill Boultbee, who were detained by the United States Immigration Department in Florida three days ago on charges of "Communist sympathies".

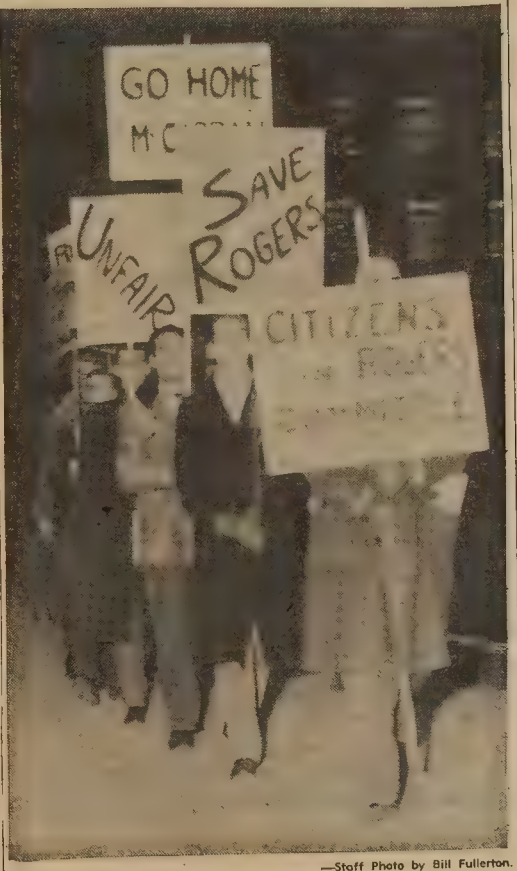
They were returning from a mid-term holiday in Nassau when they were detained at West Palm Beach where they were to pick up Boultbee's car and motor back to Toronto.

The two were stopped under the provisions of the McCarran Immigration and Nationality Act.

They said officials charged them with being "Communist sympathizers" and had referred to their names which were written in a "communist black book".

The students were told to sign a statement which they could not see. They refused and were held until they could appear before a board of inquiry.

When Rogers asked to be allowed to use the phone he was told he could not talk to anyone. For nearly three hours the pair were held incommunicado.



When the news of their detention reached home (they were finally permitted to phone to Toronto), Progressive Conservative MP Roland Michener (St. Paul's) immediately requested the Department of External Affairs to clear the names of the students.

In the meantime they were released in the custody of the Mackey Airlines which was bringing them back from the Bahamas, on a bail of $1,000.

U.S. Embassy officials in Ottawa explained the incident as overzealousness on the part of an immigration official and as probably a mix-up in names.

The affair, which had reached international proportions, finally came to an end when Rogers and Boultbee were paroled after their hearing in the board of inquiry late Monday afternoon. They will be in Toronto some time today.

. . . And Boultbee

University of Toronto students are seen picketing the US Consulate after they heard that Ted Rogers and Bill Boultbee had been detained by US Immigration officials at West Palm Beach.

Red-Faced Officials, Say 'All A Mistake'

Two University of Toronto students who, for the past five days, have been the centre of the first big Canadian-American incident of 1954, will be returning to their homes some time today. Ted Rogers, II Trin., and Bill Boultbee, I For., will drive into Toronto after leaving West Palm Beach, Florida, where they were detained by United States Immigration officials for what was called "suspected Communist sympathies."

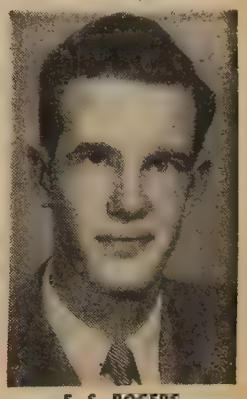
The detention, headline news in every Toronto daily newspaper and an issue for highest levels in both Governments concerned, began last Saturday when the pair were stopped while returning from their holidays in the Bahamas. It ended undramatically when they were "paroled" Monday by an American board of inquiry.

The entire incident brought quick action from the Canadian Department of External Affairs and from the US Embassies. Embarrassed American officials hastily explained the detention as a result of an over-zealous immigration official and a mix-up of names.

President Smith could not be obtained for comment yesterday. Vice-president Bissell only said it was a closed case and refused to give his opinion on it.

Roland Michener, MP (St. Paul's), the person responsible for bringing the issue before the External Affairs Department, told The Varsity: "I was concerned about the detension of these two boys who obviously didn't warrant such treatment and therefore tried to enlist the support of our diplomatic representatives to the USA to get the boys released and their names cleared."

"It is difficult to understand the necessity for treating in such an arbitrary manner Canandian travellers whose credentials are all in order," Mr. Michener said. "Such conduct, if persisted, is bound to bring the American immigration department into disrepute and to discourage Canadians from travelling in the country."



He added: "It is to be hoped that incidents of this kind—and it is by no means the first—will lead the immigration officials to change their practices. This case seems to have turned on a similarity of names, but as there are many people with the same name, it is scarcely a sound basis for making such serious charges as Communist affiliation and causing serious inconvenience and expense."

Mrs. Boultbee called the whole thing "wild and crazy" and said it was a "waste of time and paper". While the immigration officials were spending so much time on her son, she said the "real threats" were probably slipping through.

Mrs. Graham, Rogers' mother, said she had nothing to add to what had already been said in the papers.

Joe Slogan, II Dents, president of the campus Progressive Conservative club (of which Rogers is vice-president) described Rogers as "Mr. Anti-Communist" on the campus. He claimed that the incident did not east reflections on the two students but rather on the US and the McCarran Act.

"Suppose it was not Rogers and Boultbee who were detained, but rather two average Varsity students with no connections or political affiliations, but whose names represented suspected Communist sympathizers," Slogan added, "nobody would have heard about it. They would have been detained, undergone humiliation and restriction of their liberty and then set free."

E. S. ROGERS

However another member of the YPC club executive took another slant on the incident. Preferring to remain anonymous, he said: "Isn't it too bad that if the US authorities wanted Ted Rogers so badly they didn't keep him. I only pray that the people here won't judge all the young Conservatives by 'headline loving' Rogers."

"We all aren't as desperate for publicity as he is," he said. "Rogers' antics have long disgusted most of the Toronto and Ontario young Conservatives, and I can't help but wonder if this may not be another of his publicity gags. If it isn't, then is the fault really with the US authorities or was something said by Rogers (which wouldn't be surprising) to annoy or insult them?"

Most students here brushed off the entire issue as very humorous. They felt it was obviously a mistake. Some painted placards and picketed the US consulate on University Ave. Tuesday afternoon. The cards read: 'Save Rogers', 'McCarran Go Home", "Unfair".

In a phone call from Florida Rogers told The Varsity he would write a personal account for the paper with some "exclusive information".

Entries are now being received for the Hart House 32nd Annual Exhibition of Photography. The show will be held in the Hart House Art Gallery from Monday, 12th February to Sunday, 28th February. This year's Exhibition will include a new division "THE KARSH TROPHY COMPETITION" for Campus Life and Activities Photographs. Yousuf Karsh's outstanding comment at both the 1949 and 1953 Exhibitions was that he was surprised at how much of our photographic work kept to the standard of rather stereotyped subjects landscapes, portraits of girls, summer vacation, etc., when life on the campus was full of action and original material which received scant attention in the photographs submitted for the exhibition, hence the new trophy.

Photographs for this new division must be of "Campus Life and Activities"; no scenic photographs will be considered. Any Faculty, Graduate or Undergraund member of Hart House may enter prints. All Photographs submitted must be entirely the work of the exhibitor with the exception of the development of the original negative, and must have been taken since September 15th, 1953. Print size is to be any size suitable to mounting on a 16"x20" vertical mount. A maximum of 6 prints may be submitted in this new competition.

Exhibitors may also enter 12 prints for the A. F. Coventry Award (Senior) or the K. B. Jackson Cup (Junior) and a maximum of 6 Colour Transparencies for the Hart House Colour Award.

NFCUS Short Story Judge To Be Author Montsarrat

The author of The Cruel Sea, Nicholas Montsarrat, will be one of three judges for the Short Story Contest, announced NFCUS publicity director Ron Price yesterday. The other judges, all noted for literary work, will be Leslie McFarland of the National Film Board and Professor of Journalism, Wilfred Eggleston of Carleton College.

Due to the date of the National Contest being moved up to January 30, the local date has been pushed forward to Thursday January 21. The local deadline for the contest, sponsored by NFCUS was previously December 15. Price pointed out that the new deadline will give the late contestants a chance to enter.

Entries under 3,000 words in length are eligible only if they have not been printed or if they have been printed in a student publication.

Two stories will be chosen from each university by a local board of judges and then submitted to the national board at Ottawa.

Entries may be left at the SAC office or with either Ron Price, HU 9-8348 or Ed Lowry MI 0178.

Hold Dance For Grads January 15

Malloney's Art Gallery will be the location of the annual Graduate Supper Dance of the Graduates Student's Union. It will be held on Friday, 15 January, from 9-1 p.m.

Dress will be informal, and all graduate students and their friends are invited. There will be a Supper at midnight included in the cost of the evening's entertainment.

Eine Kleine Salzburger

From a one-night stand in Eaton Auditorium the Salzburg Marionettes have graduated to a week of double performances in the Royal Alexandra to form part of the holiday fare. The standard they achieve would seem to justify this move.

The marionettes medium transforms what is partly artificiality and convention into pure fantasy. As such it was mostly very adaptable to the variety program of Saturday. The emphasis was on Mozart, having his pastoral opera-comique, Bastien and Bastienne, the Eine Nachtmusik and a playlet (since all these come in diminutives) on an episode of his early life.

Bastien and Bastienne, the story of a shepherdess and her lover, who though so obviously destined for each other since their day of naming, find difficulty in getting together, was set attractively on a stage within a stage. The simultaneous music to the mime of the marionettes was in this instance, as throughout, excellently recorded. The English dialogue was spritely and wittily done except for the discrepancy of the ingenuous English schoolboy - speaking voice of Bastien and the comparatively virile singing voice. One could not help imagining how the stereoscopic sound process of cinemascope would perfect the illusion for the movements were excellently timed and logical. The magician becomes wonderfully more magical as he scrambles furiously through the air with the greatest of ease—without trapeze. A charming touch, impossible on the grown-up stage, which also added much humour, was the introduction of a flock of frisky sheep and a dog, with the usual canine habits.

The dance, mimed in four movements of the Eine Kleine Nachtmusik was the least entertaining. There were a somewhat sketchy prince, princess and Cupid plot, involving many wood sprites. Of these the green night shades and the red night lamps were fairly attractive as the former glided gracefully around and the latter lit up in a row on alternate beats. The rest was rather dull fill-in except for the prologue and epilogue played perfectly in time by a gold plaque chamber orchestra sitting cozily on a music score boat.

The final offering of the evening was a meticulously exact replica of the Dying Swan to the music of Saint-Saens as danced formerly by Pavlova. It certainly is extraordinary. The dancer enters with a leap that puts her head in danger from the overhanging stage equipment. The extent to which Professor Aiche captures the spirit and emotion of this dance is quite amazing — drawing blood from wood. There is the occasional awkward movement from the arms and an occasional stance that is obviously off balance, but the fluid arm motions and the turning out of the legs must take quite intricate joints and working. This number is especially indicative of the qualities that account for the excellence of this group of puppeteers: well-constructed mobile puppets, good voice recordings, and minute attention to detail of gesture in all parts of the body. Thus the Swan died with a last flutter of her ruffled skirt and of her wrist.

Over The Holidays

The Varsity now finds itself in a somewhat similar situation to the New York Times which under pressure of a strike recently stopped publishing. Our pressure was Christmas. But news waits for no paper, and while our typewriters were silent Toronto music sounded on or off as the case may be.

From behind our favourite pillar in Massey Hall we managed on Dec. 17 to peek late into that surprise package, the Christmas Box Symphony. The audience was very merry and sang lustily at all the indicated spots, but the orchestra opening the Christmas Box for the third time had it seemed ceased to find the contents amusing. Just under the lid were two gay orchestral selections: Merry-Makers' Dance, from "Nell Gwynne" in much the same spirit as the dancers in Breughel's paintings and Christmas Overture by Coleridge-Taylor containing such old classics as "Good King Sauerkraut". The box yielded up next a purple horse from whom the Varsity stalwart could well take lessons in scratching, in The Song of the Flea.

Among all these surprises, the first prize was the singing of the nursery rhyme Jacques et Gille by Mme Jacqueline Watsonne who had undergone an operation a la Jorgenson to doctor his (or her) voice up to the soprano range. In spite of her gangster's moll appearance she put forth a tremendous effort as was testified to by the contractions of her lace-bedecked diaphragm. The second prize of the evening was Rudolph Rudie appearing first as Mastro Toscaskowsy. To this take off on the various antics of conductors (many of which were locally relevant) the members of the orchestra paid the highest tribute. They laughed.

Sir Ernest and Pee-Wee were the last to pop out before intermission. Pee-Wee the Piccolo by Kleinsinger is a story from orchestraland drawn on parallel lines to that of Tubby the Tuba; one instrument has difficulty and finds his solution in nature. If profited considerably from Sir Ernest's talent for animation, but the theme song and the glug of the frog in Tubby have not been equalled.

The gentleman and boys of St. Simon's choir and Eric Lewis trooped out of the bottom half of the box in a pleasant presentation of seven Christmas carols. One grotesque thing popped out of our box. A certain Al Robins Jr. in an act that might well have been called "I'm forever growing bananas" proceeded to unfold from his person enough junk to fill a trainload. We would have been blad to see his act fold up at the start. Almost at the bottom we found a slanted Salute to the ballet in which three young respirers bumbled effecetively through some weaknesses of the ballet trade such as lack of rhythm, wobbling and fresh partners. Rudolph Rudie appeared again to give further proof of his comic powers in a satire on his own trade of professional violinist and a percussive lecture on rhythm. From the very bottom a slightly squashed Sir Santa emerged for a grand finale.

TRADITIONAL

Daffydil

If Daffydil (the annual Meds Show) was the best of the 1953 season of college shows, there's a good reason for it. A long and brilliant tradition sees to it that Hart House Theatre is well filled for the whole run, and assures the show of a certain budget. And these traditions have a way of snow-balling; each year's directors make a stupendous effort to show they can outdo last year's.

Perhaps 1953's directors did not succeed in putting on quite as startling a show as the year before but the handicaps of a revue type show were overcome handsomely, giving proof that a college show doesn't need a plot to be entertaining.

As was the case in all of the 1953 shows, the spoken scenes, (skits in Daffydil's case) were much the weakest part of the show. Most of them had a simple idea, some only a fraction of one, and it was strung out into ten minutes of utter boredom.

Perhaps the best idea for a skit—not necessarily the best skit—was the climbing of Everest rotated through 90 degrees— (they climbed straight across the platform, that is, among horizontal mountain peaks). This skit was called Everest Regained. The African skit was almost lost on someone not in Meds, except for Herb Basiau's pantomime bit with the python which benefited from the somewhat languid dialogue which accompanied it.

It was the musical production numbers and the thoroughly disciplined chorus line that made Daffydil a show to remember. Here again the ideas for humorous situations were thinly spread, but the wealth and variety of the music made up for any lack. Of the two full-scale musical scenes, the first (All Fogged Up) was the better, in spite of the less continuous music, because Frigadoon's heavy-handed insistence on nonsense almost smothered the musical ideas.

One does not mind a bit of superfluity in musical scenes too much, but a little pruning might have helped get the evening over earlier. The chorus line sequences were well done, but too long, and the same might be said of the diapered male chorus line. Rosie's violin solo was also de trop.

Finally, the interacts — those completely zany, partly (or so it seemed) ad-libbed time fillers that really set the style of Daffydil — should come in for a pat on the back. One hardly had time to jot down criticisms of the scene before, because the interact often seemed more worthy of attention than the scene that preceded it.

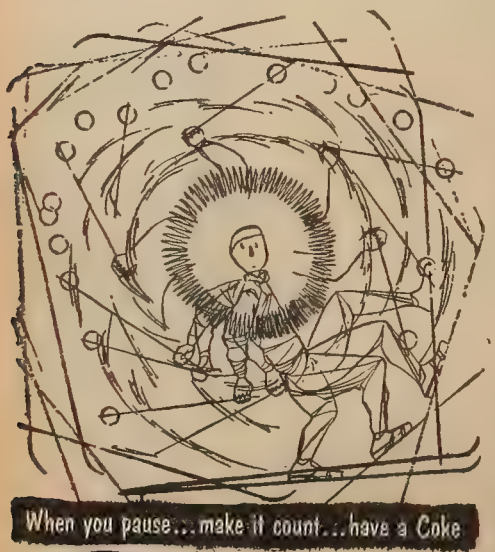
A SUCCESS

Cinderella



The New Play Society's Christmas holiday production of Cinderella, a play with music, was undoubtedly a sucess. It is surprising that the Cinderella story could be made into a three-act play (by Herbert and Eleanor Farjeon) without departing more from the traditional fairy-tale.

However, Cinderella did not give the impression of being just a rehash of a time-worn story. It had an air of freshness and variety, largely due no doubt to the direction of Herman Geiger-Torel. A production such as this could very easily become a sweetly coy affair. Cinderella does not lean this way at all; it is presented in a pleasantly down to earth manner — too much so in fact, in one place, for the fairy godmother seems more like a female Superman than her traditional self.

Jacqueline Smith as Cinderella puts the play over by herself, even though there is a very able supporting cast. In the first place she looks the part — when Cinderella has log fair hair, a very pretty face and a charming voice, she can hardly help being a success. It seemed quite probable that this Cinderella was the only lady on the stage that the glass slipper would fit. Her magnificent white ball dress and trailing velvet cloak completed the ideal Cinderella effect. One can only wish that she had not pulled her hair back into an elastic band as part of this costume.

The music and the ballet fitted in with the spirit of the production and possibly saved it from monotony. Cinderella has achieved something rather rare — entertainment which is equally enjoyable for children and adults.

All Mixed Up

If the young lady in the middle appears nervous it is easily explained. She is about to receive on behalf of P & OT a gift from the Pharmacy students at the SAC Christmas tree last month and the present is being concocted right before her horror-stricken eyes. Professional druggists have the decency to retreat to inner sanctums to compound their evil mixtures but these students are fiends.

Bull, Queen'sman Rhodes Winners

Roger Bull, IV UC, has been awarded one of the two annual Rhodes Scholarships for Ontario, announced Mr. A. B. Harvey, secretary of the Ontario selection committee. The other winner is Ian Stewart of Queen's University.

Bull, who is in the fourth year of the Modern History course, said that he intends to read Philosophy, Politics, and Economics at Oxford, and will enroll in the final two years of a three-year undergraduate course. The Rhodes Scholarship is of the annual value of 500 pounds (about $1,400) and may be continued for a third year at the option of the trust officials.

Registrar of University College, Prof. McAndrew, said that Bull is an ideal appointment. "Roger has an enormous capacity for national service, and I think that Canadian life will be greatly enriched from his experiences." Bull is the twentieth Rhodes scholar from University College.

Bull, a native of Ottawa, and a graduate of Lisgar Collegiate there, has had a varied list of activities while he has been at the University. He has been particularly active in the affairs of the UC Lit, and is the president of that body this year. Bull has also been a member of the Hart House Debates Committee for the past three years, and is its secretary this year. He is the first vice-president of both the Historical Club and the UC Players Guild, and has taken part in many of the productions of the latter body.

Bull is a member of the RCAF contingent with the rank of Pilot Officer, and has spent the past three summers training as a navigator. He has also worked for The Varsity. Bull stood first in his course last year, a fact which he attributes "more to luck than to genius."

He has played interfaculty basketball and was a member of the championship intercollegiate soccer team two years ago. He combined with Dave Gauthier, IV UC, to win the UC Robinette debates in 1952. Bull has no definite plans for the future, but plans to enter the Department of External Affairs at Ottawa, or instruct at a university.

Ian Stewart, the Rhodes Scholarship winner from Queen's, also plans to study Philosophy, Politics, and Economics during his two years at Oxford. Stewart, a native of Toronto and a graduate of UTS, is a past president of the Queen's Art Society, and is president of the Graduate Society. Last year he was awarded membership in the Queen's Tricolor Society.

The awards were made by the Ontario Rhodes Scholars selection committee, which is composed chiefly of former Rhodes scholars. The four qualities that were stressed by empire-building Cceil Rhodes in his will which established the scholarships were scholarship, athletic ability, character, and leadership. The committee endeavours to select the winners of the awards on this basis.

BULLY FOR ROGER

Applicants for the award must send to the committee three pictures of themselves, a birth certificate, six references, and a 900-word essay on their personal interests and aims. The committee then gives each applicant an oral examination.

At the present time, there are four Rhodes Scholars in the House of Commons, and one of them, Hon. James Sinclair, is in the cabinet. There are over twenty previous holders of the award in the Department of External Affairs.

Smith Asks For Million Dollars Half Of Grant Promised Varsity

The University of Toronto has asked the Toronto board of control for the first half of the two million dollars that city government promised the University in 1949. The board of control, however, said that they would refer the matter to the Toronto metropolitan council.

Mayor Lamport and Controller Saunders agreed that the obligation was one for the metropolitan council. Controller Shannon said the grant must be paid in view of the promise but should be paid by the metropolitan council.

President Sidney Smith in asking for the million said that the university had exhausted all the money in its building fund and needs a million in January or February.

President Smith also said that the second million would be asked for next year. He said, "We of the university are indeed grateful to the city for this generous grant."

In 1949, city council promised to make a grant of two million to the university. It arranged that any surpluses piled up at the end of the city's fiscal year would be placed in a fund for the grant.

Last year, board of control dipped into the surplus fund to provide for a lower tax rate in 1953. Mayor Lamport and President Smith exchanged letters in which the mayor promised the grant would be paid when the university asked for it.

The metropolitan council now has no power to make grants, but the province has been asked to amend legislation to permit payments of money to organizations serving the whole area.

The Grant for two million, the largest ever proposed by the city council for an outside organization, was hurried through the board of control and the city council in February of 1949.

Mayor Hiram McCallum was visited by a delegation from the university, composed of the late George McCullagh, the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, and President Sidney Smith, of the University of Toronto.

The mayor called the other members of the board into hurried consultation with the delegation and after they left one of the board members moved adoption of the two million dollar grant. Four days later city council, with only two hours advance notice of the board of control recommendation, endorsed the grant, which was to come from city surpluses, since used up, with only two members urging any further study of the immense grant.

Successful India Sale Tops Last Year Total

This year's Indian Sale, held December 14, 15 and 16 in Hart House, was very successful, announced publicity director Ron Gould yesterday. The gross receipts were approximately $5,100, topping last year's gross by $500.

"Despite all our fears," said Gould, "the sale turned out to be a great success, even though it took place at what was considered to be a bad time of the year." He pointed out that they would have reached $6,000 if it weren't for the poor weather on Monday, the first day of the sale.

On the national scene, the Treasure Van made just over $47,000 according to a report released by WUSC. This was nearly $6,000 more than last year. The money will be used to further the World University Service's international program.

The sale travelled from coast to coast with two voluntary workers, Mrs. E. Mulvaney and Mr J. Walker. WUSC National Secretary, Mr. Graeme Ferguson, visited all the universities and colleges in advance of the sale and prepared for its arrival.

The sale worked with the cooperation of the various local committees. Ian Scott, III St. Mike's was in charge of the sale at Toronto.

Interfaculty Debaters Gone Pogo

Interfaculty debating will begin tonight at 8:00 p.m. when St. Hilda's will debate at Vic, and Nursing at Loretta. These debates are the first of a series of competitions sponsored by the University of Toronto Debating Union, that will involve 16 faculties, schools, and colleges.

The 16 participants have been divided into four groups of four each. The winners of each group will debate for the championship of the University. The debates will be parliamentary in form, and will be judged on a formal basis.

The resolution to be debated tonight is "Resolved that Pogo is a benefit to our culture."

The chairman of the UTDU, Karl Berger, III UC, said that he hopes these debates will develop inter-collegiate material, and foster an interest in debating.

These debates are in no way connected with the debating trials held before Christmas to choose members of the University teams that will be touring the US and Eastern Canada. They are designed to stimulate interest in debating and also provide training for those interested in any future debates trials. The debates are open to the public.

RICHARD OF BORDEAUX

At The Crest

The permanent repertory company which Donald and Murray Davis hope to establish at the Crest Theatre here was given a hopeful start by its first presentation. Gordon Daviot's Richard of Bordeaux. Although this play is not in itself particularly satisfactory it lends itself to spectacular treatment and individual excellence of performance. The council scene was too dull and, incidentally, too long; the device of having one curtain after another rise on a single figure, dramatically posed, and fall on Richard drooping his head in Ann's lap became a little monotonous although each was effectively successful in itself. However the thoroughly competent handling and professional standard persuaded one to overlook these drawbacks.

Hutchinson Scott's costumes and stage settings were magnificently original without once distracting attention from the performers or the action. The simple background of dark pillars and light draperies was equally effective as draughty castle and gloomy prison; the costumes, keyed in colour and detail to the characters of their wearers, were useful as an identification as well as brightening the stage. The soft front of the house lighting by which the troublesome upper regions were reduced to shadow solved the problem of the small confining proscenium arch.

The most appealing performance of the evening was Barbara Chilcott's Ann of Bohemia, the queen of Richard the second, sprightly and tender and so entrancingly gay that the greatest sympathy we felt for Richard was at his loss of her. Richard himself, played by Murray Davis, was a very humanly interesting young man possessed of real majesty when he remembered his position; his airy playfulness was delightful although sometimes inexplicable in the light of the situation. Mr. Davis never gave the king the stature of a great and overbearing man—this slightness made him more likeable but less impressive.

George McCowan's Robert was lightly and deftly played; although the characterization lacked depth it was a pleasant one. The malignant Bishop of Canterbury, snakelike in his close-fitted hood, was cleverly done by Eric House who appeared in two other parts as well—once as Michael de la Pone, who at times could scarcely be distinguished from Sir Simon Burley, presumably because they both were garbed in grey and were addressed by the king as dear old friend.

Darby, the unlawful successor to the throne, was almost likeable in Patrick MacNee's performance for his gruff lack of subtlety and remarkable good sense; his wife Mary was played with admirably sour prudery by Norma Renault. Ian Fellows in a brief appearance as the Duke of York gave a charming character portrayal. Consistent throughout the whole cast was the high standard of performance—every member played his part sincerely and well. Assuming that succeeding productions by the Davis brothers prove to be equally impressive Toronto may rest assured that it has acquired a thoroughly satisfactory company of truly professional calibre.

CANADIAN STUDENT EDIT

In Support Of Editors In Georgia

A resolution affirming its faith in the principle of the free press was passed unanimously by the Canadian University Press. It supported the editors of the Red and Black, the undergraduate paper of the University of Georgia.

The Red and Black was recently threatened with withdrawal of State funs, because it attacked racial discrimination.

The resolution, which was proposed by The Varsity, stated that:

Whereas the Canadian University Press has consistently been a champion of the freedom of the press, and,

Whereas the freedom of the press has been threatened recently at the University of Georgia where the Board of Regents tried to withhold financial support from the student paper unless it changed its editorial policy,

Be it resolved that this conference of CUP express its support to the student editors at the University of Georgia in their stand against suppression of free editorial opinion.

Committee Reporting

During the second day of the conference, all delegations broke up and each paper was represented on committees set up to study the mutual problems of Canadian University editors. Delegates from The Manitoban, The Queen's Journal, The Silhouette, The Western Gazette, The McGill Daily, and Le Carabin, are shown here in the Editorial Policy Committee.

La Delegation Francaise

There are three French language papers in the Canadian University Press, which were represented by nine delegates. Here, left to right are Le Quartier Latin, La Rotonde and Le Carabin. A translator was provided for many of the sessions, as an impartial go-between for English and French-speaking delegates. Jean Cote, standing, is speaking for Le Carabin, which at the banquet was awarded both the Bracken Trophy and Le Droit Trophy.

Criticize Us Constructively NFCUS Asks

Besides presenting a bottle of Tequila to the delegates of the Canadian University Press, the president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, Toni Enriquez asked the editors to "continue criticizing NFCUS constructively for what is our fault, but pat us on the back for the good we do."

He asked the papers to present the information given to them by NFCUS with their comments, and to try to stimulate interest in NFCUS. "But don't try to arouse interest by presenting us as useless, and ask why not secede. That is too harsh," he said.

"Students believe almost everything in the papers," he said. "If you tell them we are no good, they will beileve it."

Louis Perinbam, the travelling secretary of World University Service said, as a newcomer, he was impressed by Canadian undergraduate newspapers. He asked them to exchange with papers of his native country, India.

He asked CUP to cooperate with WUS, and try to focus student attention on the poverty of students in other countries.

Urge Dupless Stand On Uni

By TOM VIRANY

Premier Duplessis of Quebec was urged by The Canadian University Press Conference to reconsider his stand against letting Universities accept federal grants. The vote was carried against the opposition of the French language and some English member newspapers. The motion was recommended by the editorial committee.

Under the present policy of the Duplessis government Universities in Quebec can not accept subsidies from the federal government. McGill, Laval and many of the other universities voiced opposition to this policy; and said that the policy puts them in a financially precarious position.

McGill University lost approximately $600,000 in one year due to this policy.

The McGill Daily, which originally supported the motion changed its vote to abstention. John Fraser, one of the editors of the Daily explained that he was asked by his Principal, Dr. Cyril James not to take a stand in public against Duplessis's policy without first consulting him.

Gilles Lavigne, the editor of Le Carabin of Laval University said although he has written at least five editorials condemning Duplessis he did not feel he needed instructions from CUP. He said he could decide matters of policy for himself quite adequately. He felt the resolutions instructing him were insulting and ridiculous.

Shun Journalists

Stick To

"Don't waste your time on your fellow-journalists, devote it to dogs, bums, hobos and clergymen," Gregory Clark, well-known columnist and guest speaker, told Canadian University Press delegates at the CUP banquet.

He advised journalists not to join press clubs, and not to talk about their profession, but to work at it. He said although he and A. W. J. Buckland, the publisher of The Telegram, and also his publisher, have lived across the street for two years, they have never been in each other's homes.

He said he hardly ever spoke to his best friend, but that they were always engaged in a professional feud.

He suggested that jealousy is good in

THE EDWARD KYLIE TRUST AWARD

Applications may be made to the Secretary of the Edward Kylie Trust on or before January 21st, 1954, by candidates for the Edward Kylie Trust award for the year 1954-1955. These applications should be made in writing and should give particulars of the qualifications and record of the applicant with a view to the following requirements. The award will be made to a male student who is a British subject, either a graduate or an undergraduate of Arts, preferably in the course of Modern History, at the University of Toronto, to enable him to pursue his studies in Great Britain. The Trustees shall make their award to that candidate who appears from his record at the University to be most likely to occupy a position of leadership and influence in the Community.

The sum available is Eight Hundred Dollars ($800.00) for the year 1954-1955 and the Trustees may renew the award for a second year if they are satisfied with the first year's record.

The Trustees, upon receiving applications, will arrange for the examination of the candidates and if the Trustees are not satisfied as to the suitability of any of the candidates they will have the right to withhold the award.

Lavigne and the editors of Le Quartier Latin and La Rotonde and some English language papers also voted against all the other resolutions brought to the conference by the Editorials Committee for this reason.

All member papers were urged by the CUP to take an editorial stand against racial discrimination in all campus organizations, including the Greek letter societies, and urge these societies on Canadian campi to present a strong, united anti-discrimination front at their international conferences.

This resolution was originally proposed by the western papers who took part in a regional CUP conference last fall. They reported that their resolution was directed particularly at fraternities, who, they said were frequently guilty of racial discrimination, and that such discrimination is often demanded by their own society constitutions.

The Queen's Journal, which suggested it, was mandated to collect information on the entrance standards in their universities from member papers across Canada, and to prepare a report which may be used by the end of March. The resolution as originally proposed by the Journal was to "Raise the entrance standards in Canadian Universities" but was defeated by the plenary session. The resolution as amended was passed unanimously.

Member papers were urged to undertake a concerted and continuous campaign to rouse student interest in favor of the Canada Council and the National Scholarship Scheme as proposed by the Massey Commission.

the newspaper game. "It is a game, but it's well worth it," he said.

"Kill your prejudices and your antipathies, force yourself to be interested in the things you are not interested in," he said, "to become a journalist and not a pamphleteer."

All the people he new came up the easy way, "they floated up." He himself got into the newspaper game through a side door, he said. His father was an editor.

"If you know a side door, take it," he advised delegates. "because the door leading to journalism is the narrowest door to any profession."

Clark was finally invited to the house of his publisher; Buckland told him that he was welcome on the day Toronto's third subway would be opened.

Administration Reads Too Bissell Reminds Delegates

"University administrators should look upon reading of their undergraduate newspapers if not always as a labor of love, at least as necessary labor", Vice President C. T. Bissell told the Canadian University Press conference in his opening address.

The papers should cherish their role as critics and official needlers, he said. This role is more important in a university paper than in a city daily, if for no other reason, than because we pride ourselves on turning out critical students who do not take everything for granted, he added.

He reminded editors that their voice was not really the voice of the undergraduates, that they represented only a small group who happen to be reasonably articulate and literate and are willing to give vast amounts of time.

You should be restless in your search for information, to be passionately in love with the facts, and to resist the temptation to simplify complicated problems and to add to the public's apparently insatiable appetite for cheap and emotional and intellectual stimuli.

He said that despite the wave of publicity Canada had in the US recently, she is still unknown. Recently, Dr. Bissell was asked at one of the American Universities, "not more than an overnight journey distant from this city, whether McGill University was in Toronto." He suggested that university newspapers initiate a missionary enterprise south of the border.

Mme. St. Hilaire, a Quebec journalist was the French language speaker at the conference. She felt that the French and English language papers should exchange more information, and should print some of it in the original language.

She is now studying magazine writing at the University of Toronto, while she is sending her reports back about Toronto to her paper, La Patrie, of Montreal.

"Ne nous chicanons plus. Si vous venez a Quebec, nous vous montrerons les champs de bataille qui ne sont plus une place de bataille," she added.

In English it means: let's not argue any longer. If you come to Quebec, we will show you the plains of Abraham, which are no longer battlefields.

Rap Time And Life As Biased

The publishers of Time and Life magazines were condemned by a majority vote of the Canadian University Press delegates.

The motion, presented by the Editor of the McMaster University Silhouette, Charles Williams condemned Time Inc. for "biased, incomplete, non-factual reporting."

He said that since Time and Life magazines were striving to increase their sales among students, the matter was of vital interest to the Canadian University Press.

The motion was passed by the conference but later the McGill Daily moved that it be reconsidered, because of the dangers involved in such a motion, John Fraser, the Daily's Editor felt the motion might constitute legal grounds for a libel suit against CUP.

Williams said he had definite proof and that CUP would not lose the libel suit. A majority of the delegates felt the motion was not dangerous, and it was passed again.

Carabin, Gazette Awarded Trophies

Le Carabin, the graduate paper of Laval University had a field day on the last day of the Canadian University Press Conference.

They won two trophies, the Bracken for editorial excellence and Le Droit, awarded for general proficiency for French language university papers.

It was the first time in the history of the Canadian University Press than any paper won both trophies it was competing for.

The annual CUP conference was held at Hart House from the 28 to the 30 December, 1953. More than a hundred delegates attended from coast to coast.

The Western Gazette also broke a record. It kept the Southam trophy awarded for general excellence to the best English language paper to win it for the fourth time in five years.

In accordance with the newly amended constitution of CUP, the Gazette will no longer be eligible for the Southam trophy. From now on, only papers publishing at least twice a week are eligible. Until now, papers with a circulation of 3,000 or over were eligible to compete for the Southam. The Gazette has a circulation over 3,000, but publishes now once a week only.

As Joe Scanlon, the sports editor of the Carleton put it:

Guttman's the Southam—
And for the last time,
Unless The Gazette
Starts to print double time.

Art Guttman is the Editor-in-Chief of the Gazette.

As another precedent, Le Quartier Latin of the University of Montreal was elected executive paper. It is the first time that a French language newspaper has had this position.

The Jacques Bureau trophy, for general excellence under 3000-circulation went to The Sheaf, of the University of Saskatchewan.

The judges in this year's contest commented favorably on the papers they received.

The Varsity, which placed second in its category, according to one of the judges, was said to have excellent make-up, crisp and complete news stories, well written, well edited and well headed. He said it had interesting treatment of book reviews, music criticisms. The three issues picked were definitely outstanding, the report said.

Stuart Keate, the editor of the Victoria Times was elected Honorary President of CUP. The last Honorary President was A. W. J. Buckland, the Editor-in-Chief of the Telegram.

Speaking Of Sport

By MOISHE REITER

Having enjoyed a pleasant holiday of rest and quiet, broken only by the odd party every night, we are back on The Varsity beat, refreshed and ready to report the glorious achievements of Blue athletes to their admiring fans on campus. Traditionally, the New Year is the time for us to rip all the pages of the old year from the Blue Book of Varsity Sport and to start fresh. There are, however, some happenings of the Fall term that we missed and should mention before getting on with the new stuff.

Varsity's Water Poloists ended the year with a flourish as they completed their defeat of the McGill team in the second game of a home and home series for the championship, played at Montreal. The home pool made little difference to the McGillians and the Blues kept the Herschorn Cup safe at home in the Hart House trophy case for another year.

Pharmacy's box lacrosse players defended their championship in the second division of the Intramural League and, for the second time running, sit the throne as the best in their league. So far as we know they have made no moves to challenge the winners in Division I, the UC Redmen, so the lacrosse season can be considered done.

Intramural Basketball has begun and the Intercollegiate scouts are around looking for future greats. The League should be better than last season's with the Jr. Skule, Premeds, Meds Sr. and possibly Jr. UC looking like the top prospects for the Sifton Cup. Jr. Skule, with Ed Skrzypek, Bill Karpinski and Hank Galka among their probable lineup, will be a good squad to watch.

Newman Scores Two Goals In Vic Win Over Crumpeters St. Mike's B, Emmanuel Win

By JOHN WILSON

Holding off the opposition's determined second period rally, Junior Vic registered a 4-3 win over the hapless Trinity A's in the Arena on Tuesday. The victory left the Vicsters in fourth place in Group II, three points ahead of the winless Trinity crew.

Sparked by the two-goal effor of Paul Newman, the Scarlet and Gold were never headed in the game which started very shabbily, showing the effects of the two-week lay-off. Second period penalties helped to dampen the Trinity ardour, although Vic were unable to score during the four times they had the advantage in manpower.

Ken Ware and Hugh Sampson gave the Vic team a 2-0 lead with goals in the early part of the first period at 2:05 and 8:25. The Red and Black began to show some organization late in the frame and Bill Lovering scored at 13:50, followed closely by Pete Russell's tally at 14:30 to tie it up. Newman notched his first goal with a fraction of a second left to give the Vicsters a 3-2 edge at the end of the first stanza.

Play tightened up in the second, but the Trinity club was hampered by several penalties leaving themselves on the defensive for the better part of the period. At 14:50, Newman collected his second goal of the game, grabbing a loose puck just inside the Trinity blueline to beat John Goodwin with a clean shot.

A last-minute drive, starting with Pete Gordon's goal at 19:08, fell short as Arena time ran out with Vic still ahead 4-3.

Norm Alban played his usual good game at the Scarlet and Gold blueline, while forwards Hugh Sampson and Paul Newman bolstered the shorthanded nine-man Vic crew. Bill Lovering, Pete Russell and Crick Ketchum stood out for Trinity, along with Eric Jackman on defence. Goodwin in the Red and Black net had plenty of work while making more than a few close saves.

A hat trick by Rodden led the St. Mike's B's to a one sided 6-0 victory. Mueller scored two, and Lawless one to round it out.

Emmanuel came up with their first win of the season, whipping Forestry B 6-2. Strapp slipped in three, Davies two, and Burns one for the Theologs, while Lindsay and Cunningham scored for Forestry.

Irish Win Basketball Opener

By MARVIN TALSKY

Major league basketball got under way yesterday at Hart House as St. Mike's squared off against the University College hoopsters. The contest was won easily by the men in blue as they downed U.C. 28-19.

St. Mike's led all the way through the game and only twice did the U.C. team come as close as one point away from tying it up. the St. Mike's squad controlled both backboards almost completely despite U.C.'s edge in height.

Tom Ahearn of St. Mike's was the scoring leader of the game as he potted eight points. His teammate. Timmins, was close behind with seven points to his credit. Driscoll with five and Mahoney with four were other high scorers for the Irish. The whole St. Mike's team played a well-organized game and thus deserved the win.

The seemingly disorganized U.C. team could not penetrate the zone defence thrown at them by St. Mike's and they were forced to shoot from about fifteen feet out from the basket.

Top scorer for the Redmen was lanky Mitchell who sank six points for the U.C. cause. Olie Mandryk was the standout on the U.C. team. He scored four points (sec d highest for U.C.) and was the man who sparked the disorganized U.C. team, bringing up the ball and trying to start scoring plays. Obal was third highest for U.C. with three points. Most of U.C.'s points came on foul shots . . . they scored only four field goals.

Hockey Blues Face Uphill Fight

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One generally expects to start a new year with a clean sheet—its is the time to begin anew. However, this isn't the case with Varsity's hockey Blues who open the 1954 campaign tomorrow night with 1953's failures to overcome. They dropped three games in a row before Christmas and find themselves buried in the depths of the intercollegiate cellar, eight points out of first place.

While the Blues were losing 14-3 and 7-5 to the University of Montreal Carabins and 3-1 to Laval, the same Carabins were getting away to a flying start in pursuit of their third college championship in a row by grabbing off four consecutive victories.

However, the Blues are only four points behind second-place Laval and since they play the Quebeckers here tomorrow night, could gain a great deal of ground by winning. McGill Redmen are also in the basement with no points but have only played one game.

Coach Jack Kennedy isn't overly concerned by the team's record. "They're playing good hockey. If they play as well all year, they'll have nothing to be ashamed of," he said after yesterday's practice.

After a pair of games with the University of Michigan team — a 6-1 loss on Dec. 11 and a 0-0 tie on Dec. 12—he put the Blues through six solid workouts during the Christmas vacation and feels the team is in good shape.

Kennedy also came up with a few lineup changes. Ken Lawson and Harry Boyd have both recovered from injuries and will return to action tomorrow night. However, Paul Prendergast's hand is still in a cast and Ernie Bodnar is suffering from an infected leg. This hospital report, plus the need to experiment in search of added punch, has induced Kennedy to shuffle his attack almost completely.

Captain Red Stephen centres the first forward line which has Ross Woods and Harry Bowd on the wings. Five of the other six forwards will be rookies, with Ken Lawson the only veteran. He'll be at right wing on a trio with Don Cossar and Johnny Akitt. The third line is all new faces with Tom Riley, a freshman from UTS, making the plays for Bobby Dale, who played for Senior Vic in the fall, and Don Avery.

Agile Jack Ross will be in goal, of course. Coach Kennedy is undecided about the defence but expects to dress five. There have been six at practices this week—Lou Appleby, John Tol[illegible], Colin Ashton, Dan Tovey, Hal Hughes and Bill Moreau—but an eye injury may keep Moreau on the sidelines.

The Laval team has ten regulars back from last year's team, including all-star centre Robert Lafreniere, and promises to be a real threat for intercollegiate honors.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

So Happy New Year is back again and worn-out resolutions are getting more worn than usual. But don't despair, little ladies, there's a big time ahead in the sporting world for all. So what if you did resolve to lose the odd pound? There's no better way to do just that than by a bit of activity and that we have a-plenty.

It just took a few days last fall to get the gals out on the field swinging the old bats and splashing across the OCE pool. It took the power of a great Vic squad and the persistence of coach Ed File to lunge to the top of the interfaculty ranks in November, downing a PHE group, November, downing a PHE group, to win the championship. About a week later, PHE came back to win the swim and chalk up their first interfac success of the season.

Intercollegiate competition got into action with the annual tennis match between five universities. Toronto, for the first time in two years came out on top having lost only one of the twelve events. With a booming entrance into intercol sport, it looked as if Toronto was going to fare pretty well. But the tables started turning as the old home team fell sadly, to the Queen's archers. Members of the PHE staff, feeling a bit discouraged over the age old archery sweep, came forth with the idea of interfaculty competition. Agreed! On the morning of November 2, the first of such meets got under way with PHE gaining top honours. Twelve squads competed and since then archery has been picking up momentum. A good idea, what? And, needless to say, the motive for such madness is partially to get ourselves a strong intercol squad . . . which we need.

Well, we were just beginning to sit back and relax for a while when a notice appeared on the far wall to the effect that interfaculty basketball practises were beginning. By this time, the softball finals were in action and intercollegiate swimming trials had begun. Twenty-two squads entered the B-ball loop this year to make up one of the finest seasons ever.

In a very early column we had had dealt with PHE and interfaculty meets, taking the stand that the physedders were winning too much for the health of competition around here—particularly in basketball. When the finals came around, guess what? Not one, not two but all three teams they entered were over at Hart House to fight for the laurels. Oh yes, there was a Meds team there too. So what happened? Meds won! It just goes to show you —.

The last of intercol meets for '53 was the annual swim meet which saw McGill pull ahead to win by nine points over the Toronto squad. Beryl Lewis of PHE set a new all-time record of 33.8 in the backstroke.

Thus the old year ended with only one intercol win behind since September. Prospects for '54, however are quite bright. Tonight, trials for intercol basketball continue and, though there aren't too many veterans around, from what we've seen in the past few months, there should be enough power to keep the Bronze Baby right where it is. up in the PHE headquarters.

Ladies Iced Girl Hockey Schedule On

When holes begin appearing in the ice over at Varsity Arena, you may be assured that the ladies' hockey schedule has begun. It is an annual series of events that takes place this time of year to provide the greatest entertainment in sports. You can laugh or cheer —it really doesn't matter. The gals like it. No doubt the keepers of the ice over yonder have their doubts about such procedures because the majority of young ladies have chosen to don figure skates with the little picks sharpened up for extra fast takeoffs.

The first of these daily noon-hour events was played today with PHE first year downing (and that ice was sooo cold) Saint Hilda's 2-0. Patricia Pye netted the pair for the winning team.

Senior Meds Top League

Senior Meds yesterday edged their way into first place in Group I with a 2-1 victory over the St. Mike's A's, after both teams were unable to score in the first period.

Goals by Marshall and King gave the Doctors their margin, while Godin potted the lone Double Blue tally.

Both Gerry Young and Benny Walker, playing excellent games in goal, had their hands full keeping the score sheet empty in the first stanza, but were even more overworked in the second, when the play opened up. At 1:10 Marshall beat Young for the first Meds co[illegible] stealing the puck at hi[illegible]line and going in on th[illegible]'s goal unhampered. Girls' Volley Ball Begins Next Week

The volleyball schedule for the girls of the university will get under way next week, under the capable supervision of Judy Strickland, IV U.C.

In the twelve-team league this year, there is an enthusiastic newcomer, the Faculty of Pharmacy; however there is one team less from Vic who has only two teams representing the college. Last year's defending champions, St. Hilda's College, who have dominated the play-offs for the last few years reports the loss of four of their outstanding intercollegiate players, but still promise to be a strong contender for the championship again this year.

This year's intercollegiate volleyball championships will be held at McMaster University on February 19 and 20 where the teams representing Queen's, Western, McMaster, McGill, and Toronto will participate in a two-day tournament. This year's Varsity team is fortunate in getting for a coach Helen Stewart, a Toronto graduate who is at present the successful coach of the Etobicoke volleyball team which remains undefeated in the high school circuit. Queen's.

With only five members of last year's team back, Judy Strickland, Doreen Toland, Helen Saarinen, Helen Bienosz and Grace Robertson, recruits for the team are needed. Anyone who is interested in playing intercollegiate ball is reminded that tryouts are next Tuesday and Thursday at seven at Lilian Massey.

In contrast to last year, there will be two practises a week for the team in an all-out drive to better their second place standing and to defeat last year's champion, Queens.

The prospective volleyball referees who tried their written test before Christmas, are reminded that their practical exam is next week.

There is also an urgent need for coaches for the teams and would anyone interested in easing this shortage contact Judy Strickland at Whitney Hall.

Discusion Of Duplessis At Convention Of CCF

The annual convention of the Co-operative Commonwealth University Federation was held in Montreal on Dec. 28-29. Nine universities across the country were represented: Norman Chalmers, II Law and Allan Millard, II US, were the delegates from the U of T CCF Club.

As well as hearing reports from each university and making organizational plans for the future, the convention passed resolutions expressing the hope that NFOUS would accept an associate membership in IUS, and endorsing WUS. Other resolutions dealt with Duplessis' attitude towards Federal aid to Universities and towards the strikes in Quebec mines.

Ron Heller, III U.C., was elected as a vice-president of the CCUF, while three other top positions were filled by McGill men.

ties, that is. As a result, the little gals have been coming out to practises at such mean hours at 8:00 a.m. Sometimes the odd team gets a four o'clock but the early morning sessions have been more prevalent.

Karsh Presents

ner at 8:25, and the Medsmen held the Double Blue off for the remainder of the game.

Young in the St. Mike's goal, and Walker at the other end, were the stars of the afternoon, playing their best games of the season. Bud Doreme helped the Meds defence, and George DeVeber and Chuck MacDougall led most of the Doctors' rushes. Kostyck played defence, while Godin and Fiaschetti, as usual, sparked the St. Mike's attack.

The Red Tinge

Where Will It End

American Senators McCarran and Jenner were in Canada last week to seek out new information for their Communist-hunting.

The Rogers-Boultbee case has done nothing to strengthen Canadian-American relations. It has only pointed up the blind hysteria that has been and is gripping the American government in its frantic search for a very elusive menace. The menace has not even been defined.

It is unfortunate that the word "progressive" carries with it certain connotations of a political nature. We only hope that the Communists have not monopolized the word. It would be a sorry state if progress became detestable and if use of the word "progressive" made one an ideological suspect. But so it is.

If there are red-faced officials in Florida and Washington, then they deserve to be embarrassed. Their actions have been inexcusable, yet they have not taken the trouble to apologize. They appear to be imitating officials of countries that rest on the other side of the political fence.

Roland Michener has mentioned the serious consequences which might fall on Canadian-American travel as a result of this incident. The tensions holding the United States today are finding their way into every individual who some day hopes to travel south.

We consider it fortunate that Rogers and Boultbee were members of a political party that could exert the pressures it did to clear their names. But what about those individuals who have no political connections or pull? What has the Department of External Affairs done about them? Are they any less susceptible to the smear?

The Government has done relatively nothing to stop this reputation-damaging campaign initiated by the US witch-hunters. External Affairs Minister Pearson recently was caught up in the smear. But the big question is: why hasn't anything been done about it?

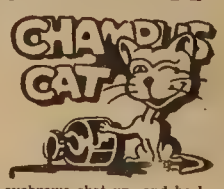
Perhaps our own immigration department could do something more about detaining carriers of the big smear from getting their claws into Canada. McCarran and Jenner in Montreal are only spearheading the spread of hysteria northward.

Time was when the forty-ninth parallel was really an unguarded border. Border officials merely checked Canadian travellers for their proper credentials. Now they are called upon to exercise further powers by being qualified to detect subversives at a glance or by the sound of a name. Surely the excuse of similar names is very threadbare when used in a connection which involves such serious charges.

If it has been the unguarded border in the past, it certainly is not now.

Form Your Own Opinion

The Ryersonian, newspaper published by journalism students of the Ryerson Institute of Technology, issued a Christmas edition last month that was an almost perfect duplicate of a copy of Time magazine. It is to be fervently hoped that this emulation represents neither the result nor the trend of journalism studies pursued at the Gould St. institution.



Delegates to the recent conference of the Canadian University Press passed a resolution censuring the publishers of Time for their approach to news reporting. The Varsity is in vigorous accord with that resolution and hastens to remind the Ryerson journalists that Time's coloring of news coverage, its blatant and continual editorial comment and its oversimplification are not worthy of imitation (sincere flattery) by any newspaperman, much less by a person who aspires to be a newspaperman.

There is much to be said for Time's crisp, concise style, its completeness and its readable format. These things The Ryersonian has copied faithfully. Whether this is a noteworthy achievement is irrelevant. What is more to the point is the prayer that the Ryerson students have confined their desire to imitate Time to the technical side.

The Varsity still believes that it insults the reader's intelligence to form his conclusions and opinions for him.

Cat's Field-day

The Champus Cat's Interview At The Border

(What follows is completely imaginary: I don't even know the fellow's name. Translations are supplide where necessary.)

"Please," I said.

"Ya?" Crack, snap, pop! (Bubble gum —Ed.)

"I would like to enter your country. Would you mind unbarring the gate?"

"Ainchuinahurry?" (Please have patience!) "Take it slow! Y' gotta answer a few questions foist!"

With that he stamped into a sentinel shack and returned, carrying a small table littered with a pile of bulky volumes. He leafed thruogh the first.

"You a C'nadyn, I s'pose?"

"Yes?"

"Ain't Gouzenko?"

"No."

He examined me carefully, and then reverted to his tome.

"Whatchya gonna do here?" (The purpose of your trip?)

" Ithought I would visit New York," I said.

"Noo Yawk? Ya?"

"Yes. I thought I might go to the Planetarium first, and then . . . "

"O.K., O.K.," he waved a silencing hand. In large, black letters. I saw him slowly form the damning word INTELLECTUAL.

"Got a political card?" he flashed.

"Yes. I belong to the Liberal party."

His eyebrows shot up, and he leered.

"No," I blurted hastily, "no . . . they're the Government!"

But the leer didn't vanish—it deepened. "Them guys wut giv Senator Jenner the biz!" he demanded. (Those people who insulted Senator Jenner?) "Uh, well," he grunted, "Guess y' can't help it, if they're the guvimint. Y' din't vote fer 'em, didja?"

"No. Tim Buck was running in my riding."

"Oh, ya — duh Consoivitive leader!"

He attacked the second volume. "Goddubteevee set?" (Do you watch television?)

I nodded.

"Whatcher favurit book?" he bellowed.

"I think it stinks. I only watch CBLT."

He glared, and wrote with great energy. I could hear him muttering, "State corporation . . . socialist!"

"Whatcher favurit book?", he bellowed.

"Well, ummm," — I groped for a safe answer — "Mother Goose?"

"Robin Hood?" he shot back.

"No, no!" I said, "that's in a different collection!"

"Ya, an' whut's yer favurit music?"

"I do like Tchaikowsky . . . ," I said— and the rest of the words froze in my mouth. Now I had done it! His jaw dropped and his eyes bulged. He leaped from his seat. There was only one thing to do. So, before he could jump the fence and come after me, I turned and ran. But he followed me with his shouts, and as the border faded behind me, I could still hear him hollering, "What about Pogo? Ever heard of Sam Carr? D' y' read The Varsity? Do you now, or have you ever . . . ?"

Grendel.

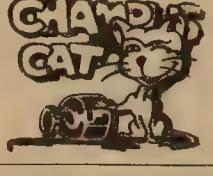
Cat's Custom's Crackdown

My name is Red Togers, boy Communist. The first name is what got me interested. I am the president of the LPPC, a real Red organization. We go in for dynamiting bridges down in the States and other stuff like that.

I took a holiday in Nassau once with another guy, but he got stopped as he came back into the US (note the resemblance to USSR). He was only coming back to plant an atom bomb in the Red House.

It seems that someone called the Feds and told them that he was a Conservative and I was a Communist. They let me go through and stopped my friend. Those lads are really on the ball.

As I passed through customs, (and I remember it well) with a Varsity wrapped around a Russian-made MIG clutched in my grubby little fist and a sneer on my lips a nice little man showed me out to the free air of the Unlighted Seats. Alas, my friend was betrayed, for he wore a Drew button on his lapel.



In the men's washroom, I signed my name to a paper that I couldn't read. It was toilet paper.

Outside, I lounged against a NO PARKING sign. A policeman came along, looked me over suspiciously and after fastening a parking ticket on the windshield of my MIG he left.

I was famous. My case hit the headlines and my friend hit the customs officer. Then they released him.

I'm home now. The case of the parking ticket was dropped because of another case which I gave to the judge. That'll teach them to give parking tickets to my MIG.

Blossom.

Cat's New Year Honour List

In honour of the New Year, the Cat is making the following Honour Awards to last fall's standouts at the University of Toronto:

To the House Committee of Hart House, a gilt-edged lifetime membership.

To Professor Ted Carpenter, a spade to call a spade.

To President Smith, a character.

To the chief accountant, something to account.

To Padre Rowe, Truth, Beauty, and a 20-game season.

To Paul Bacon, News Editorship of the Daily Worker.

To Scott Symons, 30 cents this year.

To Victoria College, bus windows.

To St. Michael's College, an Architect.

To John Stalker, a smile holder.

To the Universiyt of British Columbia, student subscriptions to the Chicago Tribune.

To Toni Enriquez, horseshoes.

To Garth McDowell, a graduate activity.

To Ted Rogers, headlines.

To the administration, a million dollars from the city.

To Bob Masterson, a quarterback.

To the U.S. Immigration Department, a swinging door.

To the Board of Stewards, Hart House, a lady's washroom.

To the Communications Seminar, a pay phone and a nickel.

To the Blue and White Society, a plug.

And to the Cat, maybe a new lease on life.

Paws Down For Pogo

Victoria upheld the motion: "resolved that Pogo is a benefit to our culture" against St. Hilda's last night in the Alumnae Hall. The speaker presiding in the tricorne is Dennis Lane. Standing is Liz Preston, first speaker for the affirmative. The other speaker for the government was Liz Beattie and Margarent Munnoch and Wendy Michener spoke against the motion.

Decide Pogo A Hero In Vic-St. H Trials

Victoria College went Pogo last night by a narrow margin in the University of Toronto Debating Union trials. There was no vote taken by the house, but the three judges awarded the debate to the Victoria team, Elizabeth Preston, III Vic, and Elizabeth Beattie, III Vic, over a St. Hilda's College team.

The topic of the debate was, resolved that Pogo is a benefit to our culture, which was also upheld at the same time in St. Joseph's College.

Pogo is a hero, said Liz Preston, the first speaker for the government, "in the form of a lovable little possum, with a morning smile." He con provoke laughter, which is what our culture needs, she added.

He is not an ordinary comic strip character: he has carefully thought-out diction; he is well rounded out as all figures in a work of literary art, said Preston.

"We should petition the President of this Uninversity," she said, "to have Pogo included in the Remedial English course.

"A comic strip is designed to combine literacy with democracy," said Marg Munnoch, II Trinity, the first speaker for the opposition.

She said that the masses became literate, as a result of which we now have Pogo.

It takes only a minimum effort to read Pogo, said Marg Munnoch, and added that it discouraged children from reading literary works.

"Comics are not a medium which can be considered beneficial to Canadian culture," she said. Pogo deals chiefly with contemporary American politics and will be forgotten, she said.

"Our culture in Canada is bilingual," she said, "but I challenge the government to translate Pogo into French."

Pogo is not a common comic strip, said Liz Beattie, "Pogo is a satire."

She said that Pogo could be appreciated superficially by the children, but that we, who are older, and have the education can appreciate its literary depths.

She did not think that Pogo would be forgotten. She said that Gulliver's Travels, still read and enjoyed, was based on the history of an era, which we have forgotten since. "The satirical gun of Kelly is only a waterpistol," she said.

"Pogo is a threat to our English language with an appallingly small vocabulary, and an appalling grammar," said Wendy Michener, II Trinity, the second speaker for the opposition.

"Would any of us want our children to come home and say 'I'll quick broom up the floor' or to talk in an incoherent jargon of 'Smeero, fwonk, hee, hoo, and oomp'?"

"We should not let our children learn this jargon before they have a chance to learn literature," she said.

Hockey - Happy Vicsters Hock Win

By BOB BROWN

A strong Victoria College Union team humbled a highly-touted UC Lit Association and Women's Undergrad Association crew by a whopping 5-4 score in a tight, hard-fought, thrilling, action-packed, dramatically poor excuse for a hockey game.

This dismal affair took place in Varsity Arena last Wednesday at the unearthly hour of 9.00 a.m. to a standing room only crowd. (Standing room only — that means neither of the two spectators was sitting down.)

Despite the loss, the UC 'Deadline' of 'Rambling Ron' McGill, 'Jolting Jean' Martin, and 'Mangler Mary' Gill turned in a superb performance. If they had only known how to skate, they would have been even more devastating.

Other highly-skilled players for the Redmen (oops! No subversive tendencies implied) included 'Boom - boom' Bull (otherwise known as Rhodes Roger), 'Mauling Moritz' Smith, the red-hot secretary of the Lit, and 'Galloping Dave' Gauthier. Gauthier played a particularly outstanding (note — that's outstanding — not standing up) game as puck-stopper. (Translation: goalie.)

Ken Cork, the Vic net-minder, also turned in a stellar performance. Cork displayed fine sportsmanship as he complimented his opponent in the UC goal, Gauthier, after the game. "Galloping Gauthier did very well as goalie. He stopped two pucks, but when three pucks came at him at once . . . well, it was just a little too much."

During the intermission between periods, a skating exhibition was given by the two goalies. Their compulsory figures were flawless, but the free skating lacked the fine edge of a superior performance — mainly because neither goalie was wearing skates.

The referees were carefully chosen on the basis of partiality and lack of knownledge of the game. The UC referee, known only as Myopic Heather, had evidently lost her glasses before the sports clash. She could see neither the clock nor the offsides. However both teams in this ice-fixture played strictly according to the ruleh, and neither put any more than nine men (excluding the goalie) on the glazed surface at one time.

The only penalty of the game was handed out to Earl Berger of UC for Holding and Roughing. Mary Lou Farmer of Vic had bumped into Berger, and temptation evidently overcame the otherwise urbane gentleman from UC.

With their flashing silver blades (translation-skates) and the occasional swirling skirt, (that needs no translation), the two teams cut a fine figure on the ice. As a matter of fact, that's where most of the figures were — on the ice! King Clancy and Hay Day were both seen sneaking in and rusing out, and rumor has it that several of the more prominent female stars were signed to a C. Form.

The feature ended in an all-out brawl with thirty players swarming onto the ice. However, all agreed that the event had been a howling success, even though there were so many ringers in the game that the arena looked like it was full of horseshoes.

UC has scheduled a return match in an attempt to obtain revenge for their defeat. A basketball game and party have been arranged between the VCU and the UC Lit and WUA. The party will immediately precede the game.

US Author Addresses Foundation

Author and professor Dr. Ludwig Lewisohn of Brandeis University will speak under the auspices of the Hillel Foundation on "The Jewish Case at the Bar of History", on Tuesday, January 12 at 8.30 p.m. The meeting will be held at the Y.M. and Y.W.H.A., 750 Spadina Ave.

Distinguished for his grasp of Jewish and Western cultures, Dr. Lewisohn's works have been translated into fifteen languages and include such books as "Up Stream", "The Island Within" and the "Last Days of Shylock." A former professor at the universities of Wisconsin and Ohio State, he has edited "The Nation" and has contributed to many papers and periodicals

Two Torontonians To Study At European Summer School

There's a scholarship being offered—and in fact a trip to Europe. Two students from the University of Toronto will be chosen to take part in the World University Service 1954 program. This program means participation in one of five Study Tours; then in a two-week seminar at the British International Summer University.

The emphasis in this year's program is on the study tours. Students will visit either Scandinavia, Yugoslavia, Germany, France, or West Africa. At least one week will be spent in a university in the particular country. There students will attempt to gain not only some idea of the national student life, but also the ideas of these students concerning international events. As well they should gain some idea of the work of international organizations such as the World Health Service.

After the study tours have been completed, the two-week seminar in England will take place. "Tensions in our Time" will be considered during the first week; "The Lesson of Africa" will be discussed in the second. The experiences of the students in the previous tours are expected to be the foundations for the discussions.

Twenty-seven students will be chosen from Canada to participate in the programme. However, many more countries will also be involved. Last year, nineteen countries were involved.

The students are selected by local WUS committees. Preference is given to senior undergraduates, but ones who will be returning to the University. Academic standing, knowledge of foreign languages, and interest shown in international organizations are important factors in the selection.

The travelling secretary for WUS, Lewis Perinbam, has spent the late fall out west, publicizing the WUS scholarships. He visited the different universities, in an attempt to familiarize students with the plan. Next week he will visit about 15 universities in Eastern Canada, for the same purpose.

Canadian Student Editors May Join Russian Visit

Editors of Canadian University Undergraduate Newspapers may go to Russia, according to a resolution passed by the Canadian University Press Conference.

The resolution, which was passed unanimously called for an investigation by The Western Gazette to have Canadians included, should a group of American student editors undertake a trip to Russia again. Such a group returned from Russia about two months ago.

Blood Campain On Winner Gets Cannon

Red Cross nurses will be busy between January 18 and January 22 at the new School of Nursing, 50 St. George St. The occasion will be the collection of the blood donations made by students in the next two weeks as this campus goes into competition for the Skule Cannon, now being held by Forestry.

The cannon is offered as the prize to the faculty getting the highest percentage of blood donors in the annual campaign. On the intercollegiate scene, the Corpuscle Cup was donated by the Forestry Club of UBC last year.

Registration of donors in all the colleges and faculties will take place this week and next. The closing date is January 15, when the cards will be turned over to the Red Cross for compiling and for organizing appointments.

"In order to make the campaign a success, it is highly necessary for all students to be punctual for their appointments and to hand in their cards to the representatives by January 15," said campaign chairman Helen Blott, V Nursing. "We're trying to arrange PT credits for students who donate to the blood campaign," she added.

Donors will be taken at the Elizabeth St. Red Cross clinic for those who find it impossible to be at the School of Nursing during that week. Coffee or tea will be prepared by the Red Cross and served to the donors.

Nursing Favours Pogo Judges Unanimous Too

Pogo is a benefit to our culture. At least the School of Nursing upholds this view and they decisively won a debate on the subject yesterday evening at St. Joseph's College. The decision of the judges was unaimous.

"Few people ever read editorials," claimed the affirmative. "But Pogo presents criticism in a humorous fashion, and all the world reads Pogo." Therefore, they said, Pogo is one of the greatest influences in the newspaper, and newspapers do much towards shaping culture.

They went on to point out the sharp and pointed satire in Pogo, touching on every problem that affects the individual. "Culture," they stated, "is the social organization of society as a whole — the life of the ordinary individual." Consequently Pogo's satire benefits culture.

The first speaker for the negative, Jean Strazdas, Arts I, admitted that the satire of Pogo was brilliant and topical. "But," she said, "how many understand what they are reading?" What benefit can a satire be that is beyond everyone's comprehension, she asked.

She said that the majority of the reading public were like the spectators of Hans Christian Andersen's tale. "The Emperer's New Clothes". They did not want to admit their ignorance; hence they said they agreed with all they read, without in the least understanding it.

The second speaker for the negative also admitted that Pogo's satire was excellent, and perhaps of great benefit for American culture. "But Canadian students in a Canadian university discussing Canadian culture cannot accept an American creation written for American as being beneficial to our culture," she said. One would be unpatriotic and disloyal to uphold such a belief.

In their rebuttal, the affirmative pointed out that to narrow culture to a nationalistic level was against the very essence of culture.

Vic At-Home Less Formal -Trial Basis

By an almost unanimous decision, a special meeting of the VCU yesterday reversed its previous decision to have the Vic At-Home an entirely formal affair. The dance, to be held on February 10 at Casa Loma, has been traditionally formal.

The decision, which was proposed by the social directorate, was due to the fact that the Vic Informal, held recently, lost 100 dollars. Mary Lou Farmer and Jack Ground, Vic's social directors felt that they couldn't afford such a loss at the next affair.

At the meeting Miss Farmer said, "If you don't speculate, you can't accumulate so let's give it a try for this year at least."

The dance will now be held as a "dress optional" affair, on a trial basis for this year.

Seek Paris Conference About I U S Associates But Get No Reply Yet

A roundtable conference between the International Union of Students (IUS) and the National Federation of Canadian University Students may not materialize if the IUS continues its silence. The invitation for the conference, extended by NFCUS president, Tony Enriquez, last October, suggested that a meeting be held in Paris sometime this summer to investigate the possibility of "associate membership" in IUS.

The NFCUS executive was mondated at the Montreal national conference this fall to look into a possible basis "for qualified relationship" with the Communist-dominated international union. Enriquez said last week that his action was a result of this mandate.

"We are going to investigate as thoroughly as possible their proposal for associate membership," Enriquez said. "We must take the initiative and test their good faith."

The first full-time NFCUS president declared that NFCUS would be demanding a system of proper democratic representation in the international student organization. He said that in the past "splinter groups" had been posing as the student representatives of many countries.

He deplored this and said that no small Communist group in Canada could properly speak for the 41,000 student in NFCUS.

"The IUS is saying we are the ones who are building an Iron Curtain by refusing outright any of their proposals," Enriquez stated. "But we must find out now whether they are simply trying to catch flies with honey."

NFCUS should approach the IUS with a number of questions which could offer a compromising basis for association, Enriquez added. "If it is a propaganda technique then we will show them up."

The NFCUS head said that IUS was an important organization since it represented four million students. However, they have distorted Canadian views, he said, and these must be corrected before NFCUS can join.

Enriquez said he had heard nothing of reports that the British National Union of Students (BNUS) had already accepted associate membership in IUS. He added that more information would be learned at the current Co-Ordinating Secretariat meeting in Istanbul, Turkey. NFCUS is sending five delegates to the Istanbul meet of western national student unions.

An editorial in the World Student News official publication of IUS, commented recently: "By accepting the amendment to the Constitution which introduced a category of associate membership the Third World Student Congress has shown that it recognizes the necessity for flexibility in its categories of membership."

It added that the amendment, which calls on the organization concerned to determine its obligations and rights in agreement with the IUS Executive, "obviously permits of the maximum flexibility and it is now up to the students of the organization concerned to put forward their proposals to the IUS where they can be amicably discussed."

The WSN editorial claimed that the whole point of associate membership made possible as many forms of agreement as there were differing cases, and that "despite differences of national background and political and religious beliefs students have many fundamental interests in common."

The invitation by Enriquez has not been answered to date by IUS. Another may be sent later, the NFCUS president said before he left for Turkey, but in the meantime the next move is with IUS.

As is the custom of Varsity types, come the Christmas holidays, this group are hard at work in the post office tending to our mail. In the best tradition of the pony express, they are making certain that "the mail must go through." Their efficiency and diligence were in great part responsible for the speedy delivery and handling of the heavy flow of our holiday mail.

Oneschuk Stars Again But Now As Film Actor

Steve Oneschuk doesn't confine stardom to the rugby field, but is also the male lead in a colour film now being made by Chetwynd Films Limited.

Mr. A. R. T. Chewynd describes the film as "the story of the average man and what he goes through, coming to a big university." "I chose Steve Oneschuk because he is photogenic and I wanted someone who would typify a good solid male citizen," said Chetwynd. "I considered this student would play games and have brains, I hoped. Steve has. Last year he topped his course in PHE." Mr. Chetwynd was on the School of Physical and Health Education Staff for five years. At present he teaches one class to third year PHE students. Oneschuk explains the fact that he was selected by saying, "I guess he saw pictures of the football games, training, and football camp, and knew I didn't do too badly on my marks last year."

"Through These Doors" is the name tentatively assigned the film. It is a reference to the many doors on the campus, some of which are well known, said Chetwynd. He explained that the film begins with the student entering the University as a rather green type. Shots of dormitory life, labs, classrooms, football camp, games, and the other activities of a normal student's life are included, he said. Gwen Ann Miller, II PHE, also takes part in the film. She and Steve are shown walking outside University College and through the Soldier's Tower. The final sequence of the film will be taken at Convocation next spring, said Chetwynd. "It will take about two months for editing after that," he said, "so the film will be released some time next fall. We have been gathering stock for this for two years."

"There has not been, to my knowledge, a picture made of Canadian University life as yet," said Chetwynd. "No one has purposely set out to show the story of a particular University. If it is done well, it indirectly sells college life. I think it is more and more important for people to have college life these days."

"Through These Doors" will be a documentary film 17 to 20 minutes in length. All the narrative is dubbed. Up to this date it has no sponsor. "But if anyone wants to sponsor this, I am willing to talk business," said Chetwynd.
